TO THE

RIGHT HONOURABLE

HENRY Earl BATHURST.

MY LORD,

IT was your Lordſhip's Noble Father ſuggeſting the Expediency of Reviſing Sir ROBERT ATKYNS's GLOUCESTERSHIRE, that gave Being to this Publication; and I beg Leave to preſent it to Your Lordſhip, his only ſurviving Son and Succeſſor.

I am not ſo vain, My Lord, as to think it worth your Acceptance, but if its Merit were to be eſtimated by the Greatneſs of the Subject, and the Time and Labour it has coſt me, it might have a better Claim to your Patronage.

Sir ROBERT ATKYNS's Book was well received by the County, and ſhould the preſent Publication be conſidered only as an Improvement upon it, my Ambition will be ſufficiently gratified. Your Opinion, My Lord, will fix its Character, and having your Approbation, there will be Nothing to fear from Men of Judgment and Candor.

I have the Honour to be,

With the utmoſt Deference and Reſpect,

My Lord,

Your Lordſhip's very dutiful and obedient humble Servant,

SAMUEL RUDDER.

PREFACE.

SIR Robert Atkyns's Ancient and Preſent State of Gloſterſhire was publiſhed in the year 1712. The extreme ſcarcity and great price of it encouraged the editor to offer the preſent work under the title of A NEW HISTORY OF GLOUCESTERSHIRE: Soon after his propoſals were given out, another perſon republiſhed ſir Robert's book, without the leaſt addition or improvement. This is a fact very neceſſary to be ſtated, but it wants neither comment nor remark. The editor of the preſent work purſuing his plan, has at length completed it. How far the title he has aſſumed can be ſupported, muſt be left to the deciſion of the public: He does not, however, mean to inſinuate that he has made no uſe of ſir Robert Atkyns's book; on the contrary, he has adopted that gentleman's method of alphabetical arrangement, and has availed himſelf of whatever was uſeful. It is incumbent on him alſo to acknowledge many obligations to other writings and compilations.

The preliminary and introductory part is drawn from various ſources; the monaſtic hiſtory chiefly from Stevens's Supplement to ſir William Dugdale's Monaſticon, and doctor Burnet's Hiſtory of the Reformation. The other introductory matters are ſelected from Camden, Selden, lord Lyttelton, and various writers on the antient ſtate of affairs in Britain.

The Hiſtory of the county, in the three grand diviſions of Coteſwold, Vale, and Foreſt, with the account of its trade, is new; and that part of Domeſday which relates to Glouceſterſhire, and concludes the General Hiſtory, is now firſt printed in the language, and after the contracted manner of the original, ſo far as with common printing types could be effected. For the copy of that record the editor is indebted to Mr. Samuel Dixon, of Norfolk-ſtreet, London, who procured and ſent it to him; but it was afterwards very carefully collated with lord chief juſtice Hale's Fac Simile copy, depoſited in Lincoln's Inn library; and this, it is preſumed, will be thought a curious and valuable acquiſition.

The Hiſtory of the city and dioceſe of Glouceſter, making together 129 pages, is newly drawn up from materials collected by the late reverend Mr. Furney, archdeacon of Surrey, and communicated by Mr. Rogers of Glouceſter.

The parochial Hiſtory follows next in order; and the editor, to be correct, and to note every thing obſervable, has viſited the ſeveral pariſhes, and made diligent enquiries. He has given an account of their antiquities and natural curioſities, and has attempted to give the etymology of the names of places, agreeing with or diſſenting from ſir Robert Atkyns occaſionally.

In this part, it is preſumed, he has ſometimes ſucceeded; but to inveſtigate the meaning of names is no very eaſy province. Great length of time produces changes in circumſtances and things which otherwiſe might give light to the origin and ſignification of names; and vulgar pronunciation and incorrect writing have ſo diſtorted them, that many at preſent have very little reſemblance to their original. The peculiarities of ſituation, produce, and ſoil, were proper circumſtances from whence to derive the appellation of places; but where nature afforded no ſuch obvious aſſiſtance, the name-giver had one grand reſource, which was to add ſome common termination, as don, ton, lege, ley, berg, &c. to the proprietor's name; and as this was very eaſily done, ſo was it commonly practiced. There are certain names, however, which bid defiance to explanation; and if the editor has ſometimes failed in his conjectures, no wonder, eſpecially in a matter of ſo much uncertainty.

In the parochial Hiſtory, he has alſo given a deſcription of the market-towns, and moſt remarkable places, wherein ſir Robert Atkyns was defective; but to deſcend to a minute deſcription of every little village would have been ridiculous, as many of them have nothing more than their names, bearings, and diſtances to diſtinguiſh them; and without differentia in the ſubject, a diſguſting ſameneſs in expreſſion will inevitably recur. Let the brighteſt genius exert his abilities on a few inconſiderable places, and he will feel the truth of this aſſertion. A deſcription of two or three will indifferently ſuit almoſt all the reſt, and he that ſays much of them, reſembles one that talks a great deal about trifles.

The deſcent of the manors generally commences with an abſtract from Domeſday, faithfully, but as literally as poſſible, tranſlated from the original. Herein ſir Robert Atkyns was exceedingly imperfect. He has taken too great liberty with that record, and inſtead of tranſlating the whole paſſages, gives a paraphraſe of part only.

He uſually takes the quantity of land ſpecified in Domeſday to be preciſely what the manor was taxed at; but he was greatly miſtaken, as the record itſelf will prove concerning Alveſton, Newnham, Guiting, and ſeveral other places. Beſides theſe miſtakes, there are many inſtances of his applying the Domeſday accounts to places which they have no relation to, and not a few of their being totally omitted: But it is unneceſſary to enumerate them here, as they are commonly taken notice of in the accounts of thoſe places where the miſtakes have happened.

It was chiefly in the hiſtorical accounts of the ſucceſſive owners of manors and eſtates that ſir Robert Atkyns's book was of ſervice to the editor of this work; for as the ſhort and ſummary manner in which that part is written would not admit of great variety of expreſſion, he has very commonly uſed the words of that author, thinking it unneceſſary, without particular reaſon, to affect a different language. Sir Robert derived his accounts from the eſcheators books, original fines, and other records, to which he had free acceſs; and, excepting a few miſtakes which might happen in tranſcribing, he abſtracts them very faithfully. The editor has not only corrected thoſe miſtakes, ſo far as they have occurred to him, but alſo filled up ſome chaſms from the records, and quoted his authorities in both inſtances; but where no authority is given, the credibility in general reſts on ſir Robert Atkyns. The additions in deſcents ſince ſir Robert's time have been carefully made, and may ſafely be relied on; and genealogical accounts of families, with their arms, ſo far as they could be procured, are ſubjoined to the reſpective eſtates of which ſuch families are owners.

The next head principally concerns the clergy. Eccleſiaſtical benefices are greatly enhanced ſince ſir Robert's time. Here will be found the name of the patron, and the preſent value of every living, as nearly as could be aſcertained, together with all other particulars reſpecting the church, that are either curious or uſeful.

Sir Robert had taken notice of a few monuments in the churches for eminent perſons, but the editor conceiving it would be more ſatisfactory to give the memorials at large, has accordingly placed under a diſtinct head many curious monumental inſcriptions, and the arms found with them, ſo exactly taken, that the particularities, and in ſome inſtances the errors, in the original, are deſignedly preſerved in the copy. Theſe exhibit very uſeful anecdotes of family hiſtory and connections, and making the living acquainted with the dead, not only ſhew us what they were, but often teach us what we ourſelves ought to be. Some hold monumental inſcriptions in light eſtimation, but it was the opinion of the author of the Plain Dealer, 'That 'every ſtone that we look upon in the repoſitory of 'paſt ages is both an entertainment and a monitor.' Perhaps ſome inſcriptions have found admittance on account of the arms which accompany them, whilſt others have little more to recommend them than the particular caſt of the writer, or of the times when they were written. In this department there was no rule for ſelection, and the taſte even of men of judgment is ſo very different, that it is poſſible the editor may be equally cenſured for admitting ſo many, and for not inſerting more. The laws of this country take cognizance of moving or defacing a monumental ſtone in the church, as of an injury done to the family of the deceaſed, and the placing memorials in a book ſeems the moſt effectual ſecurity againſt ſuch injuries. But this part of the work, it is ſaid, is likely to be extended, with a view very different from the preſent publication, by a gentleman whoſe employment in the heralds office enables him to anſwer every expectation. 'Till that gentleman ſhall have finiſhed his undertaking, the editor flatters himſelf that the preſent collection may prove entertaining, and afterwards ſerve as an humble attendant upon it.

Next to the monumental inſcriptions, follows a liſt of benefactions to the poor, and other public charities, continued down to the preſent time, the utility of which is too obvious to need explanation.

Then follows the rate of the public taxes, and the comparative ſtate of population in each pariſh, between the time when ſir Robert Atkyns made his collections, and the preſent. Under this head the editor has given, in a variety of inſtances, the true proportion between the annual baptiſms and burials, and the whole number of inhabitants, which ſhews the degrees of healthineſs in different ſituations.

The alarm lately ſpread of the nation's depopulating, induced the editor to compare the average of births and burials about ſeventy years ago, with thoſe of the preſent time, taking the authority of the regiſters in both inſtances; but there are a few pariſhes of which accounts could not be obtained, ſome of the regiſters being loſt, or imperfectly kept. The reſult of the compariſon is, that the inhabitants of Glouceſterſhire are very conſiderably increaſed during that period, but not uniformly ſo. In ſome places their numbers are more than doubled, whilſt in others they continue nearly the ſame. This is owing to different cauſes: The growth of trade and improvements in agriculture encourage population, whilſt the decline of manufactures produces a contrary effect.

During the before-mentioned period, agriculture has been much improved, particularly in the hill country; and in the clothing and manufacturing parts, trade has equally increaſed: But in the Vale, moſt of thoſe incloſures that in the former part of this period were corn-fields, have ſince been laid down to paſture, which very ſenſibly affected population; and tho' even ſome of of thoſe places where that has happened, are more populous than they were before, yet the alteration has prevented them from increaſing ſo much as they would have done; for dairy and grazing-farms furniſh leſs employment than tillage, and many of the younger people have migrated to the hill-country, or to market-towns.

Another impediment to population has crept in during the latter part of this period, which is, the laying of two or three farms into one. The little pariſh of Aſton Subedge is chiefly in tillage, and ſir Robert Atkyns reports it to have conſiſted of 24 houſes, and 104 inhabitants. By an exact account taken in 1773, the houſholders were 20, and the inhabitants only 63; and upon inquiry into the cauſe of this ſtrange declenſion, it was given for a reaſon, that the pariſh had juſt then been incloſed, and ſeven farms, of which it conſiſted before, being laid into four, the occupiers of three little farms, with their families, had left the place. There are two or three other inſtances in the county, beſide this, of a like decreaſe of inhabitants.

Here ſome notice ſhould be taken of a practice prevailing in ſome places, leſt it become more general, and produce a train of evil conſequences to the community. It is ſaid, that in ſome pariſhes the lords of manors, and the principal landholders, conſidering it as a piece of refined policy, have pulled down their cottage-houſes, or ſuffered them to fall, on purpoſe to drive away the poor miſerable inhabitants, and to prevent the younger ſort from marrying and ſettling in their own pariſhes. Miſerable indeed! to be deſerted and abandoned by thoſe whoſe lands they have cultivated, and whoſe granaries they have filled. Miſerable! to be expelled from the place of their nativity, as unworthy to breathe the air in common with their lords and maſters; who, deaf to the calls of humanity, and inattentive to their own real intereſt, ſeem not to be ſenſible that without the labourer's hand their ample fields would be of no value, and that rents advance from labour and improved cultivation. If the poor are burthenſome, they ſhould be relieved, and not extirpated. The induſtrious part of them are the moſt profitable members of the community; the idle ſhould be reclaimed; but that will never be effected by penal laws, whilſt our towns and villages ſwarm with alehouſes. It is there they ſpend their time and money; there their morals are corrupted; there the ſot, the poacher, the petty thief and highwayman are gradually formed; and to thoſe ſeminaries of vice we chiefly owe the evils complained of among the lower claſs of people. Strike at the root of them; put down the alehouſe, not the cottage, in your village; ſo ſhall you ſoon find the poor more induſtrious, more honeſt, and leſs burthenſome.

This is a matter highly deſerving the attention of the magiſtrate, upon whoſe conduct, in the execution of his office, the morals of the people, and the well-being of the ſtate ſo much depend. It is a vulgar error that the drunkard injures nobody but himſelf: Hundreds are connected with him, and the community ſuffers more from one character of that ſort, than it is benefited by two ſober perſons. The editor has been led as it were inadvertently into theſe reflections, and tho' they may not be particularly applicable to Glouceſterſhire, yet as a general well-wiſher to his country, he hopes they are not altogether unſeaſonable.

But to return from this digreſſion: The Appendix ſtands after the parochial Hiſtory, and conſiſts of a variety of charters and papers of conſiderable length, taken from ſir Robert Atkyns's Gloſterſhire, and other ſources, and are proper to be referred to occaſionally. Some of them were originally written in Latin, but are here given in the Engliſh language, exactly as they were tranſlated by ſir Robert, except one or two of them, particularly the charter 'to the priory of Leonard Stanley, which in ſir Robert's book is blended and confuſed with part of the charter to the priory of Newent. The editor has rectified that miſtake, and added from the Monaſticon what was omitted.

Next follows a copious and uſeful Index, to which the reader muſt have recourſe to find the tithings and hamlets, which are not placed in alphabetical order in the body of the work, but inſerted in the pariſhes to which they reſpectively belong. By the Index alſo will be found the arms of the gentry, and the principal perſons and things treated of in the courſe of the work. With reſpect to the arms found upon monuments, they are in general blazoned as they appear there; but ſculptors and painters are not always the beſt heralds, and if they have made miſtakes, they ſhould not be imputed to the editor. Beſides, Guillim obſerves, that 'So great is the reſemblance 'oftentimes of things borne in coat armour, which 'yet in their exiſtence are much differing, that a 'man well ſeen in heraldry may commit an error in 'blazoning of them.' Add to this, that colours fade in a long courſe of time, and as in a few inſtances the editor was to rely ſolely on the preſent appearance of them on monuments in the churches, he offers this apology, if he has at any time miſtaken one colour for another, as blue for green, or vice verſa.

Laſtly, there is interſperſed through the body of the work, a curious ſet of prints of the chief ſeats in the county, for which the editor returns ſincere thanks to thoſe gentlemen to whom they are addreſt, and at whoſe expence they were engraven. As they are well executed, they make a valuable part of the work, and together with the correct map of the county, will undoubtedly prove acceptable to the public. He laments, however, the loſs of the plates of Stoke Giffard, and King's Weſton, by the deaths of lord Botetourt, and lord Clifford; and Rendcombe Houſe was deſigned to have made its appearance in this Hiſtory; but the perſon employ'd to take the drawing, could not be prevailed on to finiſh it in time.

The editor has now paſſed over in review the different heads of his work, and is far from being of opinion with Mela, an antient Roman geographer, who ſpeaking of his own country, ſays, De Italia, magis quia Ordo exigit, quam quia monſtrari egeat, pauca dicuntur, nota ſunt omnia. — If many things generally known by the inhabitants of Glouceſterſhire be taken notice of in this work, they ſhould not be conſidered as unneceſſary or ſuperfluous, becauſe they are ſo known; for the book may fall into hands to whom the information may be acceptable. On the other hand, it would be altogether as unreaſonable in ſtrangers to take exception againſt ſuch things as are ſerviceable chiefly to the inhabitants of this county; becauſe it was for their uſe they were inſerted. In ſhort, what may ſeem trifling to one claſs of readers, another may value and eſteem; and it was the editor's intention to accommodate himſelf to all.

Thus much he thought neceſſary by way of preface. How he has acquitted himſelf in the compilation, will be determined by the public voice. All he will venture to ſay further is, that he has endeavoured to inveſtigate Truth, perhaps with various ſucceſs. If he differ from others in matter of fact, he generally gives his authority; if in opinion, he thought himſelf at liberty to declare it with temper and moderation.

He affects not a cold indifference to the reception which his labours may meet with, for that would be unnatural, and an indignity to the higheſt tribunal in matters of Literature. Conſcious of his imperfections, he is ſenſible he may have fallen into error; but he has traduced no character, nor wilfully miſrepreſented any tranſaction; and he doubts not but the generous public will extend that indulgence to him, which others in ſimilar caſes have experienced.

ADDENDA ET CORRIGENDA.

DURING the Printing of ſo large a Work, ſome Alterations in Property have happened by Death and Alienations, which cannot be imputed for Miſtakes to the Editor. They principally relate to the following Places, viz.

CIRENCESTER. To the account of the manor and hundred of Cirenceſter, with the Seven Hundreds, (pp. 354, 355) ſhould be ſubjoined as follows: Allen earl Bathurſt dying in 1775, was ſucceeded in title and eſtate by his lordſhip's only ſurviving ſon, Henry earl Bathurſt, who is lord of the manor and hundred of Cirenceſter, and likewiſe of the Seven Hundreds, by an accommodation between his lordſhip and the other claimants. There is a monument erected in this pariſh church for the late earl Bathurſt and his lady, with their buſts in white marble, and a weeping genius between them. Upon the tablet is the following inſcription:

Near this Place are depoſited the Remains of
ALLEN EARL BATHURST, and CATHERINE LADY BATHURST.

of the great Council of the Nation he ſerved his Country 69 Years, w^th honour, ability, & diligence.

Benevolence guided all his Actions.
He died regretted by moſt, & praiſed by all,
The 16^th day of September, 1775, aged 91.

Catherine his Conſort, by her milder Virtues,

Her domeſtic Oeconomy extended his Liberality,
Her judicious Charity his Munificence,
Her prudent government of her family, his hoſpitality.
She received the reward of her Exemplary life
The 8^th day of June 1768, aged 79.

Married July the 6^th. 1704.

Beneath the table are the following arms: Quarterly, 1ſt and 4th, Bathurſt; 2d and 3d, Argent, on a croſs of St. George gules five eſcallops Or, for Villiers. A ſcutcheon of pretence, quarterly, 1ſt and 4th, Barry of ſix argent and gules, a canton ermine, for Apſley; 2d and 3d, Gules, a bend between two eſcallops Or, for Petre.—The creſt, ſupporters, and motto, are ſet down in the ſhort genealogical account of his lordſhip's family, p. 355.

It is not improper to obſerve, that in May 1777, ſince the account of Cirenceſter was printed, ſome workmen, in digging a cellar in Dyer-ſtreet, now under the ſhop and warehouſes belonging to Meſſ. Robert and William Croome, diſcovered a curious teſſellated pavement about eighteen feet ſquare, of which they had deſtroy'd nearly half before it was taken notice of. The remainder was in good preſervation, and being waſhed, was expoſed for a few days to public view. It had a checkered border round it, about fourteen inches broad, compoſed of blue and white ſtones of an inch ſquare. Within the border, it conſiſted alſo of blue and white ſtones, and of red bricks, but in much ſmaller ſquares, worked into wreaths and other ornaments. It was divided into four compartments by the artful arrangement and diſpoſition of the different coloured ſtones and bricks into lines of hearts, linked together, and interlaced fretty-wiſe, which had a very pretty effect. The center of the pavement is ſtill preſerved. It conſiſts of an octagon border, incloſing a wreathed figure, with rays pointed to the angles of the octagon. There was alſo a ſmaller figure of the ſame kind in the middle of each compartment; and the pavement together had very much the reſemblance of a rich Turkey carpet, the firſt idea of which I apprehend was ſuggeſted by a work of this kind. This pavement lay about ſix feet below the ſurface of the ground; and there remained alſo part of the plaſtered walls of the houſe to which it belonged, which appeared to have been painted, but the figures were ſo decayed by time, that it was impoſſible to form any idea of the ſubject. It is very remarkable that one corner of the pavement lay next the ſtreet, and about eight or ten yards on the north ſide of it, the workmen found a road made of lime and gravel; from which circumſtances it appears that antiently the ſtreets of the town lay in a different direction from what they do at preſent. This was undoubtedly a Roman work, and muſt be referred to the laſt-mentioned order of Roman pavements, in the ſhort account of them, p. 348.

DIMMOCK. The blank left for Mrs. Cam's arms in the cloſe of the account of this manor, ſhould be filled up thus: Paly of ſix, argent and azure. And in the account of population, the preſent number of inhabitants ſhould be 1282.

FLAXLEY. The antient manor houſe, taken notice of under this head, was burnt down in April, 1777.

FRAMPTON upon Severn. At the cloſe of the note, p. 453, concerning the late Mr. Richard Clutterbuck, read,----He died in 1775, and deviſed this eſtate to Mr. Phillips of Glouceſter, and to his wife, who was Mr. Clutterbuck's niece, for their lives; the remainder to Nathaniel Winchcombe, of Strond, eſq; and his heirs.

LITTLETON upon Severn. By a late purchaſe, this manor is the property of ſir Henry Lippincot, who was created a baronet in the year 1778, ſince the printing of the account of Stoke Biſhop, where that gentleman reſides, and under which head his name occurs.

OLEPEN. To the genealogical account of the family of Daunt, in the note to p. 587, add as follows: By the death of Thomas Daunt, ſon of Thomas and Elizabeth, in the year 1777, his nephew, Thomas Daunt, eſq; ſucceeded to this eſtate, and is the preſent lord of the manor of Olepen.

OZLEWORTH. By the death of James Clutterbuck, eſq; this eſtate is veſted in Mrs. Clutterbuck, his widow.

WORMINGTON. Nathaniel Jefferys, late of London, eſq; purchaſed this manor, and the advowſon of the church, of the late Mr. Partridge, and preſented the reverend Mr. Thomas Stedman to the rectory. He alſo purchaſed Wormington Grange of lord Aylmer, ſo that he is proprietor of the greater part of the pariſh, and reſides at the Grange. He gives Ermine, a lion rampant ſable, a canton of the ſecond within a double border argent.

PRELIMINARY MATTERS.

OF RELIGIOUS FOUNDATIONS, &c.

THERE were ſix mitred abbies in this county; thoſe of Glouceſter, Cirenceſter, Winchcombe, Tewkeſbury, Hayles, and Flaxley. The three firſt were peeral, the heads of which had ſeats in parliament till the diſſolution. This was more than a proportionable ſhare for the county, ſince there were only twenty-five abbats and two priors that held by barony in the whole kingdom. Beſides theſe, there were many other religious houſes of almoſt every denomination, which are mentioned in this book, under the names of the ſeveral places where they ſtood. But a ſhort account of the riſe, progreſs, and diſſolution of the monaſtic ſtate in general belongs more properly to this part of the work.

By religious houſes I mean cathedral churches, abbeys, priories, colleges, preceptories, &c. Few are ignorant of what is meant by cathedral churches, but the names and diſtinctions of the reſt are not ſo well underſtood.

An ABBEY was a ſociety of religious people, over whom an abbat, [from the Syriac abba, father] or abbeſs, preſided as head. In every abbey was a prior immediately under the abbat, who, during the abbat's abſence, had the chief care of the houſe. Under him was the ſub-prior, and in great abbies the third and fourth prior, all removable at the will of the abbat. They had alſo four great obedientiarii, or officers, viz. 1. The ſacriſta or ſexton, who took care of the buildings, the veſſels, the books, and veſtments of the church. 2. The theſaurarius, or burſar, who received all the rents and revenues of the monaſtery, and diſburſed all expences. 3. The cellarer, who provided food for the houſe. 4. The camerarius, or chamberlain, who found the clothing. Beſides theſe, there were the almoner, infirmarer, and other inferior officers.

A PRIORY had for its head a prior or prioreſs, who was as abſolute as any abbat in his abbey. Theſe were called conventual priories, becauſe the head was choſen by the convent; but they could not proceed to election without a Conge d'elire from their patron; which is alſo the reaſon why the king grants a Conge d'elire, in order to the election of biſhops, for the crown is the patron of all biſhopricks. In ſome of theſe were alſo a ſub-prior, ſacriſta, &c. as in the abbey. But there was a ſubordinate kind of priory, being only a cell to ſome great abbey. In ſuch, the prior was placed and removed at the will of the abbat-ſovereign. Alien-priories, or priories-alien, had their riſe in this manner: when eſtates were given to any foreign monaſtery, the monks, that they might have faithful ſtewards of their lands, built a convenient houſe upon them, for the reception of a ſmall convent, and then ſent over ſuch a number of their own houſe as they thought fit, conſtituting a prior over them.

COLLEGES, or COLLEGIATE CHURCHES, had a certain number of Secular Canons, living under the government of a dean, warden, provoſt, or maſter. There belonged to theſe foundations ſometimes chaplains, ſinging-men, clerks and choriſters.

CELLS were of two kinds; ſome, where an abbat, or prior of a great monaſtery, had lands lying at a diſtance from it, on which account they found it convenient to ſend two or three monks to inſpect the revenues of the place, and to perform divine ſervice, allowing them a maintenance at diſcretion, and removing them at pleaſure. Other cells received their revenues, to their own uſe, of the head of ſome great monaſtery, who preſented to, and viſited them, as their patron.

PRECEPTORIES, or COMMANDERIES, were houſes or cells to their principal manſions in London, erected by the Knights Templars, or Hoſpitallers, on their manors, in which ſome of their fraternity inhabited, who were under the government of the preceptors or commanders, and were to take care of the lands and rents, belonging to their order, in the neighbouring country.

FRIERIES differed from monaſteries, as they were not endowed with any certain revenues. They generally belonged to the Franciſcans and Dominicans, of the mendicant orders.

CHANTERIES were ſmall chapels, commonly built adjoining to the ſides or ends of churches, to which lands were given for prieſts to pray for the ſouls of the donors, their anceſtors and heirs; but theſe chanteries were not incorporate.

HOSPITALS were for the relief and maintenance of the ſick and impotent, who were lay-brethren, or ſiſters.

GUILDS, from the Anglo-Saxon word gild, which ſignifies a ſociety, were maintained by the yearly contributions of well-diſpoſed perſons; but the maintenance of the prieſt was ſettled by the firſt founder.

The monaſtic orders belonging to theſe ſeveral houſes were either religious or military; of the firſt were all monks and canons. Of the monks the moſt antient are

The BENEDICTINES, or thoſe that follow the rule of St. Benedict, or Bennet, who was born at Narſi, in Italy, about the year 480. He founded twelve monaſteries in his own country, the chief whereof was at Mont Caſſin, and gave them a rule, approved by pope Gregory the Great, A. D. 595. They were called the Black Monks, from the colour of their habit, which was a long, black, looſe, ſtuff coat, with a cowl or hood of the ſame, and a ſcapular. They wore a white flannel habit under it, and boots on their legs. Of this order were the three abbies of Glouceſter, Tewkeſbury, and Winchcombe; and the priories of Stanley St. Leonard, Deerhurſt, and Newent, in this county; as were indeed all the cathedral priories, except Carliol, or Carliſle, and moſt of the richeſt abbies in the kingdom. Odo biſhop of Cluny, in Burgundy, thinking ſome things too remiſs in St. Bennet's rule, about A. D. 912, took upon him to reform them, which was the riſe of

The CLUNIAC order. Moſt of our Engliſh houſes of this order were ſubordinate to the abbey of Cluny, or ſome other foreign monaſtery; and, as alien-priories, were ſeized during the wars with France, but were afterwards made indigenæ, and diſcharged from all ſubjection to any foreign abbey. Their habit was little different from that of the Benedictines.

The CARTHUSIANS were alſo a branch of the Benedictines, whoſe rule, with the addition of many ſeverities, they followed. Bruno, a native of Cologn in Germany, firſt inſtituted this order at Chartreuſe, in the dioceſe of Grenoble, about A. D. 1080; whence their monaſteries were corruptly called charter-houſes. They never eat fleſh, always wore a hair ſhirt next their ſkin, and none ever ſtirred out of the monaſtery, except the prior and procurator. Their habit was all white, except a plaited cloak, which was black.

The CISTERTIAN order was ſo called, from Ciſtertium, or Citeaux, in the biſhoprick of Chalons, where it was firſt planted, A. D. 1098, by Robert Harding, an Engliſhman, abbat of Moliſme, in Burgundy. They were ſometimes called Bernardines, becauſe St. Bernard was a great propagator of this order; alſo, White Monks, becauſe their habit was a white caſſock, with a narrow ſcapulary; but they ſometimes wore a black gown, with long ſleeves, when they went abroad, but not to church. The abbies of Hayles, and Flaxley, in this county, were of this order.

Theſe were all the orders of monks that were to be met with in England. The canons were either ſecular or regular.

The SECULAR CANONS were ſo called, becauſe, being clergymen, they ſerved the world, [ſeculum] in performing ſpiritual offices for the laity, and taking upon them the care of ſouls, which the regulars were incapable of. They were in no reſpect different from ordinary prieſts, except being under the government of ſome local ſtatutes; and were not ſo ſtrictly obliged to live under one roof as the monks and regular canons, but generally lived apart, and were ſeverally maintained by diſtinct prebends, in almoſt the ſame manner with the canons and prebendaries of our cathedral and collegiate churches at preſent. There was a college of theſe at Weſtbury, in Gouceſterſhire.

REGULAR CANONS were ſo called, becauſe they were obliged to a ſtrict obſervance of the rule of St.

St. Auſtin, or Auguſtine, biſhop of Hippo, in Africa; who, they ſay, was their founder, about the year 400; but they were not eminent till the tenth or eleventh century, and came not into England till after the conqueſt; St. Gregory's, in Canterbury, being the firſt, which was built by archbiſhop Lanfranc, A.D. 1084. They were alſo called Black Canons, becauſe they wore a long black caſſock, with a white rochet over it, and over all a black cloak and hood. They alſo wore beards, whereas the monks were all ſhaved, and wore a cap upon their heads. The abbey of Cirenceſter, the priory of St. Oſwald in the city of Glouceſter, and that of Lanthony, near Glouceſter, were of this order.

The PREMONSTRATENSIAN CANONS were inſtituted at Premonſtratum, in France, by one Norbert, about A.D. 1120. They were alſo called White Canons, from their wearing a white caſſock, with a rochet over it, and a long white cloak.

The SEMPRINGHAM, or GILBERTINE CANONS were inſtituted by St. Gilbert, at Sempringham, in Lincolnſhire, A. D. 1148. Their habit was a black caſſock, over which they wore a furred cloak, and a hood lined with lamb-ſkins. Their rule was compoſed out of thoſe of St. Auſtin and St. Bennet, with ſome ſpecial ſtatutes of their own. The monaſteries of this order conſiſted both of men and women, living under the ſame roof, but ſeparated by a wall.

The CANONS REGULAR OF THE HOLY SEPULCHRE were founded in imitation of thoſe regulars inſtituted in the church of that name at Jeruſalem. Their habit was the ſame as of other Black Canons, with a diſtinction of a double red croſs upon the breaſt of their cloak, or upper garment. The endeavours of theſe religious for the regaining of the Holy Land, after the loſs of Jeruſalem, coming to nothing, their lands, revenues and privileges were transferred to the MATURINES, or friers of the order of the Holy Trinity for the redemption of captives, who were inſtituted by St. John de Matta, and Felix de Valois, about A. D. 1200; and confirmed by Innocent III, who gave them white robes, with a red and blue croſs on their breaſts, and appointed that all the poſſeſſions which they enjoyed ſhould be equally divided into three parts; one for the entertainment and reception of religious perſons, another to relieve the poor, and the third to redeem chriſtians kept captive by the infidels. Theſe canons were alſo called Trinitarians, and here in England they were ſaid to be of the order of Ingham, becauſe the monaſtery at Ingham, in Norfolk, was the chief of that rule.

The BONHOMMES, or GOODMEN, were firſt brought into England A.D. 1283, by Edmund earl of Cornwall, and placed in a rectory or college founded by him at Aſſerug, or Aſhridge, in Bucks. They followed St. Auſtin's rule. At Edingdon, in Wiltſhire, was another houſe of this order, theſe two being all that were in England.

As for the nunneries of the Benedictine, Cluniac, Ciſtertian, and Carthuſian rules, and the Auſtin, Premonſtratenſian, and Gilbertine nuns, they were inſtituted by the ſame perſons as the monks of thoſe orders, and followed the ſame rules, and wore habits of the ſame colour with the monks, their heads being always covered with a veil. Beſides theſe, we had in England three other orders of religious females.

1. CLARISSES, or thoſe of the order of St. Clare, who inſtituted it about A.D. 1225.

2. BRIGETTAN nuns, founded by St. Bridget, queen of Sweden, about A.D. 1360.

3. Nuns of the order of FONTEVRAULT, wearing a black habit with a white veil; reformed from the Benedictines by Robert de Arbuſculo, at Font Ebrald in Poictiers, A. D. 1117.

Of the military orders there is mention made but of two in this book, viz. of the Knights Hoſpitallers of St. John of Jeruſalem, and the Knights Templars.

The HOSPITALLERS, ſince called Knights of Rhodes, or Malta, were firſt taken notice of about A. D. 1090, and were greatly favoured by Godfrey of Bullen, or Bologne, and his ſucceſſor Baldwin, king of Jeruſalem. They followed partly St. Auſtin's rule, and wore a white croſs upon their black habit. There was alſo in England one houſe of nuns of the order of St. John of Jeruſalem, viz. Buckland, in Somerſetſhire.

The KNIGHTS TEMPLARS, ſo called from having their reſidence in certain rooms adjoining to the temple at Jeruſalem, were inſtituted A. D. 1118. They followed the Ciſtertian rule, and their duty was to guard pilgrims travelling to the Holy Land. Their habit was white, with a red croſs. They were at firſt ſo poor, that they had ſcarce one horſe to two knights, therefore their coat of arms was two knights riding upon one horſe. The temple at London, now belonging to the ſocieties of the law, was conſecrated to their uſe in the year 1185, in the preſence of king Henry the ſecond, queen Elianor, and a great concourſe of nobles. They had a preceptory at Quenington, in this county.

The eſtates belonging to religious houſes were valued by the king's commiſſioners in the 26th year of Henry VIII. Of this valuation we have two very different copies, the one given us by Mr. Burton, or Mr. Speed, which was taken from the very original delivered to king Henry VIII. by the commiſſioners; the other at the end of the firſt Tome of the Monaſticon, taken by Sir William Dugdale out of an antient copy in the Cottonian library. Theſe two valuations ſeldom agree, and for that reaſon, becauſe there is ſuch authority for both, it is thought fit that the revenues, according to both rates, ſhould be inſerted.

The original of monks in Britain may be dated from the firſt planting of chriſtianity here, though it is probable the monaſtic rules were not introduced till the time of St. Patrick, who, after he he had converted the Iriſh to the chriſtian faith, A. D. 433, came over to England; and finding at Glaſtonbury twelve anchorites, gathered them together, and making himſelf abbat, taught them to live according to the monaſtic rules. In the next age, about A. D. 512, the Britiſh hiſtorians report, that St. Dubricius, archbiſhop of St. David's, founded twelve monaſteries, and taught his monks to live after the manner of the Aſiatics and Africans, by the labour of their own hands. And not long after, the abbey of Bangor was inſtituted, which, according to Bede, conſiſted of ſeven claſſes, each claſs containing three hundred monks, who all lived on their own labour. About A. D. 596, Auſtin, a monk of Rome, was ſent over by pope Gregory the Great, to convert England to the chriſtian faith; who being courteouſly entertained by Ethelbert, king of Kent, and made archbiſhop of Canterbury, founded a monaſtery there that bore his own name: Soon after which, upon the converſion of the Weſt Saxons and Mercians, monaſteries were erected in all parts where chriſtianity had any footing, and liberally endowed by the Saxon kings.

At the end of the eighth century, the Danes made deſcents upon England, and finding moſt wealth, and leaſt reſiſtance, in the monaſteries, generally plundered them; which forced the monks to quit their ſeats, and leave them to the ſecular clergy; ſo that in king Edgar's time, there was ſcarce one left in all England. Edgar was a lewd and cruel prince, and Dunſtan, archbiſhop of Canterbury, with other monks, taking advantage from the horrors of conſcience that ſeized him, perſuaded him that the reſtoring of the monaſtic ſtate would be matter of great merit; ſo he converted many of the chapters into monaſteries, and it appears by the foundation of the priory of Worceſter, that he had then founded forty-ſeven. By his authority alſo, all the lands which had been taken away from religious places were reſtored; and the king, by Dunſtan's advice, made the ſecond reformation of our antient Engliſh monks, in the council of Wincheſter, A. D. 965.

The monks being thus ſettled in their antient rights and privileges, quietly enjoyed their lands till the conqueſt; at which time monaſteries had a deep ſhare in the afflictions of the conquered nation.

It was in the conqueror's time that the third and laſt regulation of monks was made, by archbiſhop Lanfranc, in the council held at London, A. D. 1075.

The orders of regular canons of St. Auſtin, and of Cluniac monks, were brought into England, and ſix houſes of each ſort founded in this reign; as alſo ſixteen Benedictine abbies and priories, beſides fourteen alien priories. The king himſelf built and endowed two abbies, one priory, and five alien priories.

William Rufus ſucceeded. He was heir to the vices, not to the virtues of his father, and miſerably oppreſſed the religious, ſeized upon the revenues of the vacant abbies, and biſhopricks, and would never let them be filled without ſome ſimoniacal bargain. If we except about nine alien priories, there were only thirteen religious houſes founded in the thirteen years of this reign; viz. ſeven of the Benedictine, four of the Cluniac, and two of the Auſtin order, and about nine alien priories; but not one collegiate church in this or the preceding reign. The king himſelf built only two ſmall priories.

King Henry I. is recorded not only as an encourager of learning, but, according to the ideas of that age, as a very pious, good prince; and his founding of nine or ten monaſteries confirms the truth of this character. In the beginning of his reign, the Knights Hoſpitallers ſettled in London. A. D. 1128, the Ciſtertians were firſt brought into England, and placed at Weverley, in Surrey; and about this time the canons of the Holy Sepulchre came to Warwick. The number of religious houſes founded in the reign of king Henry I. were above one hundred; viz. about thirty of the Benedictine monaſteries, forty of the Auſtin order, five of the Cluniac, ten Ciſtertian houſes, four colleges, two preceptories, and thirteen alien priories.

King Stephen was virtuous, religious, and liberal; and after the wars between him and the empreſs Maud were ended, he became a great builder of religious houſes. A. D. 1146, the Premonſtratenſian order was brought into England, their firſt monaſtery being Newhouſe, in Lincolnſhire. Two years after, the Gilbertine order had its riſe, at Sempringham, in that county. In this reign were built fifteen monaſteries of the Benedictine order, twenty-five priories of Black Canons, thirty-five Ciſtertian abbies, ſix houſes of the Premonſtratenſian, ſix of the Gilbertine, and four of the Cluniac rule; one college, two preceptories, and three alien priories.

King Henry II. was very obliging to the clergy, eſpecially after the murder of Thomas Becket, archbiſhop of Canterbury. He founded eight religious houſes; and in his reign were built twenty-two Benedictine, thirty Auſtin, eight Premonſtratenſian, four Gilbertine, and ſix Cluniac monaſteries; three collegiate churches, ſix preceptories, (for in the year 1185 the Templars came into England) eight alien priories, and, what is more remarkable, almoſt twenty Ciſtertian abbies, notwithſtanding it was contrary to a canon made at the general chapter of the Ciſtertian order, in the year 1152; wherein the erecting of any more abbies of that rule was expreſſly forbid, becauſe there were above five hundred of them already founded.

In the time of Richard I. the humour of going to recover the Holy Land from the Saracens mightily prevailed in England, as well as in all other parts of Chriſtendom; and the money deſigned for pious uſes being expended in thoſe wars, wars, and for the ranſom of the king, there were few monaſteries built in this reign, viz. only ſix of the Benedictine, four of the Auſtin, one of the Ciſtertian, four of the Premonſtratenſian, and two of the Gilbertine order, with one alien priory. The king is ſaid to have mortally hated the Black Monks, the Ciſtertians, and the Templars; and not only theſe three ſorts, but alſo all religious men, for we do not find that he built one monaſtery in all England.

King John, though he was always prejudiced againſt the eccleſiaſtics, founded a ſtately abbey for the Ciſtertians, at Beaulieu, in Com. Hants, and a nunnery for Benedictines, at Lambley in Northumberland. In this reign were built ſeven Benedictine abbies and priories, eleven for regular canons, ſeven for Ciſtertian monks, one preceptory, two Premonſtratenſian abbies, ſix of the Gilbertine order, and two alien priories.

In the reign of king Henry III. we find but four Benedictine abbies and priories built, fifteen of the Auſtin, nine of the Ciſtertian, and of the Gilbertine, Cluniac, and Premonſtratenſian orders each one, as alſo one alien priory. And the king himſelf founded only the ſmall Gilbertine cell of Fordham in Cambridgeſhire. For during this reign came the Dominican or preaching friars into this kingdom, A. D. 1217; and the Franciſcans, or Friars Minors, A. D. 1224; who, for the pretended ſeverity of their lives, and their frequent preaching, were at firſt greatly admired by the people, to the prejudice of the other regulars and pariſh prieſts.

King Edward I. ſucceeded next, who built the ſtately abbey of Vale-Royal, in Cheſhire.

Now the greatneſs and riches of the eccleſiaſtics began to be envied by the nobility and gentry, and the affections of the people were alienated by the ſermons, pamphlets, and ſecret inſinuations of the begging friars. In the ſeventh year of this king's reign, the ſtatute of Mortmain was enacted, by which all religious perſons were incapacitated from entering upon any fees, either to buy them, or to receive them of the gift of others, without licence of the chief lords, upon pain of forfeiture. There were ſeveral laws made to prevent this, for (as Frederick the abbot of Canterbury told William the Conqueror) the lands, which were for the maintenance of martial men, were converted to pious uſes, and beſtowed on holy votaries, by which means the military ſervices, neceſſary for the defence of the kingdom, were withdrawn; and beſides, the chief lords loſt their eſcheats, wardſhips, reliefs, &c. to prevent which, at the creating of a ſeignory, this clauſe was often inſerted in the deed of feoffment, viz. Quod licitum ſit donatori, rem donatam dare vel vendere cui voluerit, exceptis viris religioſis, et Judæis. Lord Coke, 2 Inſt. c. 36. has ſhewn how many ways the religious had to evade this law, of which they complained; and, to ſupply the loſs of new benefactions, procured penſions, privileges from paying tithes, and, what the church finds the inconvenience of to this day, impropriations.—— The king ſeized all the alien priories in the year 1295; the rents and profits, which iſſued out of them to foreign monaſteries, being conceived of advantage to his enemies. In this reign were founded three monaſteries of the Benedictine order, two Auſtin priories, three Ciſtertian abbies, one preceptory, nine colleges, and one Gilbertine priory.

In the reign of king Edward II. we find no great ſtir made about the monks, or their lands; indeed the Knights Templars were ſeized, and their goods and revenues confiſcated, though they were not appropriated to any ſecular uſe, but ſettled upon the Knights Hoſpitallers, by act of parliament, 17 Edw. 2. We do not meet with any monaſtery founded by this unhappy prince, nor indeed but two of the Benedictine, and two of the Auſtin order, by any other perſons, during this period.

King Edward III. is characterized by the monks to have been a pious as well as a valiant prince, for though his wars with France would not ſuffer him to give much to religious houſes, and forced him to be ſevere upon the alien priories; yet there were a great many monaſteries founded in his reign, viz. three Benedictine houſes, ſix of the Auſtin order, one Ciſtertian, and ſeventeen colleges. And notwithſtanding his own extraordinary charges, he founded, and liberally endowed, the Auſtin nunnery at Dartford, in Kent, with the two large colleges of St. George at Windſor, and St. Stephen at Weſtminſter.

In the reign of king Richard II. Wickliff's doctrines were eagerly embraced, and the mendicant friars began to loſe their reputation. There were only two or three Carthuſian monaſteries, and ten or eleven colleges founded during this period.

In the ſixth year of Henry IV. A. D. 1404, was held the parliamentum indoctum, ſo called, becauſe none that were learned in the laws of the land were ſuffered to be choſen members of it. A bill was brought into this parliament to deprive the clergy of all their temporal poſſeſſions, for the relief of the king's neceſſities; but by the mediation of Thomas Arundel, archbiſhop of Canterbury, it was ſet aſide. This king built the college of Battelfield in com. Salop. which, with two or three colleges more, and a Carthuſian priory, were all the foundations during this reign.

In the ſecond year of Henry V. there was another attempt made againſt the poſſeſſions of the church, but archbiſhop Chicheley, earneſtly preſſing the young king to recover his right to the crown of France; and for the vigorous carrying on of a war, promiſing in the name of the clergy ſuch a benevolence as ſcarce ever had been given by the ſubject, the king readily embraced the propoſal, and the church was once more preſerved from ſacrilege. But in a parliament held this year at Leiceſter, all the alien priors were given to the king, with their lands, houſes, &c. except ſuch as were conventual, i. e. ſuch as had liberty to chooſe their own prior. In this king's ſhort reign were founded only ſix colleges and an Auſtin priory, beſides the Carthuſian abbey at Sheen in com. Surr. and the houſe of the Brigettan order at Syon, in com. Middleſ. which were built, and liberally endowed by the king himſelf.

King Henry VI. a religious but unfortunate prince, ſucceeded next, who founded Eaton college in Buckinghamſhire, and king's college in Cambridge, and endowed them chiefly out of the ſuppreſſed alien priories. Beſides them there were ſix other colleges founded in this reign.

During the civil wars between the York and Lancaſter families, in the time of Edward IV. we muſt not expect to meet with any conſiderable additions to the church. In thoſe troubleſome times ſhe was more fortunate than might have been expected, in keeping her own; but there were ſome few colleges founded in this reign.

Note, the numbers of religious houſes built in every king's reign are not compleat and exact, for there are almoſt two hundred and fifty abbies, priories and colleges, the dates of the foundations of which we are ignorant of.

Our hiſtorians are ſilent concerning monaſtic affairs in the reigns of Richard III. and Henry VII. ſo that we conclude there was nothing remarkable in them till the reformation, which began to take place in the next reign. For all monaſteries not having 200*l. per ann.* (of which there were above 370) were diſſolved, 27 H. 8. and all their lands, rents, and houſes, with their ſtock of cattle, corn, &c. given to the king. In the 31ſt year of his reign, all the great abbies, to the number of ſix hundred and forty-five, met with the ſame fate. The next year, the houſes, lands and goods of the knights of St. John of Jeruſalem were ſeized by, or annexed to, the crown; as were ninety colleges, one hundred and ten hoſpitals, and 2374 chanteries and free chapels, in the thirty-ſeventh year of that reign; which put a final period to the monaſtic ſtate in this kingdom.

The firſt ſtep that was made towards it, was that which cardinal Wolſey took, in the ſixteenth and twentieth years of the king's reign. He projected and laid two noble foundations, the one at Oxford, and the other at Ipſwich, the place of his birth, both for the encouragement of the learned, and the inſtruction of youth; and for that end obtained licenſe from the ſee of Rome to diſſolve above thirty ſmall monaſteries, which being executed, their lands by law fell to the king, and thereupon the cardinal took out grants of, and endowed his colleges with them. This made way for the ruin of the greater houſes.

Another thing was the diſcovery of an impoſture about this time, begun and carried on by one Elizabeth Barton, afterwards called the nun of Kent, and ſome prieſts that confederated with her. This woman had been for a while troubled with fits, or elſe counterfeited them, and ſpoke ſuch things as made thoſe about her think ſhe was inſpired. The parſon of the pariſh, hoping to draw advantages from this, engaged her for his purpoſe, and taught her ſo to counterfeit thoſe fits, if they were ever real, that ſhe became very ready at it. The matter was much noiſed about, and the prieſt intending to raiſe the credit of an image of the bleſſed virgin's that was in this church, that ſo pilgrimages and offerings might be made to it, alſo engaged one Bocking, a monk of Canterbury, in the ſcheme. They taught her to declare in her fits, that the bleſſed virgin appeared to her, and told her ſhe could not be well till ſhe viſited that image. She inveighed againſt an ill courſe of life, hereſy, and the king's ſuit of divorce, then depending; and by many diſtortions of her body, ſeemed to be inwardly poſſeſſed. A day was ſet for her cure, and before an aſſembly of two thouſand people, ſhe was carried to that image; where, having acted her fits all over, ſhe ſeemed ſuddenly to be recovered, which was aſcribed to the interpoſition of the virgin, and the virtue of the image. Upon this ſhe entered into a religious life, and Bocking was her ghoſtly father. There were violent ſuſpicions of incontinence between them, but the eſteem ſhe was in bore them down. Many thought her a propheteſs; and archbiſhop Warham among the reſt. A book was written of her revelations, and a letter ſhewed in characters of gold, ſaid to be ſent to her from heaven by Mary Magdalen. She pretended that when the king was laſt at Calais, ſhe was carried inviſibly beyond ſea, and brought back again; that an angel gave her the ſacrament; and that God revealed to her, that, if the king went on in his divorce, and married another wife, he ſhould fall from his crown, and not live a month longer. Biſhop Fiſher, and many monks, friers and nuns, gave credit to this, and grew very inſolent upon it. Her confederates publiſhed her revelations in all parts of the kingdom, whereupon ſhe and nine of her accomplices we apprehended; who, without rack or torture, confeſſed the whole conſpiracy, and were appointed to go to St. Paul's; where, after a ſermon preached on that occaſion by the biſhop of Bangor, they repeated their confeſſion in the hearing of the people, and were ſent priſoners to the tower. But it was given out that all was extorted from them by violence, and meſſages were ſent to the nun, deſiring her to deny all that ſhe had confeſſed; which made the king judge it neceſſary to proceed to further extremities. So ſhe and ſix of her accomplices were attainted of treaſon, and on the twentieth of April following, were executed at tyburn; where, freely acknowledging her impoſtures, and the juſtice of the ſentence, ſhe laid the blame on thoſe that ſuffered with her; and concluded her life, begging pardon both of God and the king.

If

If this impoſture had fallen out in a darker age, in which the world went mad after viſions, the king might have loſt his crown by it. This diſcovery diſpoſed all to look on older ſtories of the trances of monaſtical people, as contrivances to ſerve baſe purpoſes, and made way for the deſtruction of that order of men in England.

About the year 1535, the king, apprehenſive of a war from the emperor, intended to fortify his harbours, and to encourage trade and navigation, upon which the ballance of Europe began then to turn; and for that purpoſe, reſolving to make uſe of the wealth of the monaſteries, thought the beſt way to bring them into his own hands, would be to expoſe their vices.

Cranmer promoted this much, and a general viſitation of all the religious houſes in England, was begun in October 1535, and caſt into ſeveral precincts. Inſtructions were given to the viſitors, directing them what things to inquire after, concerning the revenues of the monaſteries, the lives and converſation of the monks, nuns, &c.

With theſe inſtructions they went over England, and found in many places monſtrous diſorders. The ſin of Sodom was found in ſeveral houſes; great factions and barbarous cruelties in others, and in ſome they found tools for coining. The report contained many abominable things, that are not fit to be mentioned. Some of theſe were printed, but the greateſt part is loſt; only a report of one hundred and forty-four houſes is yet extant. The abbat of Langden, in Kent, had been found in bed with a whore, who went in the habit of a lay brother; which perhaps diſpoſed him to comply with ſuch terms as were offered him, and he and ten of his monks were the firſt who ſigned a reſignation of their houſe to the king. Two other houſes in the ſame county, Folkeſtone and Dover, followed their example, as did four others in the following year.

In February a parliament met, and an act was paſſed for the ſuppreſſion of all monaſteries under 200 l. a year, and their revenues were given to the king. The report of the viſitors was read in the two houſes, and diſpoſed them to great eaſineſs in this matter. The monaſteries were much richer than they ſeemed to be from the rent-rolls of their eſtates, for it was the practice to let them at their firſt rates, tho' the value of lands was much enhanced, but inſtead of raiſing the rents, they exacted great fines from their tenants, upon the renewal of their leaſes; ſo that ſome houſes, rated only at 200 l. a year, were really worth many thouſands.

As ſoon as this act was paſſed, viſitors were ſent to examine into, and take inventories of their revenues, and to take their ſeals into their keeping: They were to try how many of the religious would take capacities, and return to a ſecular courſe of life; but thoſe who intended to continue in that ſtate, were to be ſent to ſome of the great monaſteries that lay neareſt. A penſion was alſo to be aſſigned to the abbat, or prior, during life; and they were particularly to examine what leaſes had been made all the laſt year; for the abbats, hearing what was coming upon them, had been raiſing all the money they could; and ſo it was intended to recover what was made away by ill bargains. There were great complaints made of the proceedings of the viſitors, of their violences and briberies, and perhaps not without reaſon. Ten thouſand of the religious were ſet to ſeek their fortunes, with forty ſhillings and a gown a man. Their goods and plate were eſtimated at 100,000 l. and the valued rents of their houſes was 32,000 l. but was really worth above ten times as much. The churches and cloiſters were in moſt places pulled down, and the materials ſold, leſt ſome accidental change might conduce to their reſtitution.

This gave a general diſcontent, and the monks were now as much pitied as they were formerly hated. It was thought ſtrange to ſee the king devour what his anceſtors had dedicated to the honour of God, and his ſaints. The nobility and gentry, who provided for their younger children and friends, by putting them in thoſe ſanctuaries, were ſenſible of their loſs. The people, who had been fed at the abbats tables, and as they travelled over the country, found the abbies to be places of reception for ſtrangers, ſaw what they were to loſe. But the more ſuperſtitious, who thought their friends muſt now ſtill continue in purgatory, whithout that relief wh ch the maſſes procured them, were beyond meaſure offended at theſe proceedings.

To remove this general diſcontent, Cromwell adviſed the king to ſell the abbey lands, at very eaſy rates, to the nobility and gentry, and to oblige them to keep up the wonted hoſpitality. This would both be grateful to them, and would engage them to aſſiſt the crown in the maintenance of the changes that had been made; ſince their own intereſts would be interwoven with the rights of the crown; and the common people, whoſe grudges lay chiefly in their ſtomachs, would be eaſily pacified, if hoſpitality was ſtill kept up. Upon a clauſe in the act, impowering the king to found a-new ſuch houſes as he ſhould think fit, there were fifteen monaſteries, and ſixteen nunneries, now founded. It ſeems theſe had been more regular than the reſt, ſo that for a while, they were reprieved, till the general ſuppreſſion. They were bound to obey ſuch rules as the king ſhould ſend them, and to pay him tenths and firſt fruits.

All this did not pacify the people, for in the beginning of October, 20,000 roſe in Lincolnſhire, led by a prieſt, under the diſguiſe of a cobler; but upon the offer of a general pardon, they were ſoon diſperſed. At the ſame time there was a more formidable riſing in Yorkſhire, headed by one Aſk, who performed his part with great dexterity. They became 40,000 ſtrong in a few days, and met with no oppoſition. They forced the archbiſhop of York, and the lord Darcy, to ſwear to their covenant, and to go along with them. They beſieged Skipton, but the earl of Cumberland held it out againſt them; as Sir Ralph Evers did Scarborough caſtle; though for twenty days he and his men had no proviſions but bread and water. There was alſo an inſurrection in all the other northern counties, againſt whom the earl of Shrewſbury made head. But at length a proclamation of pardon, without any reſtrictions, being ſigned and ſent them, they were every where quieted. Aſk was invited to court, and well uſed by the king, with a view to learn from him all the ſecret correſpondences they had in other parts of the kingdom; but withdrawing without leave, he was taken, and hanged at York. This was followed by ſeveral little inſurrections but they were all quickly diſperſed by the vigilance of the duke of Norfolk.

As ſoon as the country was every where quieted, and this threatening ſtorm blown over, the king went on more reſolutely in his deſign of ſuppreſſing the monaſteries. A new viſitation was appointed, to inquire into the converſation of the monks, to examine how they ſtood affected to the pope, and how they promoted the king's ſupremacy. The viſitors were likewiſe ordered to examine what impoſtures might be carried on among them, with regard either to images or relics, by which the ſuperſtition of the credulous people was wrought upon. Some few houſes of greater value were prevailed with, the former year, to ſurrender to the king. Many of the houſes that had not been diſolved, though they were in the former act, were now ſuppreſt, and many of the greater abbats were perſuaded by ſeveral motives to ſurrender. Some had been faulty during the rebellion, and ſo, to prevent a ſtorm, offered a reſignation. Others liked the reformation, and did it on that account. Some were found guilty of great diſorders in their lives, and, to prevent a ſhameful diſcovery, offered their houſes to the king; and others had made ſuch waſte, and ſuffered dilapidations, that having taken care of themſelves, they were the leſs concerned for others. At St. Albans, the rents were fixed ſo low, that the abbat could not maintain the charge of the abbey. At Battel, the whole furniture of the houſe and chapel were not worth 100 l. and their plate not above 300 l. In ſome houſes there was ſcarce any plate or furniture left. Many abbats and monks were glad to accept of a penſion for life, which was proportioned to the value of their houſe, and to their innocence. The abbats of St. Albans and Tewkeſbury had each 400 marks a year: but the abbat of St. Edmondſbury was more innocent, and more reſolute. The viſitors wrote "that they found no ſcandals in that houſe," but at laſt he was prevailed with, for a penſion of 500 marks, to reſign. The inferior governors had ſome 30, 20, or 10 l. penſions, and the monks had generally 6 l. or 8 marks each. All that ſhould give good example to others, by a quick and chearful ſurrender, were made to hope for advancement; ſo 121 of theſe houſes were this year reſigned to the king. In moſt houſes, the viſitors made the monks ſign a confeſſion of their former vices and diſorders, of which there is only one original extant, that eſcaped a general raſure of all ſuch papers in queen Mary's time; wherein they acknowledged, in a long narrative, their former idleneſs, gluttony and ſenſuality.

The common preamble to moſt ſurrenders was, "that upon full deliberation, and of their own "proper motion, for juſt and reaſonable cauſes "moving their conſciences, they did freely give "up their houſes to the king." Though ſome ſurrendered without any preamble, to the viſitors, as feoffees in truſt for the king. In ſhort, they went on at ſuch a rate, that 159 reſignations were obtained before the parliament met, who afterwards declared them good in law.

Such of the abbats as refuſed to ſurrender were roughly handled. The abbat of Fountains, in Yorkſhire, was charged by the commiſſioners with theft and ſacrilege, for taking into his private hands ſome jewels belonging to that monaſtery; for which they pronounced him perjured, and having depoſed him, extorted a private reſignation. The monks of the Charter-houſe, in the ſuburbs of London, were committed to Newgate, where, with hard and barbarous uſage, five of them died, and five more lay at the point of death. The two priors of Wooburn and Burlington, with the abbats of Whaley, Jervaux, and Sawley, were ſuſpected of a correſpondence with the rebels, and of favouring the pope; ſo they were all taken, attainted of treaſon, and executed. The abbats of Glaſtonbury and Reading had alſo ſent a great deal of their plate to the rebels; the former, to diſguiſe it the better, had made a perſon break into the houſe where the plate was kept; ſo he was convicted both of burglary and treaſon, and being condemned to death, was drawn from Wells, upon a hurdle, then hanged upon the hill called the Tor, near Glaſtonbury; his head ſet upon the abbey-gate, and his quarters expoſed at Wells, Bath, Ilcheſter, and Bridgwater. At his execution, he confeſt his crime, and begged both God's and the king's pardon for it. The abbat of Colcheſter was alſo attainted and executed, the grounds of which proceeding are not known; for the records of their attainders are loſt.

Upon the attainders of theſe abbats, their abbies were ſeized, and they were confirmed to the king in the following parliament, in a ſpecial proviſo made for that purpoſe.

Great complaints were made of the viſitors, as if they had uſed undue practices to make the abbats and monks ſurrender. They, on the other hand, publiſhed many of the vile practices found in thoſe houſes; and no ſtory became ſo public, as that of the prior of the Croſſed Friars in London, who was found in bed with a whore at noonday: He fell down on his knees, and begged thoſe who who ſurpriſed him, not to diſcover his ſhame: They made him give them 30 l. which he proteſted was all he had, and he promiſed them as much more; but as he did not keep his word, a ſuit followed upon it. Yet all theſe perſonal blemiſhes did not work much on the people. It ſeemed unreaſonable to extinguiſh noble foundations, for the fault of ſome individuals; therefore another way was taken, which had a better effect.

They diſcovered many impoſtures concerning reliques and wonderful images, to which pilgrimages had been uſually made. At Reading was an angel's wing, which brought over the point of the ſpear that pierced our ſaviour's ſide. As many pieces of the croſs were found, as joined together would have made a prodigious one. The rood of grace at Boxley, in Kent, had been much eſteemed, and had drawn many pilgrims to it. It was obſerved to bow and rowl its eyes, to look at times well pleaſed or angry, which the credulous multitude imputed to a divine power; but being brought to St. Paul's croſs; and all the ſprings openly expoſed, that governed its ſeveral motions, all was diſcovered to be a notorious cheat. At Hayles, in Glouceſterſhire, the blood of Chriſt was ſhewed in a phial, and it was taught, that none could ſee it that was in mortal ſin. But good preſents being made, the deluded pilgrims went away well ſatisfied with the ſight of it. This was the blood of a duck, renewed every week, put into a phial, very thick on one ſide, and thin on the other; and either ſide turned toward the pilgrim, as the prieſts were ſatisfied with their oblations. Several other ſuch like impoſtures were diſcovered, which contributed much to the undeceiving of the people.

The richeſt ſhrine in England was Thomas Becket's, at Canterbury, whoſe ſtory is well known. His altar drew far greater oblations than thoſe that were dedicated to Chriſt, or the Bleſſed Virgin, as appears by the account of them in two years. In one, 3*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* and in another, not a penny was offered at Chriſt's altar. The ſame years, 63*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.* and 4*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.* were offered at the Bleſſed Virgin's altar. But in theſe very years there were 832*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.* and 964*l.* 6*l.* 3*d.* offered at St. Thomas's. The ſhrine grew to be of ineſtimable value. Two days in the year were obſerved in honour of this ſaint; the twenty-ninth of December, called his martyrdom, and the ſeventh of July, the day of his tranſlation; and every fiftieth year was a jubilee, and an indulgence was granted to all that came and viſited his tomb, where 100,000 pilgrims are ſaid to have been at one time. Lewis VII. of France, came over in pilgrimage to viſit it, and offered a ſtone eſteemed the richeſt in Europe. It is hard to ſay which of the two, a hatred to Becket's ſeditious practices, or the love of his ſhrine, operated the ſtrongeſt on the king to unſaint him. However the ſhrine was broken, and the gold of it was ſo heavy, that it filled two cheſts, which took eight men each to carry them out of the church; and his ſcull, that had been ſo much worſhipped, was proved to be an impoſture; for the true ſcull was found with the reſt of his bones in his coffin.

The foundation of all this wealth was the belief of purgatory, and of the virtue that was in maſſes to redeem ſouls out of it; ſo it paſſed among all for a piece of piety to parents, and of care for the ſouls of themſelves and families, to endow religious houſes with lands, upon condition that they ſhould have maſſes ſaid for them, as it was agreed on, more or leſs frequently, according to the meaſure of the gift.

Some images were believed to have extraordinary virtue in them, and pilgrimages to theſe were much extolled. There was alſo great rivalry among the ſeveral orders, every one magnifying their own ſaints, images and reliques. The religious were generally very diſſolute, and groſſly ignorant. Their privileges were become a public grievance, and their lives were ill examples to the world; which, together with the proſpect of vaſt profit, through that deluge of wealth which was like to be diſperſed through the nation, upon the ſuppreſſion of monaſteries, diſpoſed the people the more eaſily to conſent to their diſſolution.

A parliament was ſummoned on the twenty-eight of April, 1539, in which twenty of the abbats ſat in perſon. During this ſeſſion, an act paſſed for confirming all reſignations of religious houſes already made, or to be made; and the king's right, founded either on ſurrenders, forfeitures, or attainders of treaſon, was thereby declared to be good in law; and though there were ſo many abbats ſitting in the houſe, none of them proteſted againſt it.

Fifty-ſeven ſurrenders were made this year, of which there were twelve parliamentary abbies, and twenty nunneries. Commiſſioners were appointed, by the court of augmentation, to ſeize on the revenues and goods belonging to thoſe houſes; to eſtabliſh the penſions that were to be given to every one that had been in them; and to pull down the churches, or other parts of the fabric, which they thought ſuperfluous, and to ſell the materials of them. The valued rents of the abbey lands, as they were then let, was 132,607*l.* 6*s.* 4*d*; but this was not one tenth of the true value. The king had now in his hand the greateſt advantage that ever king of England had, both for enriching the crown, and making royal foundations. But ſuch was his extravagance, that all this melted away in a few years, and his deſigns, or pretended deſigns, were never accompliſhed. It is ſaid, he intended to have founded eighteen new biſhopricks, but theſe ſix only, Weſtminſter, Cheſter, Glouceſter, Peterborough, Oxford, and Briſtol, were eſtabliſhed.

In the year 1540, a bill was brought into parliament, for the ſuppreſſing of the Knights of St. John of Jeruſalem. Theſe were at firſt only eſtabliſhed in an hoſpital, to entertain the pilgrims that went to viſit the holy grave, but afterwards became an order of knights; and they and the Knights Templars conducted and guarded the pilgrims. It was thought, for ſome ages, one of the higheſt expreſſions of devotion to Chriſt, to viſit the place where he was crucified, buried, and aſcended to heaven; and it was eſteemed to be highly meritorious, to fight for the recovery of the Holy Land out of the hands of infidels; ſo that almoſt every one that died, either vowed to go to the holy war, or left ſomething to ſuch as ſhould go. If they recovered, they generally obtained a diſpenſation from their vow, by giving lands for the entertainment of thoſe knights. There were great complaints made againſt the Templars, but whether it was their wealth that made them a deſirable prey, or their guilt that drew ruin on them, is not certain; they were however ſo univerſally hated, that a perſon whoſe beard reſembled the form of theirs, and which he had made a vow to continue, was neceſſitated to carry about him a certificate, well atteſted, that he was not of that order; otherwiſe he muſt often have run the hazard of being knocked on the head. They were condemned in a council, and the whole order ſuppreſſed in 1312, and all of them that could be found were cruelly put to death. The Knights of St. John ſtill continued, but when the Chriſtians quitted Paleſtine they ſettled in Rhodes, out of which being expelled by the Turks, after a noble reſiſtance, they fixed themſelves in Malta, and ſtill continue in poſſeſſion of that iſland. Since they could not be brought to ſurrender of their own accord here in England, they were ſuppreſſed by act of parliament.

When the order of the Templars were ſuppreſt, their lands, which were ſimple gifts, went to the lords by eſcheat; but there is a diſtinction to be made betwixt ſuch, and the lands given to abbies, in as much as theſe were given in conſideration of the maſſes to be ſaid for the donors and their families; and therefore it was inferred, that when the cheat of redeeming ſouls out of purgatory was diſcovered, and theſe houſes were ſuppreſt, the lands were to revert to the heirs of the donors; and upon that account it was thought neceſſary to exclude them by a ſpecial proviſo.

When all this was done, the better to ſatisfy the people, it was repreſented to them, that by the wealth of theſe houſes, the kingdom ſhould be ſtrengthened with an army of 40,000 men, and that for the future they ſhould never be charged with ſubſidies, loans, or common aids; and leſt they ſhould take up arms upon this great and ſtrange alteration, reports were ſpread, that cardinal Pool laboured to excite our enemies to ſend forces againſt the kingdom, and that an invaſion was threatened; which ſeemed the more credible, becauſe the truce concluded betwixt the emperor and the French was generally known, and neither of them wanted a pretence to break with us. Theſe apprehenſions were ſtrengthened by the king's ſudden journey to the ſea coaſts, whither alſo ſeveral of the nobility and great officers went, to viſit the ports and places of danger; who repreſented it to be every where ſo great, as one would have thought each place had needed a fortification. The navy was immediately got ready, and muſters were ordered to be taken all over the kingdom. The expence of all theſe preparations, made againſt a danger believed to be ſo very imminent, was to be defraied out of the revenues of the monaſteries, which ſaved the purſes of the people, who therefore became the better affected to the diſſolution.

The monaſtic ſtate being now compleatly ſubverted, let us turn our eyes for a moment on Cromwell, earl of Eſſex, lord vice-gerent, and high chancellor of England, viſitor-general, and knight of the garter; who having riſen by his great parts, to all theſe honors and high employments, from the low condition of a blackſmith's ſon, excited the envy and hatred of the nobility; and having been the grand actor in this cataſtrophe, drew upon him the further odium of the catholics. His numerous enemies did him every ill office with the king, who having no more uſe for him, and hoping to regain their affections, by caſting upon Cromwell all the blame of paſt proceedings, gave way to their accuſations, and made him a ſacrifice. He was arreſted by the duke of Norfolk at the council table, when he leaſt dreamt of it, and commited to the tower; and by the ſame parliament that ratified and confirmed what with ſo much induſtry he had brought to paſs, was himſelf condemned for hereſy and treaſon, unheard and little pitied; and on the twenty-eighth of July, had his head cut off on Tower-hill.

The temporal advantages reſulting to the people from theſe ſurprizing changes, were not equal to their expectations, for by the hiſtories of thoſe times it appears, that ſubſidies from the clergy, and fifteenths of laymen's goods, were ſoon after exacted; and that in the next reign, a new tax was levied on the ſubject for three years, which grew ſo exceeding heavy, that the commons applied to the king for a mitigation of it.

In this and the ſucceeding reigns, Mary's excepted, the abbey lands were granted away, chiefly to the courtiers, and favorites of the crown, on very eaſy terms, and hoſpitality enjoined the purchaſers, to compenſate for the loſs of that relief which the poor found in the monaſteries; but the meaſure of it being diſcretionary, it fell ſo far ſhort of the intention, that in 39 Eliz. there were no leſs than eleven bills brought into the houſe of commons for their relief, which were the firſt rudiments of the laws relating to the poor now in force.

In conſequence of this great revolution, large eſtates in Glouceſterſhire, as well as other counties, that belonged to the church, became the property of lay perſons; and ſome of them ſtill continue in the families to whom they were originally granted.

Here

Here it is proper to obſerve, that the demean lands that belonged to the Ciſtertians, Premonſtratenſes, Hoſpitallers, and Templars, whoſe houſes were founded before the council of Lateran, 1215, were diſcharged from the payment of tythes; as were all thoſe that belonged to the other houſes of the two firſt mentioned orders, though of a later foundation, which being above the value of 200 l. per. ann. were not diſſolved by the ſtatute of 27 H. 8. This accounts for many exemptions from tythes.

Of Advowſons, Patronage, Preſentation, &c.

The parochial clergy were formerly well provided for, till the patrons of churches found out a method of purchaſing maſſes and obits of the monaſteries at no expence, by giving, inſtead of lands, the advowſons of churches. The monaſteries ſent their vicar to officiate at the pariſh church, for the ſmall tythes and offerings, reſerving the great ones, or the greater part of them, to themſelves. At the diſſolution, ſome of theſe were diſpoſed of to the beſt bidders, or greateſt favorites, and ſo became lay property, and are what we now call impropriations: others of them were appointed to the erecting or augmenting of ſome biſhoprick, deanery, or religious foundation; and are called appropriations; theſe terms are often uſed indiſcriminately, but not by perſons of judgment.

Parſons have not the fee ſimple of their livings, but impropriations and appropriations are perpetuities; and becauſe thoſe who have them are owners of the fee, they are called proprietarii.

At the Norman conqueſt, when the nation was divided into 60,215 knights fees, 28,000 belonged to the clergy, beſides tythes, offerings, and other perquiſites; but there were then 45,000 churches, and 52,000 chapels in the kingdom; whereas the preſent number of both is about 10,000, whereof 3,845 are impropriations. There are 290 pariſh churches in Glouceſterſhire, of which 140 are impropriations; which is the reaſon that ſome of the parochial clergy have ſo ſcanty a pittance, under the miſapplied denomination of livings.

The learned hiſtorian, whoſe ſentiments and expreſſions I have ſo often adopted and uſed in the courſe of this work, thinks it reaſonable that the clergy ſhould have an income to enable them to live independently, and in proportion to the orders of the other learned profeſſions. It ſhould be certain, and keep pace with the price of proviſions. All theſe and many other good purpoſes, might be anſwered, by appointing a quantity of land in every pariſh to the miniſter, inſtead of tythes; concerning which there are ſo many diſputes betwixt them and their pariſhioners. And it is with pleaſure, that I find this method purſued, where new incloſures are made by act of parliament. It is uſual to allow the miniſter about one ſeventh, or one eighth of the land, for his portion.

When the chriſtian religion was firſt eſtabliſhed in England, kings began to build cathedral churches, and to make biſhops; and afterwards in imitation of them, ſeveral lords of manors founded particular churches, on ſome part of their own lands, and endowed them with glebe, reſerving to themſelves and their heirs a right to preſent a fit perſon to the biſhop, when the church ſhould become void. This right is called an advowſon, and he that hath it is called the patron. By the common law therefore, the right of patronage is a real right, and deſcends to the heirs and ſucceſſors, in ſome meaſure like lands and tenements. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 184. Originally, the right of nomination of fit perſons to officiate through the dioſceſes, was in the biſhops, but for the encouragement of pious undertakings, ſuch as building churches and endowing them, they permitted the benefactors to nominate, reſerving to themſelves an intire right to judge of the fitneſs of the perſons ſo nominated. And what was the practice, became, in proceſs of time, to be the law of the church. Gibſ. Codex, 2d. edit. 756.

If a preſentation be made to a chapel of eaſe as to a church, by the name of eccleſia, it will change the nature of it, and make it a church. Nat. Brev. 32. Alſo when the queſtion was, whether it were eccleſia, aut capella, pertinens ad matricem eccleſiam? the iſſue was, whether it had baptyſterium et ſepulturam? for if it had the adminiſtration of the ſacraments and ſepulture, it was in law judged a church. 2 Inſt. fol. 363.

A RECTORY is an intire pariſh church, with all its rights, glebes, tythes, and other profits whatſoever. Spelman. But the word rectoria is often uſed for the rector's manſe, or parſonage houſe. Paroch. Ant. 179.

PARSON, perſona, ſignifies the rector of a church; ſo called becauſe he is bound, by virtue of his office, in propria perſona ſervire Deo.

VICAR, vicarius, quaſi vice fungens rectoris. At firſt a vicar was a mere curate to the impropriator of the church, removable at pleaſure, as prieſts in antient times, when there were no particular pariſhes, were only curates to the biſhops; but by degrees the vicars got a ſettled maintenance of the glebe, and ſome kinds of tythes, and now claim their dues, either by endowment, or by preſcription. Where any church is a vicarage, it may be preſumed that it formerly belonged to ſome monaſtery. There were no vicarages earlier than king John.

A DONATIVE is a ſpiritual preſentment, be it church, chapel or vicarage, which is in the free gift, or collation of the patron, without making any preſentation to, or having admiſſion, inſtitution, or induction, by or from the biſhop. And it is exempt from all eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction.

A PECULIAR ſignifies a particular pariſh, or church, that hath juriſdiction within itſelf for probate of wills, &c. exempt from the ordinary, and the biſhop's courts. It is an antient privilege of of the ſee of Canterbury, that all manors, or advowſons belonging to it are exempt from the ordinary, and are reputed peculiars, of which there are fifty-ſeven in the province.

CHURCH-WARDENS are officers yearly choſen by the pariſhioners, or by the miniſter and pariſhioners, according to the cuſtom of the place, to look to the church and church-yard, and to ſuppreſs prophaneneſs and immorality, &c. They are a corporation, and may ſue for any thing belonging to their church, or the poor of their pariſh. In the antient epiſcopal ſynods, the biſhops ſummoned credible perſons out of every pariſh, to give information of the diſorders of clergy and people. Theſe were called teſtes ſynodales, and were in after times a kind of impannelled jury, who were upon oath to preſent all heretics, and other irregular perſons. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 649. And theſe in proceſs of time became ſtanding officers, eſpecially in great cities, and from hence were called ſynodſmen, and by corruption ſideſmen. They are alſo ſometimes called queſtmen, from the nature of their office, in making inquiry concerning offences. But for the moſt part this office is now devolved upon the church-wardens. Dr. Burn's Eccleſ. Law.

Pariſh regiſters were inſtituted by lord Cromwell, in September, anno 1538, while he was vicar-general to king H. 8.

TYTHES, tenths, diſmes, decimæ, all ſignify the tenth part of the fruits of the earth, of beaſts, &c. They are given to the clergy in recompence of their attending their office. Mr. Selden has ſhewn that tythes were not introduced here in England till towards the end of the eighth century, about 786, when pariſhes and eccleſiaſtical benefices came to be ſettled. In the early ages of the Chriſtian church, the people diſpoſed of their offerings, in the room of which tythes are now legally ſubſtituted, in various manners; now to prieſts, now to abbats, now to the poor; and when they were offered to baptiſmal or epiſcopal churches, they were received as indefinite offerings, the quantity whereof was wholly arbitrary, in reſpect of any conſtitution or general law in uſe; but ſome kind of offering was neceſſary to be made, on pain of excommunication. And it ſeems, the diſpoſition of the offerings was ſo in the patron's power, by the practice of ſome places, that he might aſſign a certain portion of them to the miniſter of the church, and employ the reſt at his pleaſure. About the year 780 or 800, laws were made by Charles king of France, Italy, and Lombardy, and afterwards emperor, for the payment of tythes. Pope Innocent III. about the year 1200, decreed the tythes to be paid to the pariſh prieſt; and though ſubjects of this nation were not bound by his decree, yet as it was judged reaſonable, it became cuſtomary here, and the cuſtom in time grew into a law. Religious perſons antiently paid no tithes of lands in their own poſſeſſion, but this privilege was reſtrained by pope Adrian.

GLEBE is a portion of land, meadow or paſture, belonging to the parſonage or vicarage, over and above the tythes.

COMPOSITION, an agreement or contract between a parſon, patron and ordinary, &c. for money, or other things, in lieu of tythes, called real compoſition. An agreement between the parſon and the pariſhioners, to pay ſo much inſtead of tythes, is called a perſonal contract; and though confirmed by the ordinary, yet that doth not make it a real compoſition, becauſe he ought to be a party to the deed. March's Rep. 87. And by 13 Eliz. c. 10. ſhall not bind the ſucceſſor, unleſs made for twenty-one years, or three lives. Compoſitions were made at firſt for a valuable conſideration, ſo that though in proceſs of time, upon the increaſe of the value of lands, they do not amount to the value of the tythes, yet cuſtom prevails, and from hence ariſes a modus decimandi.

PROCURATIONS are ſums of money which pariſh prieſts pay to the biſhop, or archdeacon, ratione viſitationis. They were antiently paid in neceſſary victuals, for the viſitor and his attendants, but turned into money, on account of the many abuſes of the viſitors. Complaint was made to pope Clement IV. that the archdeacon of Richmond, viſiting the dioceſe, travelled with 103 horſes, twenty-one dogs, and three hawks, which vaſt equipage was ſo oppreſſive to the religious houſes as to occaſion the ſpending in an hour as much as would have maintained the monks a long time. Mon. Angl. 2 tom. p. 165.

FIRST-FRUITS, annates, primitiæ, are the profits of every ſpiritual living for one year, given in antient time to the pope, through all Chriſtendom; but tranſlated to the king, here in England, by ſtatute 26 H. 8. c. 3. But what pope firſt impoſed firſt-fruits, hiſtorians do not agree. 4 Inſt. 120. Sir Robert Atkyns ſays it was done in the year 1316.

MORTUARY is a gift left by a man at his death to his pariſh church, in recompence of his perſonal tythes and offerings, not duly paid in his life-time. It was antiently called fauleſceat, which ſignifies ſymbolum animæ. Formerly, and until 21 H. 8. cap. 6. ſtatute-mortuaries were paid in cattle, the beſt to the lord for a heriot, the ſecond for a mortuary. At the conqueſt it was called a corſ-preſent, becauſe the beaſt was preſented with the body at the funeral. And ſometimes a principal, of which ſee a learned diſcourſe in the Antiquities of Warwickſhire, fol. 679. And Selden's Hiſt. of Tythes, 287. There is no mortuary due by law, but by cuſtom. 2 Inſt. 491.

SYNODAL is a tribute in money paid to the biſhop, or archdeacon, by the inferior clergy, at Eaſter viſitation; and it is called Synodals, becauſe it was paid yearly at the Eaſter ſynod. Theſe were the aſſemblies of the clergy, wherein they preſented their grievances for redreſs, which are now diſcontinued.

PENTECOSTALS, denarii de caritate, Whitſun-farthings, the cuſtomary oblations made to the cathedral

thedral church about the time of Pentecoſt, when the pariſh prieſts, and many of the people, went in proceſſion to viſit the mother church. This contribution, though at firſt but a voluntary gift, to help to maintain and adorn the biſhop's ſee, or cathedral church, was afterwards charged as a ſettled due upon the pariſh prieſt.

SANCTUARIES were places privileged by the prince for the ſafe-guard of offenders. The Jews had cities of refuge; the Athenians and Romans had their ſanctuaries; but our antient kings of England had them in greater reverence than any others in their time; for ſuch as had committed even felonies and treaſons, were permitted to take ſhelter in them, provided they acknowleged their crimes within forty days, and ſubmitted themſelves to baniſhment; mean while, if any layman expelled them, he was excommunicated; if any clerk, he was made irregular; but afterwards, no man might relieve them. Staunf. Pl. Cor.——Sanctuaries were taken away by ſtat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 2. ſ. 7.

The coifs, which the judges wear on the crown of their heads, are ſaid to have come into uſe in the following manner. In early ages the clergy filled moſt of the places of great profit, truſt and power, in the gift of the crown, as indeed there were few in thoſe days who had learning enough to acquit themſelves properly beſide them. King Rich. I. having conſtituted Hubert Walter, (archbiſhop of Canterbury) the chief juſticiary of England, pope Innocent, by his brief, in the year 1198, required the king to remove the archbiſhop from that office, alledging that it did not become biſhops to be employed in ſecular affairs, and threatened the king with an interdict in caſe of refuſal. The king forthwith obeyed, and made Jeofry, the ſon of Peter, chief juſticiary in his place. However the clergy continued long after in civil employments belonging to juſtice; but, to ſave appearances, they changed their habit; and to cover their ſhaved heads, introduced the uſe of coifs, which the judges and ſerjeants at law have continued to wear ever ſince.

Many of the officers in chancery were antiently of the eccleſiaſtical order, and the lord chancellor himſelf was called archicapellanus. The ſix clerks, who are conſiderable officers in that court, ſtill bear their primitive names: and the original occaſion why ſo many preſentations to churches were annexed to the great office of lord chancellor, was, that he might thereby be enabled to reward the officers of his court.

Of the Names of Places, and Perſons; of Titles, Dignities, &c.

MOST of the names of places and perſons are ſignificant; the former being generally expreſſive of the ſituation, the latter of the various ſentiments or conditions of thoſe that gave them: yet it is often difficult to trace them to their origin.

The Britons were the antient inhabitants of this iſland, the Romans ſubdued it, to them ſucceeded the Saxons, after them the Danes got footing here, and laſt of all it ſubmitted to the Normans. It is probable that ſome perſons of each nation, gave names to places where they had authority. This being the caſe, how difficult, how uncertain muſt the etymology of names be, in many inſtances. Some appear to be of Britiſh, others of Saxon original; and there are ſtill others, probably ſo mutilated and corrupted in common uſe, or given for reaſons ſo remote and obſcure, that I have not ventured to ſay any thing about them.

The explanation of the following words, which enter into the compoſition of the names of places, will direct to the etymology:

Names were given to men for diſtinction of perſons; but they were choſen upon occaſions too numerous to ſpecify. In early ages they were often given upon future good hope conceived by parents of their children. Among the Roman names we find Victor, a conqueror; Probus, honeſt, good; Caſtus, chaſte; Fauſtus, fortunate; &c. which Cicero calls bona nomina; for many wiſe men were of opinion that names were ominous. Claudius Rutillius hints at this notion in the following lines,

Nominibus certis credam decurrere mores?
Moribus, aut potius, nomina certa dari?

Antiently people had but one proper name, as David, Ulyſſes, Romulus, Caradoc, Hengiſt, Edmund, &c. The Romans were the firſt that took ſurnames, in confirmation of their league with the Sabines, whoſe names they uſed before their own; as the Sabines, in like manner, did the Roman.

Surnames obtained in France about the year 1000, and at the conqueſt, or a little before, were brought into England, from which time, by degrees, the better ſort took them; but they were not fully ſettled among the common people, till about the time of Ed. II. The cognomen was uſed by the Anglo-Saxons before this time, but that differed from the ſurname, becauſe it did not deſcend from the father to the ſon, but was a ſort of nick-name. ſome perſons have been of opinion, that ſurnames were ſo called from the Latin ſuper, or the French ſur, over; becauſe in early ages it was uſual to write the titles of perſons over their names, as Earl William; but the title was not the ſurnames.

name. Others have thought them ſo called, as being the name of the ſire, or father; but the better reaſon ſeems to be, becauſe they are ſuperadded to Chriſtian names. Domeſday book is perhaps the earlieſt record in which they are to be found: moſt of them were names of places, where thoſe that aſſumed them had reſided, or of which they were lords; as Roger de Laci, Roger de Belmont, Roger de Luri, Roger de Berchelai, &c. Others are diſtinguiſhed with filius, as Willielmus filius Norman, Drogo filius Ponz, &c. others again with the name of their office, as Robertus Diſpenſator, Walterius Baliſtarius, Humfridus Camerarius, &c. but there are ſome ſingle names in that book, placed at the end of every ſhire, as men of leaſt account; for it ſoon became a diſgrace to have but one name, as baſtards had. Robert of Glouceſter ſays, when king H. 1. would have married the great heireſs of Fitz-Haimon, lord of Glouceſter, to his baſtard ſon Robert, ſhe firſt refuſing, anſwered,

So vair eritage as ich habbe, it were me grete ſhame
Vor to abbe an louerd, bote he had an to name.

This paſſage is expreſſed with ſome variation, and more like the preſent language, by another author,

—— It were to me a great ſhame
To have a lord withouten his twa name.

So the king gave him the name of Fitz-roy, who was afterwards earl of Glouceſter.

The moſt antient ſurnames, and of beſt account, are deduced from places in Normandy, where, Mr. Camden ſays, there is not a village but gives name to ſome family in England; they are known by having the French de, du, des, de la, prefixt; and beginning or ending with font, fant, beau, belle, ſaint, mont, bois, aux, eux, val, vaux, cort, court, fort, champ, ville, &c. which laſt termination ſome have corrupted into field, others into well, as Somerfield, for Somerville; Boſwell, for Baſſeville, &c. Many noble families take their names from places in Brittany, and other parts of France; and there is hardly a village in Great Britain but hath given a family name: which in old Engliſh writings had of, or a, commonly ſet before them; as Thomas of Breadſtone, John a Standiſh, &c.

Rivers gave names to families, as Derwentwater, Trent, Tamer; and trees, as Box, Aſh, Pine, Aſp, &c. which in former times had at prefixed to them, as well as to ſome other kinds of local names, viz. At More, At Bower, At Wood, At Down, At Ho, At Beech, At Well, &c. The prefix hath been retained in ſome, as Atwood, Atho, Atwell; but removed from others. The diſtinctions of local names [de, of, a, at, and le] were ſtrictly obſerved in records till about the time of Edw. IV.

Names have been taken from trades, as Brewer, Chapman, Fuller; from offices, as Chamberlain, Steward, Marſhal; from eccleſiaſtical functions, as Biſhop, Dean; from civil honours, as King, Prince, Duke; from the qualities of the mind, as Wiſe, Sharp, Prat, i. e. ſubtil; from habits of the body, as Strong, Long; from colours, flowers, beaſts, birds, fiſhes, from Chriſtian names, nick names, and a variety of other things and occaſions, to exemplify which would take up too much room, and therefore ſhall mention only one inſtance more, juſt as I find it, on account of its ſingularity, without vouching for the truth of the ſtory. It is of a Grecian family, that obtained the name of Gephyri, i. e. Bridges; of whom it is ſaid, that the mother being delivered of nine children at a birth, in a fooliſh fear ſent ſeven of them to be drowned; the father coming inſtantly by, ſaved them on the bridge of the river, and ſo gave them the above name.

It is a good proof of antient deſcent, when the name of the perſon is the ſame with the place where he reſides, as Codrington of Codrington, Aylworth of Aylworth, Slaughter of Slaughter, and ſuch others.

In times paſt, gentlemen changed their names upon many occaſions, but moſt commonly upon changing their habitation. The heir took the father's ſurname, and the younger ſons aſſumed the names of the lands allotted them, which is the cuſtom in France at this time. Thus Hugh de Sudington gave to his ſecond ſon his manor of Frydon; to his third, that of Pantley; the ſons called themſelves De Frydon, De Pantley; and their poſterity afterwards removed the particle de. Some took their mother's name, others that of their progenitors, benefactors, &c. in remembrance of them; others changed their names at the king's command, as in the inſtance of king Ed. IV. who often told the family of the Picards that he loved them, but not their names, upon which they changed it, one of them taking the name of Ruddle, where he was born.

A Welch gentleman, temp. H. 8. being called at the pannel of the jury by the name of Thomas Ap Williams, Ap Thomas, Ap Richard, Ap Hoel, Ap Evan Vaughan, &c. was adviſed by the judge to leave that old manner; whereupon he afterwards called himſelf Moſton, from his principal houſe, and left that ſurname to his family.

Many names are ſtrangely contracted, as At Aſh into Taſh, At Abbey into Tabbey, Saint Oyly into Toly, Saint Ebbe into Tabbe, Saint Oſyth into Tows; others again are ſo diſtorted by the ignorant vulgar, to make them, according to their apprehenſions, ſignificant, that there is but a faint likeneſs either in ſound or orthography left. We find Wormwood for Ormond, Drinkwater for Derwentwater, Cuckold for Coxwold, and many others of the ſame nature. There is a remarkable inſtance of this abuſe in my own family, who about thirty years ago always wrote their name Rutter; but were induced by an ignorant perſon to change it, becauſe it ſhould ſignify ſomething they had heard of; and I have fooliſhly followed them.

Tho'

Tho' women with us, at their marriage, change their own ſurnames for thoſe of their huſbands, becauſe it is ſaid, non ſunt duo, ſed caro una; yet it is not ſo every where. In France, a woman of family retains her name, and uſeth it with her huſband's; as for inſtance, if Genevieve Villeville marry A. Belmont, ſhe then writes herſelf Genevieve Belmont Villeville;—and ſo of others.

The tranſlating of names into Greek or Latin is ſtill in uſe among the Germans, for he whoſe name is Ertſwept, or Blackland, will be Melancthon; if Newman, Neander; if Holiman, Oſiander; if Brook, Torrentius; if Fen, Paludanus, &c. And here in England there are a few that have two ſurnames, with aliàs betwixt them. Judge Catline having taken exception againſt a perſon in this reſpect, ſaid, no honeſt man had a double name, and came in with an aliàs; upon which the perſon aſked him, what exception his lordſhip could take to Jeſus Chriſt, aliàs Jeſus of Nazareth? which reply probably might ſoften his lordſhip's ſeverity.

It was uſual, among the antients, to give ſuch names to their kings and princes as ſhould contain the name of one of their deities. Thus the Tyrian, or Phænician princes were called Beleaſtartus, Abdaſtartus, Ithobaal, from their deities Baal and Aſtaroth. Nebo, a Babylonian idol, is a part of the names of Nebuchadonezar, Nabopollaſſar, and Nabonitus, kings of Babylon. Among the Egyptians were the kings Buſiris, Petoſiris, Oſiris, &c. having the Egyptian deity Siris in their names; as the Jewiſh kings Amaziah, Azariah, and divers others have in them one of the names of the true God. And the kings of our antient Britons had Belin, or Abellio, one of their deities in the names of Caſſibelin, Cynobelin, and of ſome others.

Adjuncts to names and titles are of very antient uſage. Dominus was attributed to the Roman emperors. Lucian ſays, ſpeaking of the beginning of the empire in Julius Cæſar,

Namq; omnes voces, per quas jam tempore tanto
Mentimur Dominis, hæc primum reperit ætas.

By which it ſhould ſeem, that thoſe titular attributes of greatneſs had their origin at Rome about that time. Auguſtus refuſed the title of Dominus, by public edict, perhaps becauſe it was then taken up by every private man. But Domitian was of another diſpoſition, for Suetonius informs us, that by his expreſs order, it was thus inſerted in the letters which carried his commands, Dominus et Deus noſter ſic fieri jubet. Diocleſian was the next of the emperors, after Domitian, that permitted himſelf to be ſo ſtiled. Conſtantine the Great was the firſt of the Chriſtian emperors that aſſumed it; and the learned Selden has ſhewn, that ſome title of the ſame ſignification hath been given to the princes of the Mahomedan ſtates, as well as to thoſe of every kingdom in Europe.

The Romans, under the late emperors, were very exact and particular in giving five ſorts of titles to their officers and great men. Illuſtris was the higheſt, appropriated to the Præfecti Prætorio of Italy and Gallia, the Præfecti of the city of Rome, the Magiſter Equitum, Magiſter Peditum, the Quæſtor Palatii, the Comes Largitionis, and to all that had voice in the ſenate.—Spectabilis was the ſecond title due to the lieutenants general, Comites of provinces, &c.—Clariſſimus was the third title peculiar to the Conſulares, Correctores, and Præſtes of provinces.—Perfectiſſimus was the fourth.—Egregius was the fifth; and none could have the two laſt but by patent, nor could Clariſſimus be otherwiſe obtained, except only by theſe great officers above ſpecified, in virtue of their offices.

The title of duke was antiently given to great men, in reſpect of their military employments. Under the Roman empire, he that had a province committed to him, not being a count, was called Dux. The firſt duke of the preſent acceptation, was the Black Prince, created duke of Cornwall by his father when in parliament, 11 Edw. 3. 1337. By this creation, not only the firſt born ſon of the kings of England, but the eldeſt living alſo, are always dukes of Cornwall.

As duke and earl were uſed with us for expreſſions of the ſame ſignification, many years before duke was made a diſtinct dignity; ſo earls and barons were ſometimes called marquiſſes. But Marchia or Marchiſius, of itſelf, did not antiently denote any title of honour, any more than Commarchiones regni noſtri, in the old Latin tranſlation of king Ina's laws, for ſuch as lived bınnan ðam ȝemæpum upeƿ þiceƿ, i. e. in the frontiers of the kingdom, which are called marches, from whence the word is derived. But afterwards it became a ſpecial dignity alſo, next beneath that of duke. The firſt of this ſort was Robert de Vere, earl of Oxford, created marquis of Dublin, 9 R. 2. which Walſingham ſays the lords took very ill, aſſigning their reaſons, quia nec prudentia cæteris, nec armis valentior extitiſſet.

Viſcount is a title of ſtill later date, and ſtands between earl and baron. The firſt was John Beaumont, created viſcount Beaumont, 18 E. 6.

Baron with us is the moſt antient title. Before the ſettling of the Norman monarchy, the kingdom was compoſed of earldoms and baronies. Moſt of the great barons fell in the battle of Eveſham, 1265, therefore others were called by writ; and becauſe they ſat in parliament with the former, they were called peers, [from pares,] being in every reſpect reputed equal to thoſe barons which were by tenure.

Coronets were firſt aſſigned to earls in the reign of king H. 3. to viſcounts by king J. 1. and to barons by king C. 2. after the reſtoration.

The title of baronet is hereditary. The firſt creation was by king James 1. on the twenty-ſecond day of May, in the ninth year of his reign. In the following year a decree was made that the baronets and their eldeſt ſons, being of full age, ſhould be knighted, and that they and their deſcendants ſhould bear the arms of Ulſter; i. e. on a field argent, a hand gules, either in a canton in their coat of arms, or in an eſcutcheon, at their own choiſe.

The name of knight, [in Latin, eques, miles; in French, chevalier] has been of various ſignifications. In Saxon it is written Cnihc or Cnyhc, and ſignifies a boy, a ſervant, an attendant; ſometimes a ſoldier. The chief gentlemen or freeholders of every county, becauſe they held by knights ſervice, were ſtiled Chivallers in the ſtatute of Weſtminſter the firſt, concerning the choiſe of coroners. Antiently great ſubjects, as well as their ſovereigns, gave this dignity; but the conferring of it has been long ſince confined to the ſovereign only. Various ceremonies have been uſed on this occaſion, ſuch as ſome antient knight girding the perſon with a ſword, and putting on his ſpurs, &c. &c. which the reader may ſee at large in Seldon's Tit. of Honor, c. 5. f. 34.

The eſquire [armiger, ſcutifer] is beneath the knight, and, in the opinion of the learned author juſt mentioned, is ſometimes ſupplied in our antient writings by ſerviens, or ſerjeant, which is the ſame word, and ſometimes diſtinguiſhed from it. In the ſtatute 23 H. 6. concerning the choiſe of knights of the ſhire, it is ſaid they muſt be either knights ou autrement tielx notables eſquiers, gentileſhomes del nativitie des meſmes les counties come ſoient ables deſtre chevalier, & nul home deſtre tiel chivalier que eſtoite en le degrer de Vadlet et deſouth. This word vadlet is the ſame as varlet, and has the ſignification of knave at preſent; though both of them were antiently names of civil degrees, or ſervice only. In the reign of R. 2. John de Kingſtone was created eſquire by patent; and Seldon thinks that then it might be acquired by ſervice or employment. At the time of creation, the eſquire received a collar of SS from the king, as an enſign of the dignity. It was the buſineſs of eſquires to attend their reſpective knights, each of whom had two, to the wars and elſewhere; but long before military ſervice was laid aſide, and ever ſince that time, thoſe whoſe birth or eminence have been thought worthy ſome note of diſtinction, above the rank of gentleman, have had that of eſquire given them.

I ſhall conclude this chapter with an obſervation of the learned Camden, who, ſpeaking of anceſtors, parentage, and names, recommends every man to ſay, "Vix ea noſtra voco; for, ſays he, "we are come to this preſent time by various "ſucceſſive deſcents, the low are deſcended from "the high, and contrariwiſe the high from the "low." He goes on. "If any vaunt of their "names, let them look to it, leſt they have in-"ania nomina; you know who ſaith, veſtra nomina "nunquam ſum admiratus; viros qui ea vobis reli-"querunt, magnos arbitrabor."

Glouceſterſhire.

CONSIDERED,

I. As INTIRE and UNDIVIDED.

II. As divided by Nature into the COTESWOLD, or Hill-country, the VALE, and the FOREST.

III. In its Political Diſtribution into Hundreds.

Of the Name, Situation, Extent, Antient State, Diviſions, Cuſtoms, Manufactures, Produce, &c. of the County.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE is ſo called from Glouceſter, a handſome city, its capital, and ꝛcyꝑe, a Saxon word, ſignifying a diviſion, from ꝛcyꝑan, to cut or ſeparate.

The inhabitants of this county and of Oxfordſhire were called by the Romans Dobuni, which Dion has miſtaken for Bodunni. The name is ſuppoſed to be derived from Dwfn, which in the Britiſh language ſignifies deep, * or low. By the Dobuni, therefore, were originally meant the inhabitants of the vale country; but gradually the word obtained a larger ſignification; for, as they increaſed, and removed to the higher lands, they were nevertheleſs conſidered as belonging to, and retained the ſame name with the people of the vale, whence they came; for in all countries the richer ſoils have been § firſt inhabited, but the people multiplying, extend their limits, till by degrees the leſs hoſpitable hills and woodlands yield to cultivation.

When the Romans were in Britain, there was no ſuch particular diſtrict as Glouceſterſhire. After they had ſubdued this part of the iſland almoſt as far as Scotland, they divided it into Britannia Prima et Secunda. The tract of country, which we now call Glouceſterſhire, lay in both provinces, becauſe the river Severn divided them for a conſiderable length. That part which lay on the S. E. of the river Severn was in Britannia Prima, under the government of the preſident reſiding at London. The other part, on the N. W. of the Severn, which was formerly much more woody than at preſent, and had been poſſeſſed by the Silures, was in Britannia Secunda, under the government of the preſident reſiding at Caerleon, in Monmouthſhire.

* Mr Camden has ſhewn, that many places have taken their names from ſuch a ſituation, of which Catabathmos in Africa, and Deepdale in Britain, are inſtances.

§ And men firſt building towns, themſelves did wiſely ſeat
Still in the bounteous vale; whoſe burthened paſture bears
The moſt abundant ſwarth. Drayton's Poliolb. S. 14.

After

After the Romans quitted Britain, in the 476th year from Julius Cæſar's coming over, the Saxons at length ſeized the reigns of government, and, the beſt part of the Iſland falling into their hands, was divided into ſeven kingdoms, of which Mercia was one. At this time we know nothing of any ſmaller diviſion of territory, for the name of the Dobuni, which diſtinguiſhed the inhabitants of Glouceſterſhire and Oxfordſhire, was utterly loſt.

When the Saxons, under the heptarchy, were firſt converted to chriſtianity, the kingdom and the dioceſe were of the ſame dimenſions, under one king and one biſhop. The firſt ſubdiviſion of kingdoms under them ſeems to be of eccleſiaſtical eſtabliſhment; for in the year 679, the kingdom of Mercia was divided into five biſhopricks, of which Florence of Worceſter ſaith, Wiccia † was the firſt.

This province of Wiccia was probably of the ſame extent with the antient biſhoprick of Worceſter, containing all that part of Glouceſterſhire ſituate on the S. E. of the Severn, with the city of Briſtol; the greateſt part of Worceſterſhire, and near the half of Warwickſhire, including the town of Warwick.

Why the Saxons gave this province and its inhabitants the reſpective names of Wiccia and Wicces, is not abſolutely certain. Mr. Camden, at the beginning of his account of Glouceſterſhire, with great diffidence conjectures, that the names might come from the Saxon word Wic, which ſome have thought to ſignify the creek of a river; and that becauſe the Wicces or Wiccij dwelt about the mouth of the Severn, they obtained that appellation. But if it be conſidered, that in Edgar's charter to Oſwald, the Coteſwold country about Blockley and Iccombe is called * Mons Wicciſca, Wiccian hill; and that Sceorſtan is expreſſly ſaid by Florentius to be in Wiccia, all at a great diſtance from any large river, one would willingly find a better reaſon for the name; which I think the ſame learned author has given in another place. In this province were many § briny wells, which the antient Engliſh in their language called Wiches, whence with little trouble they made ſalt; and 'tis not improbable but that Wiccia might thence obtain it's name, eſpecially as the Wiches were ſo conſiderable, that ſalt was antiently the chief article of commerce in that country. There is at preſent only one of them remaining, the others being cloſed up, becauſe it appears by antient writings that they were confined to one place for the making of ſalt, to prevent too great a conſumption of wood.

Glouceſterſhire was undoubtedly firſt ſo called when it was firſt made a county, which ſignifies the ſame as ſhire; the one coming from the French, the other from the Saxon language, both denoting one of thoſe portions into which the whole kingdom is divided, for the better government of it, and for the more eaſy adminiſtration of juſtice.

The dividing of the kingdom into counties has generally been attributed to king Alfred. Ingulphus affirms it; but Selden has clearly demonſtrated the contrary. The Pagi and Provinciæ, which Ingulphus mentions in the following paſſage, Totius Angliæ pagos & provincias in comitatus primus omnium commutavit, were the ſame with the comitatus, or ſhires. And, before Alfred's time, theſe Pagi had their ealdormen in them. Thoſe of Berkſhire, Devonſhire and Somerſetſhire, were Ethelwolfus, Ceorle, and Eanulf, under king Athelwolfe, father of Alfred; as they are expreſſly mentioned by Aſſerius Menevenſis, who lived in king Alfred's time. And we alſo learn by the ſame antient author, and by Ethelwerd, another writer of the Saxon times, that Ealhere, or Alchere was ealdorman of Kent, and Auda or Wuda, of Surry, at the ſame time that Oſric was ealdorman of Dorſet. Further, the charter of the foundation of Crowland abbey, granted by king Ethelbald, was ſubſcribed by the comites of Leiceſter and Lincoln: And laſtly, the original laws of Ina, king of Weſtſex, anno 720, ſay, That if an ealdorman were guilty of an eſcape, ꝥolıge hıꝛ ꝛcyꝑe, perdat comitatum ſuum, i. e. he ſhould loſe his ſhire. Alfred therefore could not be the firſt that began to divide the kingdom into counties.

This county lies in the Oxford circuit, is bounded on the N. W. by Herefordſhire; on the E. by Oxfordſhire, and a ſmall part of Berkſhire; on the S. by Wiltſhire; and on the W. by part of Somerſetſhire, the Britiſh channel, and Monmouthſhire. It extends itſelf in length from the pariſh of Clifford-Chambers, near Stratford upon Avon, to Clifton, beyond the city of Briſtol, in a S. W. direction, about ſeventy ſtatute-miles; and in breadth, from Leachlade, north-weſtward to the pariſh of Preſton, in the hundred of Botloe, about forty ſuch miles. Draw a ſtraight line lengthwiſe through the county, to touch each of the two firſt mentioned places, and another line to croſs it, from one of thoſe points of extreme breadth to the other, and they will interſect about Shurdington, nearly at right angles.

The form of the county reſembles an ellipſis, the N. E. end of which is more acute than the other. If five miles of the length, and ſix of the breadth, be abated for irregular jettings out at thoſe extremities, the ſuperficial content of the whole county will be nearly 1,100,000 acres. Notwith-

* Spelman reads it corruptly Monte Wittiſca, and the Monaſticon more corruptly Wibiſca. Add. to Camden, col. 617.

§ The old Chartulary mentions a ſalt-pit in the boundaries of Sceapwæſcetune [Shipſton upon Stour] a ſalt-well adjacent to Iccumb, on the weſt; a road called Salt-ſtreet near Euinlode; a ſalt-pit, or Saltere wælan, in the limits of Wulfrinton, to the eaſt of Worceſter. But the ſprings that were moſt famous and have ſurvived the memory of all their rivals, are thoſe near the river Salwarp, which gave both name and ſubſiſtence to a town, that grew up on their margin, now diſtinguiſhed by the name of Droit-wich; in Domeſday called Wich, in Saxon charters Wic, and ſometimes Salt Wic. Green's Survey of Worceſter, P. 15.

ſtanding this is conſiderably larger than a former eſtimate, [800,000] it will be found to come very near the truth.

A vaſt range of hills, covered with wood in many parts on the north-weſt ſide adjoining to the Vale, reaches from Campden, on the borders of Warwickſhire and Worceſterſhire, to Lanſdown, near Bath; and runs through the county lengthwiſe, a little obliquely with the courſe of the Severn; dividing, not very unequally, the Vale and the Foreſt part of the county from the Coteſwold.

Various parts of this chain of hills are denominated from the pariſhes in or near which they lie, and many great roads are carried down them. The turnpike-road from London to Worceſter leads down Broadway-hill; that from Stow to Tewkeſbury, down Stanway-hill; from Cirenceſter to Cheltenham, down Windaſs-hill; from London through Oxford, to Glouceſter, down Crickley-hill; but through Cirenceſter to Glouceſter, you deſcend Birdlip-hill: From the eaſt part of the county, to either of the paſſages over the Severn at Framilode or Newnham, the road is down Rodborough-hill; from Bath to Glouceſter, down Froceſter-hill; from Cirenceſter to Wotton, Durſley, and Berkeley, down Wotton, Durſley, and Stinchcombe hills, reſpectively; from Oxford to Briſtol, down Sodbury-hill; but from Oxford to Bath, down Fryſon-hill; and the great road from London to Briſtol leads down Tog-hill; ſo that there is no poſſibility of paſſing directly from Oxfordſhire, Berkſhire, or Wiltſhire, to the vale of Glouceſterſhire, without deſcending one of the hills in this great chain, which ſtands as a boundary between the Coteſwold and the Vale, the latter being again ſeparated from the Foreſt by the interpoſition of the great river Severn.

Nature having thus divided the county into three parts, let us take her for our guide, and ſurvey each of them diſtinctly in its order.

Of the COTESWOLD.

UNDER the denomination of the Coteſwold, I now include all that high country on the ſouth-eaſt ſide of the beforementioned range of hills which runs through the county. It is a noble champaign country, the reſidence of many of the nobility and gentry, and abounds in verdant plains, downs, corn-fields, parks, woods, and little vallies, well ſupply'd with ſprings and rivulets, and enjoys a fine healthy air, which, however, in the higher and more expoſed parts, has been thought too thin and cold for perſons of very tender and delicate conſtitutions.

It was antiently much over-run with woods, whence I conjecture it obtained its double name, for Coed, in the Britiſh language, and weold, in the Saxon, both ſignify a wood, and together make a kind of tautology, of which there are many like inſtances in the names of other places. And with great deference to Mr. Camden, it ſeems probable that all thoſe that have Cot, or Cotes in their compoſition, are derived from the beforementioned Britiſh word; and the preſent woody ſtate of ſuch places ſerves to ſtrengthen this opinion.

Tho' this part of the county lies high with reſpect to the vale, yet in itſelf it is not very hilly; for when the traveller has gained the ſummit of the great ridge already mentioned, he finds himſelf on the verge of an extenſive country, finely diverſified with groves and plains, and gently riſing grounds; plentifully watered with pleaſant ſprings, purling rills, and winding brooks, ſome running north-weſtward into the Severn, whilſt others, taking a contrary courſe, empty themſelves into the Thames, which takes its riſe in Glouceſterſhire, and is navigable for veſſels of thirty or forty tons burthen, in the ſame county where it firſt becomes a river.

This country was always famous for feeding numerous flocks of ſheep. Drayton has done it no little honour, who, in his poetic way, invokes the muſe

The beauties clean throughout that on his ſurface dweld.

T' whom Sarum's plain gives place, tho' famous for her flocks,
Yet hardly doth ſhe tythe our Cotſwold wealthy locks.
Though Lemſter him exceed for fineneſſe of her ore,
Yet quite he puts her downe for his abundant ſtore.
A match ſo fit as hee, contenting to her mind,
Few vales (as I ſuppoſe) like Ev'ſham hapt to find.
Nor any other wold like Cotſwold ever ſped,
So fair and rich a vale by fortuning to wed."

POLYOLBION. 14th Song.

Within the laſt forty years, prodigious improvements have been made here, by a courſe of huſbandry, firſt introduced into theſe parts by the late Mr. Richard Biſhop, once the moſt conſiderable ſeedſman in the kingdom; who brought the graſs-ſeeds, turnips, and clover into uſe, and taught the coteſwold farmers how to become an opulent people. 'Till that time their ſheep and other cattle were ſent to winter in the vale for want of fodder; but the preſent method in huſbandry, enables them to keep more than double the live ſtock they were uſed to do, upon their own lands, throughout the year.

Planting of fainfoin, clover, and turnips, anſwers two grand purpoſes to the coteſwold farmer. His cattle, whilſt they feed and fatten upon them, dung and fertilize the ſoil, which infallibly inſures a good ſucceeding crop of corn; ſo that under favourable circumſtances, and judicious management, the produce of an acre in this country will ſometimes equal that of a like quantity of land in the vale. However, if this be not always the caſe, it is generally allowed that the hill-country farmer has the advantage very conſiderably, ſince the vale lands are rented at double, or treble the price, and will not admit of proportionable improvement.

Saintfoin has long ſince been the produce of the Coteſwolds. Glouceſterſhire has the honour of leading the county of Norfolk in the culture of this valuable graſs, which ſir John Turner getting the knowledge of here, introduced into that county. The method of planting it is with barley or oats after turnips; but ſome perſons think it better ſown with wheat, to get ſtrong and ſecure againſt a dry ſummer, which is ſo pernicious to it when planted in the ſpring. This graſs is both fed and mow'd. It flouriſhes on the moſt ſtony land, and will laſt ſeven or eight years in pretty good vigour. When worn out, it is uſual to break it up, by paring and burning, preparatory for a crop of wheat or turnips.

The coteſwold huſbandry varies according to the ſtrength of the ſoil, and the ſkill of the farmer. The crops are planted in the following orders.——On good incloſed land, 1. Wheat. 2. Beans, or peaſe. 3. Barley, or oats with clover. —Or, 1. Turnips. 2. Barley. 3. Peaſe. 4. Oats and clover. 5. Wheat. 6. Turnips.——Or, 1. Barley. 2. Clover for two years. 3. Wheat. 4. Peaſe.—Or, on very light land, they ſometimes after a crop, lay down with ray-graſs and clover.

The common fields are cropped, every other year, with all ſorts of grain. And in ſuch places where envy leaſt prevails, and the farmers have diſcernment enough to ſee their own intereſt, they take a hitching out of the common field, by general conſent, and plant with turnips or peaſe, in the year for fallowing.

There are many ſpots of ſtrong land on this ſide the great ridge of hills, which are planted in the following order, 1. Turnips, to be fed with ſheep 'till the ſpring. 2. Barley with clover. 3. Wheat. 4. Peaſe, or Beans. 5. Barley with clover. 6. Wheat. 7. Turnips.

The farmers pen their ſheep upon the land univerſally, beſides which they uſe no kind of manure except that of the yard and ſtable. Perhaps a few, on the ſide of Oxfordſhire, may have made the experiment of woollen rags, but they are not at preſent likely to come into general uſe.

The common methods of planting peaſe here, are, ſetting in rows, and ſowing broad caſt. In both ways, about four buſhels of ſeed go to the acre. But I would recommend an improved one, practiſed in ſeveral parts of Wiltſhire. It is thus: With a plough, drawn by one horſe, they make three ſhallow furrows in the dreſſed land, about eighteen or twenty inches aſunder; into which, women following, throw the peaſe very regularly, at proper diſtances. A man coming after, covers the ſeed with earth by means of his foot, or a hoe, according as the land requires.

About three weeks after the plants appear, they flat hoe them, and about the ſame diſtance of time afterwards, draw the earth that is on one ſide of the rows, with a large hoe, over the roots and lower part of the plants, ſo as to lay them flat on the ground. When the bloſſoms are juſt dropt, and the kids appear, a perſon going betwixt the rows, plucks up thoſe plants that are backward in blow, which is called reaping them.

By this management the crop ripens together, and the corn is ſo very even, and ſo much ſuperior to what is raiſed in the common way, as to ſell for at leaſt 6*d.* a buſhel extraordinary. The two hoeings are done at about 5*s.* an acre, the expence of which, the ſaving in the ſeed will defray; for two buſhels and three pecks, or, at moſt, three buſhels will plant an acre in this way.

The farms on the Coteſwold, are from one hundred to five or ſix hundred pounds a year. The price of labour is 10*d.* a day in the winter; 1*s.* in the ſpring, 1*s.* 6*d.* in graſs mowing, and 1*s.* 8*d.* or 2*s.* for about five weeks at corn harveſt.

Many of the downs, common fields, and waſte lands, in this part of the county, have been lately incloſed, to the vaſt advantage of the proprietors of eſtates, and I apprehend of the kingdom in general; for, under favour, I will venture my opinion, that it is our intereſt to encourage agriculture rather than grazing, to which we have been too much inclined.

In former times, there were two things that operated very powerfully to the hindrance of agriculture. The great barons preferred grazing, becauſe it required fewer hands than the plough employ'd, ſo that their vaſſals could be better ſpared from it, to attend them in their wars with the crown, and with each other, in which they were almoſt continually engaged.

Another thing was, before the woollen manufactures were brought into England, and from that time 'till the reign of queen Elizabeth, we were ſuppoſed to derive great advantages from the ſale of unwrought wool to the Flemings; therefore breeding and feeding of ſheep was the general practice, and it might perhaps be encouraged by government, for the king had a large revenue ariſing from the ſale of that article.

This neglect of agriculture occaſioned frequent famines, and great peſtilence enſued. In the reign of that unhappy prince, Edward the Second, in the years 1314, 1315, and 1317, wheat ſold for 3*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.* a quarter; and the next year it advanced to 6*l.* 14*s.* 7*d. which, conſidering all circumſtances at that time, was at leaſt equal to 8*l.* a buſhel at preſent.

* See an inquiry into the Prices of wheat &c. But I think there muſt be ſome miſtake in this account.

Peſtilence

Peſtilence and famine might fill the nation with horror; but nothing beſides long experience could convince it of its error in the neglect of agriculture, which a few only of the moſt ſenſible men diſcovered, and complained of, among whom was the great Sir Thomas More.—"Our flocks of ſheep, ſays he, which were formerly ſo mild and gentle, are now become ſo voracious, as not only to devour men, but even fields, houſes, and walled towns are laid waſte and depopulated by them;" meaning, no doubt, that the people, wanting that employment which agriculture afforded them, many were obliged to leave their habitations, and ſo became thieves and ſtrollers.

In the fourth year of king H. 7. the converting of arable land into paſture, was reſtrained by a ſtatute, which rather prevented things from growing worſe than made them better. But that which above all other things has moſtly tended to promote agriculture, was the bounty on the exportation of corn, † firſt granted by parliament in the year 1689, which has induced a general ſpirit for incloſing the waſte lands and common fields throughout the kingdom; a method of improvement adopted very early in Glouceſterſhire.

Some objections have been raiſed againſt incloſing, but it would be extending this digreſſion too far to take any notice of them here.

Mr. Camden, who was a diligent inquirer, and faithful hiſtorian, takes notice of the wool of this country, for its whiteneſs and fineneſs, wherein he has been followed by a great number of writers who had either never ſeen, or ſeeing, had no judgment in that article. What kind of wool this may have been four or five hundred years ago, I can have no knowledge of, except from hiſtory; but can ſpeak with certainty as to the preſent condition of it. The ſheep of this country incline to the large ſize; for, ſince by the improvements in agriculture, the quantity of food for cattle is greatly increaſed, the farmers have both enlarged their flocks and improved the breed, by introducing the Leiceſterſhire ram, which is ſometimes brought hither in little carriages made for that purpoſe. I have been informed, that 40*l.* has been paid for the uſe of one of theſe rams for a ſeaſon only. They are eſteemed the ſtouteſt ſheep in the kingdom, and bear prodigious fleeces, the hair of which is coarſe and long; ſo that the coteſwold wool, which was never fine within the memory of any man I have converſed with on that ſubject, is now become ſtill coarſer, by thus mixing the breed. The longeſt ſort of it is combed for worſted ſtuffs, whilſt the ſhort is wrought up in cloth for the army, for the Eaſt-India company trade, and other coarſe goods. Herefordſhire, one of the adjoining counties, may juſtly boaſt of the fineſt fleeces in the kingdom. The difference in the quality may in ſome meaſure be judged of by their reſpective prices in the ſame year. In 1767, the beſt coteſwold fleeces ſold for 8*d.* 3 qrs. a pound, when the beſt Herefordſhire brought two ſhillings.

There is no coal-pit in this part of the county; but at Stratton, about a mile from Cirenceſter, they have often found what the miners call plodding-coal; particularly as the labourers were digging a well, about four years ſince, a good quantity was taken up there. I have now by me three ſpecimens of different foſſil ſubſtances found at that time, one of which is the common pit-coal; another is very black, with a grain perfectly reſembling a piece of oak, and not ſo heavy as the firſt; the third is a piece of iron ore. There is a great probability that a good ſtratum of coal might be found there, as every appearance ſeems to indicate it, and I am told that the plodding-coal is a circumſtance of the ſtrongeſt preſumption of it.

About twenty years ago, the workmen diſcovered a ſmall vein of coal, of an inch thick, in one of the fine free-ſtone quarries, in the pariſh of Barnſley. It lay nine feet below the ſurface, upon a bed of blue clay. They traced it 'till 'twas imperceptible, and I don't find that circumſtances encouraged them to examine further.

Coal has alſo been found in the pariſh of Siddington St. Peter, by people that were digging a well there, the water of which was ſo black and ſtinking as not to be fit for culinary purpoſes. Mr. Bathurſt, who was lord of the manor, was informed of the diſcovery, and it is aſtoniſhing that it was not followed by a ſtrict and careful examination, in order to the opening of a pit, eſpecially as there was a great probability of ſucceſs. A good coal-mine in either of theſe places, round which for many miles firing is dear, would be a prodigious treaſure to the proprietor, and a great advantage to the country, which is ſupply'd by land carriage with that neceſſary article, either from the pits beyond Sodbury, or from Glouceſter, both at great diſtances.

On the Coteſwolds is a cuſtomary annual meeting at Whitſuntide, vulgarly called an Ale, or Whitſun-ale. Perhaps the true word is Yule, for in the time of druidiſm, the feaſts of yule or the grove, were celebrated in the months of May or * December. Theſe ſportsare reſorted to by great numbers of young people of both ſexes, and are conducted in the following manner. Two perſons are choſen, previous to the meeting, to be lord and lady of the yule, who dreſs as ſuitably as they can to the characters they aſſume. A large empty barn, or ſome ſuch building, is provided for the lord's hall, and fitted up with ſeats to accommodate the company. Here they aſſemble to dance and to regale in the beſt manner their circumſtances and the place will afford, and each young fellow treats his girl with a ribband, or favour. The lord and lady honour the hall with their preſence, attended by the ſteward, ſword-bearer, purſe-bearer, and mace-bearer, with their ſeveral badges or enſigns of office. They have likewiſe a page, or train bearer, and a jeſter, dreſt in a party coloured jacket, whoſe ribaldry and geſticulation contribute not a little to the entertainment of ſome part of the company. The lord's muſic, conſiſting generally of a pipe and tabor, is employ'd to conduct the dance.

All theſe figures, handſomely repreſented in baſſo-relievo, ſtand in the north wall of the nave of Cirenceſter church, which vouches ſufficiently for the antiquity of the cuſtom. Some people think it a commemoration of the antient drink-lean, a day of feſtivity formerly obſerved by the tenants and vaſſals of the lord of the fee, within his manor, the memory of which, on account of the jollity of thoſe meetings, the people have thus preſerved ever ſince. It may, notwithſtanding, have its riſe in druidiſm, as on theſe occaſions they always erect a may-pole, which is an eminent ſign of it.

I ſhall juſt remark, that the mace is made of ſilk, finely plaited with ribbands on the top, and filled with ſpices and perfume, for ſuch of the company to ſmell to as deſire it. Does not this afford ſome light towards diſcovering the original uſe, and account for the name of the mace, now carried in oſtentation before the ſteward of the court, on court days, and before the chief magiſtrate in corporations; as the preſenting of ſpices by great men at their entertainments was a very antient practice?

Mr. Robert Dover, who lived in the reign of king J. 1. inſtituted certain diverſions on the Coteſwold, called after his name, which were annually exhibited about Willerſey and Campden. Even now there is ſomething to be ſeen of them, every Thurſday in Whitſun-week, at a place about half a mile from Campden, called Dover's Hill.

The coteſwold games, and their patron, are celebrated in a ſmall collection of poems, intituled Annalia Dubrenſia, written by Michael Drayton, Ben. Johnſon, and about thirty other eminent perſons of their time, moſtly addreſt to the patron of the games; by means of which, if you believe the poet,

Cotſwold, that barren was, and rough before,
Is Tempe now become, Cotſwold no more.
Pan may go pipe in barren Malvern chaſe;
The fawns and Satyrs ſeek ſome other place.
Cotſwold is now th' epitome of myrth;
And joy, preſaged erſt, is come to birth.
Olympus' mount, that e'en to this day fills
The world with fame, ſhall to thy Cotſwold hills
Give place and honour. Hercules was firſt
Who thoſe brave games begun: Thou, better nurſt,
Doſt in our anniverſe moſt nobly ſtrive
To do in one year what he did in five.

The meetings were very numerous, as may be collected from the following lines:

——————— On Cotſwold hills there meets
A greater troop of gallants than Rome's ſtreets
E'er ſaw in Pompey's triumphs: Beauties too,
More than Diana's beavie of nymphes could ſhow.
On their great hunting days, ———————
——————— there in the morn,
When bright Aurora peeps, a bugle horn
The ſummons gives, ſtreight thouſands fill the plains
On ſtately courſers.

I have ſelected out of this collection, part of an Eclogue, by Mr. Thomas Randall, of Cambridge, which is one of the beſt of thoſe pieces, deſcribing the coteſwold diverſions. The ſpeakers are Collen and Thenot.

Collen. Laſt evening, lad, I met a noble ſwayne,
That ſpurr'd his ſprightly palfry o'er the playne;
His head with ribbands crown'd, and deck'd as gay
As any laſſe upon her bridal day.
I thought (what eaſy faiths we ſhepherds prove!)
This, not the bull, had been Europa's love.
I aſk'd the cauſe; they told me this was he Whom this day's triumph crown'd with victory.
Many brave ſteeds there were, ſome you ſhould find
So fleet as they had been ſons of the winde.
Others with hoofs ſo ſwift beate o'er the race,
As if ſome engine ſhot 'um to the place.
So many, and ſo well wing'd ſteeds they were,
As all the broode of Pegaſus had been there.
Rider and horſe could not diſtinguiſh'd be;
Both ſeem'd conjoin'd, a centaur's progeny.
A numerous troupe they were, yet all ſo light,
Earth never groan'd, nor felt 'um in their flight.
Such royal paſtimes Coteſwold mountains fill,
When gentle ſwains viſit her glorious hill;
Where with ſuch packs of hounds they hunting go,
As Cyrus never woon'd his bugle to;
Whoſe noiſe is muſical, and with full cries
Beat o'er the fields, and eccho thro' the ſkyes.
Orion hearing, wiſh'd to leave his ſphere,
And call his dogs from heaven, to ſport it there.

There, ſhepherd, there the ſolemn games be plaid,
Such as great Theſeus or Alcides made;
Such as Apollo wiſhes he had ſeen,
And Jove deſires had his invention been.
The Nemæan and the Iſthmian paſtimes ſtill,
Though dead in Greece, ſurvive on Cotſwold hill.

Thenott. Happy O hill! the gentle graces now
Shall trip o'er thine, and leave Citheron's brow;
Parnaſſus' clift ſhall ſinke below his ſpring,
And ev'ry muſe ſhall on thy frontlet ſing:

The goddeſſes again in ſtrife ſhall bee,
And from mount Ida, make appeal to thee;
Olympus pay thee homage, and in dread
The aged Alps ſhall bow his ſnowy head.

But gentle Collen, ſay, what God or man
Fame we for this great worke, Daphnis or Pan?

COLL. Daphnis is dead, and Pan hath broke his reed;
Tell all your flocks 'tis jovial DOVER's deed.
Behold the ſhepherds in their ribbands goe,
And ſhortly all the nymphs ſhall wear 'um too.
Amaz'd to ſee ſuch glorie meet together,
Bleſs DOVER's pipe, whoſe muſicke call'd 'um hither.
Sport you, my rams, at ſound of DOVER's name;
Big-bellied ewes, make haſte to bring a lambe
For DOVER's fold. Go maids, and lillies get,
To make him up a glorious coronet.
Swains, keep his holiday, and each man ſweare
To ſaint him in the ſhepherd's kalendar.

Mr. William Durham, in another copy of verſes, hath thus preſaged the laſting fame of this public ſpirited man:

Firſt ſhall the tender lambs with tygers dwell,
And fearful harts ſhall lodge with lions fell;
Firſt ſhall the glorious ſtar-beſtudded ſkie
Want light, and Neptune's regiment be drie;
Firſt ſhall the courtiers leave their ſweet embraces;
Ladies to plaſter o'er their furrow'd faces;
* * * * * * * * * * * *
Firſt ſhall Nyctimene, that bird of night,
To flie at noon take pleaſure and delight,
Ere Cotſwold ſhepherds, on their jointed reeds,
Shall ceaſe to ſing his fame-deſerved deeds;
Who from their tombs, wherein they were inthrall'd,
The antient dancing Druides hath call'd.

But thoſe that allow Mr. Durham a competent ſhare of merit as a poet, will probably refuſe him their ſuffrage as a prophet; for already we hear but little on the Coteſwolds of his worthy friend Mr. Dover, ſince whoſe time the diverſions have alſo much declined, for want of ſo good a patron.

Damnoſa quid non imminuit dies! HOR.

Of the VALE.

THE Vale of Glouceſterſhire lies chiefly on the ſouth-eaſt of the river Severn, which gives life and ſpirit to the ſoil. For extent and fertility, it is not exceeded, nor do I know that it can be equalled by any in the kingdom; therefore Drayton, perhaps with more hiſtoric juſtneſs than poetic licence, gives her the ſovereignty, in the following lines:

——— "I, which am the queene
Of all the Britiſh vales, and ſo have ever been Since Gomer's giant brood inhabited this iſle,
And that of all the reſt myſelf may ſo enſtile."

It is honoured with the reſidence of ſeveral of the nobility and gentry, who have eſtates in this county.

What it more antiently was, may be ſeen in a paſſage taken by Mr. Camden out of a book intituled De Pontificibus, written by William of Malmeſbury. "The Vale of Glouceſterſhire," ſays he, "yields plenty of corn and fruit, in ſome "places by the natural richneſs of the ground, in "others by the diligence of the country men; "enough to excite the idleſt perſon to take pains, "when it repays his labour with the increaſe of "an hundred fold. Here you may behold high-"ways and public roads full of fruit trees, not "planted; but growing naturally. The earth bears "fruit of its own accord, much exceeding others "both in taſte and beauty, many ſorts of which "continue freſh the year round, and ſerve the "owner 'till he is ſupplied by a new increaſe. "No county in England has ſo many or ſo good "vineyards † as this, either for fertility, or ſweet-"neſs of the grape. The wine has in it no un-"pleaſant tartneſs, or eagerneſs, and is little † "Many places in this county, ſays ſir Robert Atkyns, bear "the name of vineyards, from thence it has been concluded that "wine has heretofore been made in theſe parts; but theſe vine-"yards were only apple-orchards, as may appear by many records "where manors were held of the king, and the tenants were "obliged to pay yearly veſſels of wine, made of apple-fruit. One "record is 6 Joh. rot. 48. Walter de Hevene held the manor of "Runham, in the county of Norfolk, by yielding yearly two "veſſels of wine, made of pearmains, to the king, at his "exchequer, on the feaſt of St. Michael. Another record is full "to this point; William Mansfeld, 18 E. 2. was ſeized of a "vineyard, ſix acres of arable, and there acres of wood, in Biſley. "Now it is wholly improbable than any other vineyard than "that of apples could grow in that cold barren place; one might "as ſoon gather grapes of thiſtles." Ancient and preſent State of Glocesterſhire, p. 32.

Thus the learned author determines poſitively againſt our vineyards; but let us examine the ſtrength of his argument. In the firſt record a certain liquor is termed, wine made of pearmains, by which it appears that ſuch as wrote in Latin uſed a periphraſis to deſcribe cider, and for this reaſon, becauſe there is no Latin word for that liquor; but how does that prove that our vineyards were only apple orchards? The ſecond record ſir Robert declares to be full to this point; and indeed it is fully againſt him, for it proves that William Mansfield was ſeized of a vineyard, &c. in Biſley. But beſides this evidence, Domeſday is ſufficient to determine the diſpute, where, in the account of Stonehouſe in this county, it is thus recorded: Ibi duo arpenz vinee; and I believe nobody will contend that vinea, in this place, ſignifies an apple orchard, or any thing elſe but a plantation of vines. Laſtly, ſir Robert oppoſes improbability to plain evidence, and thinks that no other vineyard than that of apples could grow in Biſley; but he might have known that about Chalford, in that pariſh, are many warm and ſheltered ſpots of ground of a ſouth aſpect, extreamly ſuitable to the purpoſe in queſtion. The monk of Malmeſbury, who lived on the borders of this county, knew it well, and expreſsly mentions the Glouceſterſhire vineyards and grapes; and as his account is ſupported by the evidence of Domeſday, and other records, I give him full credit againſt all vague opinions, that the vineyards he mentions were not apple-orchards, but plantations of the vine.

" inferior to the French in ſweetneſs. The " villages are very thick, the churches handſome, " and the towns populous and many."

Camden ſays, the reaſon why ſo many places in the county are called vineyards, was, on account of the plenty of wines made here; " and that " they yield none now, is rather to be imputed " to the ſloth of the inhabitants, than the in- " diſpoſition of the climate." But with Mr. Camden's leave, the lands are employ'd to better advantage, and it is for that reaſon that we have no vineyard in the county at preſent.

In this Vale is made that fine cheeſe, ſo deſervedly eſteemed not only in Great Britain, but in all countries wherever it has been carried. The hundreds of Berkeley, of Thornbury, and the lower diviſion of Grumbald's-aſh, produce the beſt. It is made of various thickneſſes, from about ten pounds to a quarter of a hundred weight each. The thick ſort is called double Glouceſterſhire, and double Berkeley, and uſually ſells upon the ſpot at ſix-pence a pound. It requires to be kept to an age proportionable to its ſize and richneſs, to make it ready for the table.

Cider is another production of this Vale, in which I believe no county in the kingdom can rival it. There is great variety of it, which I ſhall divide into three claſſes: 1. The ſtout-bodied, rough, maſculine cider, made of Longney-ruſſet, Hagley-crab, Winter-pippin, &c. 2. The full-bodied, rich, pleaſant cider, of the Harvey-ruſſet, woodcock, golden-pippin, winter-quinning, &c. and 3. A ſort made of the Bodnam apple, fox-whelp, and various ſpecies of kernel fruit; which, tho' I have placed laſt in order, might perhaps have ſtood with more propriety in the ſecond claſs, being of a middle nature between the other two, as partaking of the properties of both. There is alſo ſome ſtyre made in the vale, but not in that perfection as in the foreſt of Dean.

Perry being a liquor of a diſtinct ſpecies, muſt not be omitted. The beſt of the produce of this country is made of the Tainton ſquaſh pear, the Barland pear, and the mad pear. His late Royal Highneſs the prince of Wales, father of his preſent Majeſty, on his tour through this country in 1750, gave it the name of La Champaigne d' Angleterre. It is a delicious, ſprightly liquor, when in perfection; but a perſon when hot ſhould never drink of it freely.

Moſt places in Glouceſterſhire, within ten or twelve miles eaſt and north-eaſt of Briſtol, abound in coal mines, ſome of them of a prodigious depth, and are therefore greatly incommoded with water, which is taken off by the means of fire-engines. The coal is ſomething of the nature of that of Newcaſtle; about one half of it riſing in large lumps, the reſt about the ſize of gravel; but when thrown on a good fire, it melts, forms itſelf into one maſs, and is very durable. The upper part of the county is ſupply'd with coal out of Shropſhire, down the river Severn, which burns quick and lively, but is not ſo durable as our own.

It is aſſerted by ſir Robert Atkyns, p. 30. that if a line were laid from the mouth of the Severn to Newcaſtle, and ſo paſſed round the globe, coal is to be found within a degree of that line, and ſcarce any where elſe in the world. But the remark is unaccountably whimſical and ridiculous, as facts and experiments are wanting, and always muſt be wanting to ſupport it.

The veins of coal, found about Briſtol, are covered with a ſhell of black, hard, ſtrong ſubſtance, called Wark, which will ſplit like blue ſlate, but is much more brittle, and not nearly ſo hard. Upon dividing this Wark, there is often found upon one of the ſeparated ſurfaces, the perfect ſhape of a fern-leaf, as if it had been engraven by a ſkilful hand.

The lower part of the Vale from Arlingham downwards, on the ſouth-eaſt of the Severn, is very liable to inundations from that river. Several commiſſions have been iſſued for the preſervation of theſe lands, the firſt of which to be found on record was 5 E. 2. There were others as follow: 33, 36, 38, & 44 E. 3.—2, 4, 6, 8, 9, & 16 R. 2. 11 H. 4. 1 H. 5. Dugdale on Fenns.

The lands are divided into two levels, called the Upper and Lower. Commiſſions are occaſionally held, and orders and regulations made for ſupporting the banks of the river, on which the preſervation of the country depends. In each level, to receive and carry off the water, are ten or twelve pills, or inlets, which, as well as the ſea-wall, are repaired by thoſe whoſe eſtates lie next them. A ſmall ſum is annually raiſed to defray the expence of the court of ſewers, by rating the pariſhes at 2*d.* an acre, according to the following table, which ſhews the number of acres given in by the reſpective places, as particularly liable to inundation; but ſome of them have not charged themſelves with more than about one half, others two thirds of what is actually ſubject to floods.

In

In the reign of G. 2. another commiſſion was iſſued for the preſervation of lands, lying further up the river, above theſe levels; but nothing was ever done in conſequence of it.

Birdlip-hill and Crickley-hill, part of that ridge which has been already obſerved to divide the Coteſwolds from the Vale, ſtand about ſeven miles diſtant from the city of Glouceſter, and are nearly of the ſame height, the top of the firſt being about 450 yards above the water in the Severn, at that city, and on a level with a great part of the coteſwold country. It is therefore no wonder if the temperature of the air in the Vale ſhould be ſenſibly different from that on the coteſwolds; but Sir R. Atkyns has expreſſed the difference too ſtrongly in the following paſſage: "If it be objected againſt the cold air of the Coteſ-" wolds, that there are eight months winter, and " cold weather all the year beſides, it may be here " affirmed, that there are eight months ſummer, " and warm weather all the reſt of the year." The learned hiſtorian ſeems to have been led into this miſrepreſentation, by his affecting a perfectly contraſted mode of expreſſion: for tho' the difference be conſiderable, his account of it is very much exaggerated.

The Vale upon the whole is healthy, yet in ſome places, on the borders of the great river Severn, the inhabitants are very ſubject to agues.

Moſt of the other productions of the Vale, beſides thoſe particularly noted, being common to other countries, I paſs them over, and conclude this head with a ſhort obſervation, no leſs juſt than general, That they are no where to be found in greater plenty and perfection than here. For a further account of the productions of the Vale, ſee the latter part of the chapter on trade, &c.

Of the FOREST of DEAN.

THE Saxons called a foreſt Bucholt, i. e. ſylva ferina, vel cervina. Others define it to be locus ſylveſtris et ſaltuoſus; a territory of woody grounds and fruitful paſtures, privileged for wild beaſts and fowls of foreſt, chaſe and warren, to reſt and abide in, under the king's protection, † for his princely delight and pleaſure; incident to which are ſeveral courts and officers of record, which muſt appear on record.

The foreſts in England (the new foreſt in Hampſhire and that of Hampton Court excepted) are of ſuch antiquity, that hiſtory makes no mention when they were firſt erected; and as in England, ſo in other countries, the charge of them has always been committed to perſons of eminence.

Si canimus ſylvas, ſylvæ ſunt conſule dignæ. VIRG.

Or if ye chuſe to ſing the ſhady grove,
Make your theme worthy a great conſul's love.

For the Roman conſuls had the government of foreſts.

Before the obtaining of the Great Charter of the foreſts, the king claimed, de jure, to make a new foreſt wherever he pleaſed, and to incloſe, not only his own demeſnes, but the lands of other perſons, within its bounds and perambulation; but Lord Coke, whom with great confidence I follow, has ſhewn, that this was not agreeable to the laws then in force; for, ſays he, the act of Carta de Foreſta is but a declaratory law, reſtoring the ſubject to his former right; and that charter is directly againſt ſuch claim. Indeed originally, all the lands of the ſubject are derived from the crown, and our foreſts may have been made when the antient kings had the greateſt part in their own hands, and ſo having a lawful beginning, a foreſt may be, by preſcription, good in law over other men's grounds. But king H. 2. and his two ſons, Richard and John, enlarged the antient bounds of the foreſts, and under the notion of exerting the prerogative, exerciſed great ſeverities and oppreſſions on their ſubjects, who were afterwards reſtored to their former rights by the Great Charter. But for theſe, and other matters, concerning foreſts in general, having juſt ſhewn what they are, the reader is referred to the books written profeſſedly on that ſubject. I ſhall now confine myſelf particularly to examine into the bounds and extent, the government, peculiar cuſtoms, privileges and produce of the foreſt of Dean.

This Foreſt, which gives name to one of the four political diviſions of the county, is celebrated in Drayton's lofty ſtrains, as ——— "Queen of foreſts all that weſt of Severn lie;

Her broad and buſhy top DEAN holdeth up ſo high,
The leſſer are not ſeen, ſhe is ſo tall and large."

POLYOLB. Song 7.

It obtained the name of Dean, * or Dene, from the antient market-town of that name, lying within its bounds and perambulation; which town was ſo called, perhaps from its remarkable low ſituation, being almoſt encompaſſed round with high hills and woods. The word is of Saxon

† There was a miſtaken notion, that no ſubject could enjoy a foreſt; whereas the duke of Lancaſter had the foreſts of Pickering and Lancaſter; and the abbat of Whitby had the foreſt of Whitby, in Yorkſhire. vid. 4 Inſt. 314.

* Mr. Camden, whom Sir Robert Atkyns follows, was of opinion that the Gauls and Britons heretofore uſed the word arden for a wood, from whence, by rejecting the firſt ſyllable, the name of this foreſt might be derived; but I find no ſuch word of that general ſignification in their language. Ardenne, indeed, was the proper name of a wood or foreſt in Gaul.

original, and ſignifies a dale, a valley, or woody place; whence our Engliſh word den, a hole, or cave in the earth. Giraldus, and ſome others, gave this foreſt the name of Danubia, and Danica Sylva, or the Dane's woods, becauſe they ſheltered themſelves here.

In the Roman times it was part of the territory of the Silures, and after the Britons were driven by the Saxons beyond the Severn, it belonged to the dominions of Wales. All this part of Glouceſterſhire, together with Monmouthſhire, and part of Herefordſhire, was called by the general name of Gwent, 'till Wales was divided into counties. But king Athelſtan, drove the Welch beyond the Wye, which afterwards became the boundary between England and Wales, according to Alexander Neckham;

Inde vagos Vaga Cambrenſes, hinc reſpicit Anglos.

On this ſide, Wye the Engliſh views;
On that, the wandering Welch purſues.

Bounds of the FOREST.

King H. 2. as before obſerved, greatly extended the boundaries of the foreſt of Dean, and the ſucceeding kings, Richard and John, following his example, the whole country lying between the Wye and the Severn, and the road leading from Goodrich-caſtle, in Herefordſhire, thro' Weſton and Newent, to Glouceſter-bridge, was taken within the perambulation.

There was a perambulation made 9 H. 3. upon account of the monks of Flaxley. And a juſtice-ſeat was held at Glouceſter 10 E. 1. for ſettling the foreſt bounds. There were then ten bailiwicks, which included only the king's waſte ſoil, and ſuch aſſarted lands and purpreſtures as had been the waſte ſoil, and did not take in the antient manors, &c. tho' within the perambulation § of the foreſt. The extent of the bailiwicks, with the names of the woodwards, are ſet forth upon the oaths of twelve regarders; and the proceedings remain on record at the chapter-houſe, Weſtminſter.

Soon after the confirmation of the Great Charter, and of the Charter of the Foreſt, 25 E. 1. the king iſſued out his commiſſion to perambulate the new foreſt, taken into that of Dean, ſince the coronation of H 2. The commiſſioners returned † the names of all the vills, woods, and lands which were afforeſted after the coronation of king H. 2. and that they ought to be diſafforeſted; and 28° regni, another perambulation was made, leaving out all ſuch places as had been newly taken in. The woods ſo left out were called purlieus *, and ſome of them ſtill retain the name, as the biſhop's purlieu, and Pirton purlieu, in the manor of Lidney. The bounds of the foreſt of Dean were then ſettled; and always afterwards, reference was had to this perambulation, which was uſed by the officers of the foreſt from time to time 'till the 20th year of James the Firſt.

In the ſucceeding reign, ſome attempts were made to enlarge the bounds of it, and 10 C. 1. a juſtice-ſeat was holden at Glouceſter, before the earl of Holland, aſſiſted by juſtice Jones, baron Trevor, and ſerjeant Bridgman, when the jury was prevailed on to find the bounds as extenſive as in the time of H. 2. But an act paſſed in the 17th year of the ſame reign, for ſettling the boundaries of all foreſts, as they were reputed to be 20 Jac. 1.

In the next reign, the legiſlature taking the affairs of the foreſt into conſideration, the occaſion of which the reader will be acquainted with hereafter, an act paſſed 20 C. 2. by which many good regulations took place. Soon afterwards, the lord warden cauſed a perambulation ‡ to be made by the regarders, agreeably to that of 28 E. 1. and as it was reputed to be 20 Jac. which was returned upon their oaths.

Previous to the act 17 C. 1. a Survey was made of Dean foreſt, the particulars of which are exhibited in the following Table.

It

It appears by the ſurvey, that the foreſt of Dean contains, within its perambulation, 23,521 acres of the king's waſte, lying within the hundred of St. Briavel's, beſides ſeveral antient manors, pariſhes, vills, and places, to the amount of above 20,000 acres more, ſome of which were taken from the Saxons by the Conqueror, and given to his Norman followers. But ſince that time, many thouſands of acres that were formerly foreſt, have been aſſarted, taken out by purpreſtures §, and granted away by the crown.

The whole foreſt, which is extraparochial, is divided into ſix walks, known by the names of their reſpective lodges or houſes, built for the reſidence of ſo many keepers, viz.

1. The king's lodge, but oftener called the ſpeech-houſe, ſtanding between Kenſlo-hill and Daniel's-moor.
2. York lodge, at the upper end of Lumbard's marſh.
3. Worceſter lodge, upon Wimbury-hill.
4. Danby lodge, upon the Old Baily-hill, near Lidney.
5. Herbert lodge, upon Ruerdean-hill.
6. Latimer lodge, upon Dane-Meen-hill †, not far from the beacon. The hill takes its name from ſome ſtones which ſtood there in memory of ſome great Dane ſlain in theſe parts.

Each keeper has a ſettled annual ſalary of 15*l.* paid out of the exchequer, and an incloſure of ground for his further encouragement.

Of ROYAL and other GRANTS, &c.

MILES or Milo, earl of Hereford, portreeve or conſtable of Glouceſter, was lord of the foreſt of Dean in the reign of H. 1. but Sir William Dugdale, in his Baronage, informs us, that Maud the empreſs, gave the whole foreſt of Dean, with the caſtle of St. Briavel's, to Miles, for his aſſiſtance againſt her brother, 4° Steph. However incompatible theſe accounts may ſeem at firſt, they may be reconciled, by ſuppoſing that the conſtable had been violently diſpoſſeſſed of his eſtate by Stephen, at the beginning of his reign. This great man had five ſons and three daughters. The ſons all died without iſſue; but Lucy, the youngeſt daughter, was married to Herbert Fitz-Herbert, chamberlain to the king, 5° Steph. who had for her portion the foreſt of Dean, and was therefore afterwards called lord of Dean. He was high-ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire during that reign. The following abſtracts from the records are ſet down in the order of the dates. The reigns are marked at the beginning of each paragraph.

HENRY II. granted to the abbey of Flaxley two oaks out of this foreſt every ſeven days, for the maintenance of a forge there.

JOHN.] Henry de Bohun releaſed all his right in this foreſt to the king 1° regni; who granted it 18° regni to John de Monemuta.

HENRY III.] It was found by inquiſition that the monks of Flaxley had a forge for making of iron there 4° regni. The ſame year the judges itinerant ordered that none ſhould have an iron forge in the foreſt, without ſpecial licence from the king.—Almarick of the Park had a grant of waſte lands in this foreſt the ſame year.—Walter de Aure, and Maud de Cantelupe, had each of them an iron forge 5° regni.—John de Standon had a grant of 12 acres of land, near Sitgrove, on the borders of the foreſt 8° regni.—Henry earl of Warwick had a forge in his woods at Lidney, and other iron forges in the foreſt 10° regni.—William de Alba Mara had a grant of the foreſt of Dean 40° regni.—The king finding the grant of the two oaks every week, which the abbat of Flaxley had obtained of his grandfather, ſo injurious and deſtructive to the foreſt, granted the monks a wood *, in recompenſe for the ſaid two oaks 42° regni.—William de Dean was ſeized of Great Dean, and of a bailiwick in the foreſt 43° regni.—William de Londres was ſeized of Eclawe 50° regni.

EDW. I.] Henry de Chauworth had a forge here 2° regni.—Alexander Blith held Blith bailiwick 6° regni.—Richard de Abbenhalle had the bailiwick of that name 7° regni, againſt whom a Quo Warranto was brought, to prove his right of common of paſture in 20 acres in Ridley.—The abbey of Glouceſter held Hope Malerſel 9° regni.—Bogo de Knovile had a licence to incloſe Kilcot wood, and convert it into a park the ſame year.—The ten bailiwicks were kept by the ten perſons following, as appears by the proceedings at a juſtice-ſeat, held 10° regni; viz. the bailiwick of Abbenhalle, by Ralph de Abbenhalle; of Blakeney, by Walter de Aſtune; of Bleythe, by Ralph Hatheway; of Berſe, by William Wodeard; of Bicknoure, by Cecilia de Michegros; Rywardyn, by the conſtable of St. Briavel's; The Lea, by Nicholas de Lacu; Great Dean, in the hands of the king, and kept by the conſtable of St. Briavel's; Little Dean, by Ralph de Abbenhalle; Stauntene, by Richard de la More.—William Boteler was ſeized of a bailiwick 13° regni.—Cecilia de Michegros was ſeized of a wood in the foreſt, and 28 acres of aſſart land, at Greenway, and 9 yard-

§ Aſſarts and Purpreſtures. The firſt ſo called from the French aſſartir, to make plain; or from exertum, to pull up by the roots; or exaratum, or exartum, to pull or cut up. The word ſignifies woodlands cleared and made fit for tillage.—Purpreſtures, from the French pourpris, conſeptum, an incloſure; but properly it ſignifies an incroachment.

† Mr. Borlace obſerves, that the common name of the circular monuments in Cornwall, is Dawns Meen, that is, ſays he, the ſtone-dance, ſo called of the common people on no other account, than that they are placed in a circular order, and ſo make an area for dancing. But with all deference to ſo reſpectable a perſon, I think the name is expreſſive of the nature of the thing; for in the Britiſh language, of which the Corniſh is a dialect, Dane Maen, ſignifies the Dane's ſtone, having no relation to dancing.

lands and a half, at Brat-Forton 29° regni; and the ſame year, Ralph de Abbenhalle was alſo ſeized of a wood in the foreſt of Dean.—The tythes of all aſſart lands within the foreſt, were granted to the church of All Saints, in Newland, then belonging to John biſhop of Landaff, 34° regni.—And the ſame year, William Bleyth, and Joan his wife, had a grant of 104 acres of aſſart lands in this foreſt.—Alſo in the ſame year, Alexander de Bicknore was found ſeized of the bailiwick of Rywardyn. William Bleyth held the bailiwick of Bleyth 35° regni.

Edw. II.] John de Abbenhalle, 1° regni, held a certain bailiwick in this foreſt, of the king, in capite, ad cuſtodiendum eam per corpus ſui cum arcu et ſagittis, et non valet ultra cuſtod.—The ſame year, Bogo de Knovil was ſeized of Kilcot wood, in this foreſt.—Henry de Chaworth had a forge here 2° regni.—The prior and convent of Lanthony, near Glouceſter, was ſeized of 212 acres of aſſart lands 4° regni.—John Abbenhalle held a bailiwick 10° regni.—And the ſame year, John de Wiſham was ſeized of Noxton vineyard, in the foreſt, and 200 acres of waſte, to be aſſarted and incloſed.—John Barington held 40 acres of waſte, near Maleſcoyte-wood; and Ralph Hatheway was alſo ſeized of 40 acres in Holſtone, both in the year laſt mentioned.—William Joice was ſeized of 20 acres of waſte at Muchel-Clay, and 80 acres of waſte at Brakenherd, both in this foreſt 16° regni.—Robert de Aure held one meſſuage, and 12 acres of land here 19° regni.

Edw. III.] Tythes of the iron-mines were granted to the biſhop of Landaff 6° regni.—John Joice, and his heirs, had a grant of 116 acres in ſeveral parcels in the foreſt, at the yearly rent of 19*s.* 4*d.* 12° regni.

Richard II.] Thomas de Brug, and Elizabeth his wife, levied a fine of a bailiwick in Dean, and of lands in Lee-Walton, and in Lee, in Herefordſhire, to the uſe of Thomas in taile, remainder to Richard Curle 5° regni.—The king granted the caſtle of St. Briavel's and the foreſt of Dean to Thomas duke of Glouceſter, in ſpecial taile, 14° regni; whereby nothing paſſed but a frank chaſe, ſays lord Coke; but it was afterwards enacted in parliament, that the duke ſhould hold the ſaid foreſt, with power to conſtitute ſuch juſtices and officers as are incident and belonging to a foreſt.

Henry IV.] The foreſt was granted to John the king's ſon, in taile, 1° regni.

Edw. IV.] John Throgmorton was ſeized of a woodwardſhip 13° regni.

Henry VII.] The king by letters patents, 24 Sept. 1° regni, granted the mines of Newland to Thomas Motten for his life, without rent.—And by like letters patents, 1 Feb. 1° regni, he alſo granted the mines beneath the wood vocat. Le Gawle, to John Motten for his life, without rent.

Henry VIII.] After the diſſolution of monaſteries, 36° regni, Sir Anthony Kingſton obtained a grant, amongſt other things, of all the lands in this foreſt, formerly belonging to the abbey of Flaxley.

Eliz.] Richard Brain, eſq; died ſeized of a woodwardſhip and of a foreſter's place, in this foreſt, 15° regni.

James. I.] The king by letters patents, 7 Feb. 9° regni, granted to the earl of Pembroke a leaſe of the foreſt of Dean, together with the iron-ore, cinders, coal, and wood for making of charcoal, with many other extenſive liberties and privileges, for 21 years, at the rent of 2433*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*—The king by his letters patents, 30 June 16° regni, granted to William Wintour, eſq; and William Bell, at the nomination of divers perſons therein mentioned purchaſers, in conſideration of 1074*l.* 8*s.* ſeveral meſſuages, lands and tenements, called aſſart lands, purpreſtures, and other lands and tenements belonging to the crown, lying in the foreſt of Dean, at the rent of 5*s.* ſaving to himſelf and his ſucceſſors, all mines, quarries of ſea-coal, &c. And Wintour and Bell covenanted that the lands ſhould remain under the foreſt laws.

Char. I.] The king by letters patents, 28 May 1° regni, granted to Sir Edward Villiers, knight, and to his heirs, a part of the waſte ſoil of the foreſt, called Malyſcott, together with all woods growing thereon, and all mines, &c.—The king, 16° regni, diſafforeſted the whole waſte ſoil, and by his letters patents dated March 31, the ſame year, in conſideration of 10,000*l.* then paid, and of 16,000*l.* more to be paid in ſix years, and of a fee-farm rent of 1950*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* to be paid for ever, granted to Sir John Wintour, and to his heirs and aſſigns, the cheſnut-wood or coppice, in leaſe to Richard Brayne, and the Snead and Kidnals, in leaſe to Triſtram Flower, and others; and all thoſe his majeſty's coppices, woods, lands, and waſte ſoil in the foreſt, with their appurtenances, lying within the perambulation made 27° E. 1. containing in the whole 18,000 acres; and all the mines of iron, tin, lead and coals therein, and in the lands of his majeſty's ſubjects within that perambulation, reſerved by the crown; together with free warren and free chaſe, and power to make ſalteries in his own lands of Lidney, &c. all royal mines excepted.

The foreſters, as ſuch, had long enjoyed many conſiderable privileges and advantages, and tho' generally well affected to the king, could not with indifference ſee them granted away to a favourite with this prodigious eſtate, which Sir John began to incloſe. Therefore, in the great rebellion, the incloſures were broken down, and the foreſt was almoſt totally deſtroy'd.

Char. II.] After the reſtoration, Sir John would have repaired the mounds, but was oppoſed by the whole country round about; upon which a commiſſion iſſued out of the exchequer to Henry lord Herbert, to inquire into the condition of the foreſt, &c. and great numbers of the inhabitants ſubſcribed a paper, containing their claims to privileges, privileges, and a kind of petition, deſiring that the 18,000 acres might be reafforeſted, and that the letters patents, for the ſale thereof, might be made void; which paper, the commiſſioners made a part of their return. See App. No. 4.

This repreſentation had its deſired effect. Sir John Wintour, in obedience to his majeſty, by indenture dated 28 July, 14° regni, in conſideration that he ſhould have the Snead and Kidnals, containing 280 acres, to himſelf and to his heirs forever; and alſo in conſideration of 30,000*l.* then due to him, on account of his patent, ſurrendered * and yielded up to his majeſty all the particulars granted to him by the late king, except the Snead and Kidnals, and except the authority of free warren, and of making ſalteries in his own lands. And an act paſſed 20° C. 2. c. 3. which made the diſafforeſting of thoſe lands, by the late king, null and void.

By this act, the waſte lands of the foreſt were reafforeſted, and are to be governed by foreſt laws, as in 10° C. 1. And all future grants of the waſtes, or incloſures, or of the mines, or quarries, are made void. The king is impowered to incloſe 11,000 acres, to remain in ſeveralty in the actual poſſeſſion of the crown for ever, as a nurſery for wood and timber only. There is a proviſo, that all leaſes made, or to be made, by the king, his heirs or ſucceſſors, to any perſon, for a term not exceeding thirty-one years, of the coal-mines and quarries of grindſtone, in the foreſt, ſhall be of like force as if this act had never been made, except of ſuch coal-mines, &c. as are, or ſhall be in any part of the 11,000 acres alotted for incloſing, whilſt they ſhall continue incloſed.

The foreſt of Dean is, at preſent, under the power of this law, ſince the making of which, there has been no alteration in matters relative to the government of this fine diſtrict of country.

Of the CASTLE of St. BRIAVEL's, and CONSTABLES of the CASTLE; of the WARDENSHIP and WARDENS of the FOREST, and other Officers, &c.

THE caſtle of St. Briavel's, antiently written Brulais, ſtands in the foreſt of Dean, and gives name to one of the hundreds in the foreſt diviſion. The king, jure coronæ, is ſeized of this caſtle, which is extraparochial. It is ſaid to have been built to curb the Welch, by Milo earl of Hereford, in the reign of Henry the Firſt. It was antiently the reſidence of men of eminence in the government, who exerciſed great power in the foreſt, demiſing the waſte lands, &c. and ſuch rents as were reſerved upon leaſes of foreſt lands, were made payable to the conſtable, i. e. the governor of this caſtle. The ruins ſhew it to have been ſtrong, and of large extent, and was formerly of great conſequence. It is remarkable for the death of Mahel, the youngeſt ſon of Miles earl of Hereford; for there, ſays Camden, the judgments of God overtook him for his rapacious ways, inhuman cruelties, and boundleſs avarice, always uſurping on other men's rights; for being courteouſly entertained there, by Sir Walter Clifford, and the caſtle taking fire, he loſt his life by the fall of a ſtone on his head, from the higheſt tower †. What now remains of the caſtle, ſerves as a priſon for criminals, offending againſt the vert and veniſon of the foreſt, and for ſuch as are convicted at the mine-law court, and at the court of pleas, of which hereafter.

CONSTABLES, &c.] John de Monemouth was conſtable of the caſtle, and warden of the foreſt 18° Joh.—As was John Giffard 47° H. 3. Taking part with the rebellious barons, he was excommunicated by the archbiſhop of Canterbury; but afterwards deſerting them, and fighting at the battle of Eveſham, the king pardoned him.—Thomas, brother to Gilbert the Red, earl of Glouceſter, was made governor of this caſtle by Simon Montfort, earl of Leiceſter, after the victory gained over king H. 3. at Lewes.—William de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, was conſtable of the caſtle 10° E. 1.—John de Bottourt, deſcended from Anſfrid de Bottourt, who lived 2° H. 2. was made governor of it, and warden of the foreſt of Dean 19° E. 1. but was ſoon diſplaced;—for Thomas de Euerty held the caſtle 21° E. 1.—John de Handelo was governor thereof, and warden of the foreſt 27° E. 1.—Ralph de Abbenhalle held it 29° E. 1.—Almarick de St. Amand was governor of the caſtle, and warden of the foreſt in the latter part of this reign.—And John de Bottourt was reſtored 1° E. 2.—William de Staure held the caſtle 2° E. 2.—Hugh le Deſpencer, the elder, was governor of it, and warden of the foreſt 15° E. 2.—John de Nivers was made governor of this caſtle, and warden of the foreſt, to hold at pleaſure 18° E. 2.—John de Hardeſhull was alſo governor and warden 20° E. 2.—Roger Clifford was governor 14° E. 3. and had 55 marks yearly allowed him out of the exchequer; and all ſucceeding governors were from that time to have feeding, houſeboot and hey-boot out of the foreſt.—This caſtle was granted to Thomas duke of Glouceſter 14° R. 2.—John duke of Bedford, third ſon of H. 4. had a grant, and died ſeized of it 14° H. 6.—John Tiptot, earl of Worceſter, had the cuſtody of it 39° H. 6.—Richard Nevil, earl of Warwick, Beſides the conſtable, there are ſeveral ſubordinate officers *, all created by patent, viz. a clerk, a meſſor, or intinerant officer, two ſerjeants and a janitor; and a fee was annexed to each of their offices.

The VERDURERS of the foreſt, of which there are four, are elected by the freeholders of the county, by virtue of the king's writ, directed to the ſheriff for that purpoſe. They are, according to the order of time in which they were choſen, as follow, viz.

William Jones, of Naſs, eſq;
John Probyn, of the city of Glouceſter, eſq;
Maynard Colcheſter, of Weſtbury, eſq;
John Gyſe, of Highnam, eſq; elected 1769.

In the time of king Canute, their fee was yearly of the king's allowance, two horſes, one of which was ſaddled; one ſword, five javelins, one ſpear, one ſhield, and 10*l.* in money.

The GAVELLER is an officer appointed by the conſtable of the caſtle. The name is derived from Gaꝑel, or Gaꝑol, which in the Anglo-Saxon language ſignifies a tribute. This officer receives by way of perquiſite, or fee, a ſmall ſum of the miners, called the king's dues, and gives ſome directions concerning mining. At a juſtice-ſeat, held at Glouceſter 10° C. 1. the commiſſioners returned, that the office of Gaveller, or Gawler, was an antient office, and that he uſually attended at the mine-law courts; but I have not found upon record any ſuch officer in this foreſt before the year 1660, when the office was conferred upon Sir Baynham Throckmorton, and which ſome years afterwards William Wolſeley, eſq; held by patent. If there had been antiently ſuch an officer, he would probably have accounted to the king, and the name muſt then have been found in the exchequer; but as lately as 4° H. 7. William Lewellyn, the king's receiver, accounted for the mines of Newland and Le Gawle, and all the other king's mines in the foreſt, a copy of whoſe account I have by me.

Of the COURTS of this FOREST.

THERE are three courts incident to all foreſts. 1. The court of attachment. 2. The court of ſwanimote. 3. The juſtice-ſeat.

1. The court of attachment is held once in forty days before the verdurers, who receive the attachments, de viridi & venatione, taken by the reſt of the officers, and inroll them, that the offenders may be preſented and puniſhed at the next juſtice-ſeat; for this court can only inquire, but not convict.

2. The court of ſwanimote † is holden before the verdurers, as judges, by the ſteward of the ſwanimote, thrice in the year. The foreſters ought to preſent their attachments at the next ſwanimote court; and the freeholders within the foreſt are to appear at this court, to make inqueſt and juries. The court of ſwanimote may both inquire and convict, but cannot give judgment.

3. The juſtice-ſeat, which is the higheſt court, cannot be kept oftener than every third year. It is holden before the chief juſtice of the foreſt, or juſtice in Eire, of which there are two created by patent, one for the foreſts on this ſide of Trent, the other beyond. This court hath juriſdiction to inquire, hear, and determine all treſpaſſes within the foreſt, and all claims of franchiſes, privileges and liberties relative thereto. Before a juſtice-ſeat be holden, the regarders of the foreſt muſt go thro', and view the whole foreſt, in order to preſent all kinds of treſpaſſes.

About the middle of the foreſt ſtands a large building, called the Speech-houſe, where the courts of ſwanimote and attachment uſed to be holden; but they have now been neglected for ſome time.

Beſides theſe courts, which are common to all foreſts, the hundred of St. Briavel's, being in the crown, retains the privilege of a court-leet, which is held at the caſtle.

There are alſo two other courts held here, which being of peculiar natures, deſerve particular notice.

The firſt I ſhall mention is a court of record, held for the caſtle, the manor, and the hundred of St. Briavel's, before the conſtable of the caſtle, or his deputy, and the ſuitors of the manor; for trying of all perſonal actions, of what value ſoever, ariſing within the hundred. Fines of lands within the hundred are levied at this court, which is very antient, as appears by a record, temp. E. 1. where it is ſaid, S'tus Briavellus h'et return' brevium.

All proceſſes run in the name of the conſtable, or his deputy, only; yet the court, in its ſtile, is ſaid to be held before the conſtable of the caſtle of St. Briavel's, and the homagers, or ſuitors of the manor-court; upon which account, ſome perſons have been of opinion, that this cannot properly be a court of record, ſince the homagers, before whom, with the conſtable, the court is preſcribed to be holden, ſit as judges. But nothing can be concluded with certainty againſt its being of record, merely from the complexion of it, as it may formerly have derived its authority either from

* Lately there have been only a clerk, a bailiff or meſſor, and caſtle-keeper, who have all been appointed by the conſtable of the caſtle for the time being.

† Lork Coke derives the word of Swein, that is, in Saxon, miniſter; and mote, or gemote, which is curia, i. e. Curia miniſtrorum foreſtæ; ſo called becauſe it is but a preparative for the juſtice-ſeat.

from act of parliament, letters patents, or preſcription, the three ſeveral ways by which courts of record are created.

To account for the homage ſitting in this court, it has been conjectured, that originally, when the caſtle was in its proſperity, three courts were held here, 1. a court of pleas or record, held before the conſtable, or his deputy only; 2. a court for the hundred, and 3. a court for the manor, held before the conſtable or his deputy, and the ſuitors or homagers. And it is thought, that, for the eaſe and convenience of the conſtable and country, theſe three courts might at ſome time be united by conſent, and ſo have continued down without any interruption, to the preſent time. But I give this as mere opinion, without the leaſt authority from the public records to ſupport it.

Another court, called the mine-law court, is held before the conſtable of St. Briavel's, as ſteward of the court, or his deputy, for the trial of all cauſes ariſing between the miners, &c. concerning the mines, &c. But from 4° Annæ to 5° G. 1. it was held before the deputies of Charles earl of Berkeley, who in the court papers is ſtiled, Lord high ſteward of her majeſty's court of pleas, courts leet, and of the mine-law court, within the foreſt; the earl having obtained a patent for theſe purpoſes, altho' he was not conſtable of the caſtle. At this court, none are to be preſent but the conſtable, or his deputy, the gaveller, caſtle-clerk, and free-miners, who muſt be natives of the hundred of St. Briavel's, and have worked in ſome of the mines at leaſt one year and a day. The parties and witneſſes are ſworn upon a bible, into which a piece of holly ſtick is put, and are obliged to wear the hooff, or working cap on their heads, during examination. The following particulars are drawn from the beſt authorities that could be procured.

I can find no mention made of the mine-law court in any record before 10° C. 1. when the earl of Pembroke, as conſtable of the caſtle of St. Briavel's, and warden of the foreſt of Dean, claimed to be judge of it.

In the act of parliament 20° C. 2. concerning this foreſt, is a clauſe, wherein the lawful rights and privileges in all lands and grounds lying within the perambulation and regard of the foreſt, are ſaved to the miners, and perſons uſing the trade of digging for iron ore, coal, and ochre.

Before the paſſing of this act, many diſputes had riſen between the miners and others, concerning rights and cuſtoms, which remained unſettled; but now the miners, conſidering the foremention-ed clauſe as a confirmation of their antient privileges, began to call themſelves the free-miners, and the king's miners; and their court a court of record.

Sir Baynham Throckmorton having been appointed gaveller, deputy conſtable of St. Briavel's, and duputy warden of the foreſt, preſided at this court; and, according to tradition, firſt introduced the examining of evidences upon oath.

At a court, holden the 16th of Jan. 28° C. 2. a jury of 48 miners, after ſetting forth, that ſeveral controverſies had lately riſen between the miners and others, concerning their rights and cuſtoms, ordered, That all the articles and clauſes contained in a certain writing, called an inquiſition, which they declare to contain their antient cuſtoms, rights and privileges, ſhall be inviolably obſerved by the miners.

At this court, an order was made to raiſe the price of coals, from 4*d.* to 6*d.* the horſeload, and another order was confirmed, for taxing every miner and carrier, with a quarterly ſum *, to defend themſelves in all ſuits that ſhould be brought againſt them. The inquiſition was then reviſed, and ingroſſed on parchment, and the jury ſet their hands and ſeals to it, that whenever it ſhould be produced, it might carry the force of an inſtrument executed with great deliberation, order, and ſolemnity. From this time the court proceeded with greater freedom; and I find of no oppoſition made to it 'till the year 1752, when its authority was put to the teſt.

In that year, Francis Jones commenced an action in the court of king's-bench, againſt Philips and others, for breaking his cloſe, and taking away and ſelling three mares. The defendants pleaded, that there had been immemorially in the foreſt of dean, a court of record, called the mine-law court; and that they had recovered 10*l.* in an action brought againſt the plaintiff, in the ſaid court, and proſecuted and ſued out a precept, upon which the ſaid mares were levied.—Upon this plea, a verdict was found for the defendants.—Jones afterwards ſued out a writ of error, to which a return was made, and errors aſſigned; but they were never argued.

Cauſes tried at this court are not determined by the foreſt laws, or by any written laws of the realm, but by ſuch as are peculiar to the court itſelf. The miners exerciſe the legiſlative power, and make new laws for their convenience, as often as they ſee occaſion.

PRIVILEGES of the FORESTERS.

AT a juſtice-ſeat held at Glouceſter 10° E. 1. already mentioned, the ſeveral officers of the foreſt, and others, put in their claims to common of paſture, common of eſtovers, and to fees and other privileges and liberties, which I ſhall have occaſion to mention more particularly hereafter.

Alſo at a juſtice-ſeat holden at Glouceſter-caſtle, for the ſaid foreſt, 10° Car. all the officers of the foreſt, and above 120 of the inhabitants of the hundred of St. Briavel's, and other perſons bordering on the foreſt, put in their ſeveral claims to eſtovers*, commons, fees, franchiſes and other privileges within the foreſt; all which original claims are now on record in the tower of London.

The earl of Pembroke pleaded, that by letters patents he was conſtituted conſtable of the caſtle of St. Briavel's; that the office of warden of the foreſt is always appendant to it, and that, as warden, he claimed to be judge of the mine law court, held from time to time, whereof the memory of man is not to the contrary.

By 20° C. 2. c. 3. the occupiers and owners of land not being part of the waſte, or incloſures, within the bounds of the foreſt, are impowered to cut timber and wood in their ſeveral lands; to manure and improve them, by plowing, aſſarting, building, &c. and to keep dogs unexpedited, and to hunt, and kill beaſts of chace, or other game, without incurring any offence by the foreſt law. All perſons having right of common are to enjoy it, as they did 10° C. 1. and the metes and bounds of the foreſt to be taken as they were 20° Jac. 1. In this act is a ſaving to the inhabitants of St. Briavel's of their right of cutting wood in Hudnalls, which they had enjoyed from time immemorially.

The free miners claim a right by preſcription, of digging iron ore, and coal in the foreſt, and of carrying their coal works, begun there, into the incloſed lands adjoining. They alſo preſcribe to cut timber out of the foreſt, neceſſary for carrying on their works, as well in the lands of private perſons, as in the king's ſoil. Theſe are very extenſive privileges; and as it may be entertaining to ſome of my readers, I ſhall endeavour to trace out the gradual progreſs of their claim.

Very antiently, the crown erected works to manufacture the vaſt abundance of iron-ore, found in the foreſt; and generally, the works and mines of ore have been let to farm; and it appears by the inqueſt of the regarders, at a juſtice-ſeat, held 10° E. 1. that the miners had a penny a horſe-load paid them, for ſupplying the king's works with ore †. At the ſame iter ſome of the keepers of the bailiwicks claimed iron-ore and ſea-coal, mortua et ficca et vento proſtrata [dead and dry wood and windfalls] and had their claims allowed, particularly the bailiff of Blakeney, and Sir Rauf de Abbenhalle §, as he and his anceſtors had enjoy'd the ſame ever ſince the conqueſt.

The ſame record ſhews that the keepers in the bailiwicks of Abbenhalle, Bikenore, Staunten, and Blakeneye had coal; and Nicholas de Lacu took the ſame in his wood of Lideneye; but it is ſaid, reſpecting all theſe, et neſciunt quo warranto. It is alſo expreſſly ſaid, that the king had the coal in the other bailiwicks, viz. Bers, Rywardyn, Magna Dene, and Parva Dene; but the record doth not ſhew upon what terms the coal-pits were worked, as in the caſe of the iron-mines. Indeed as the inhabitants were intituled to eſtovers, and the whole country was full of wood, it is probable that very little coal was uſed at that time.

That the chief property of the mines was antiently in the crown, ſeems evident from the above inquiſitions; and alſo from an antient grant which the abbat of Flaxley obtained 42° H. 3. of a large portion of the foreſt, wherein the mines are excepted and reſerved to the king. It is equally evident, that they were claimed by the crown, in James the Firſt's time, from the grant of the foreſt of Dean, made to the earl of Pembroke 9° regni, already noticed, wherein the ore, cinders, coal, &c. are expreſſly mentioned; and the king covenants, that the earl's ſervants and workmen employ'd in the foreſt, ſhould be protected as his majeſty's own ſervants had been. In ſeveral leaſes and grants made to others in the ſame reign, the mines are reſerved. See Grants.

Soon after this grant to the earl of Pembroke, the miners began to dig ore without the earl's conſent; and claiming a right of ſo doing, the attorney-general, at the earl's inſtance, filed an information in the exchequer againſt ſeveral of them. The court, upon the ſubmiſſion of the defendants, acknowledging the ſoil to be the king's, and that they had no intereſt therein; and repreſenting that they had been uſed to mining only, and had no other way to ſupport themſelves and families, made an ‡ order that the inhabitants of the ſaid foreſt, who had been uſed before that time to dig and carry mine, ore, and cinders, ſhould be permitted, of favour and grace, and not of right, to continue the ſame until the hearing of the cauſe, ſo that they carry them to his majeſty's works; and if there refuſed at the uſual prices, that then they be permitted to carry them elſewhere. This ſeems to be the foundation of the miners claim, as probably at that time all parties acquieſced.

Sir Richard Catchmaid farming ſome lands in the foreſt, 19° Jac. the miners dug, and claimed a right to dig, grindſtone on his farm, without

Sir

Sir Richard's leave; for which the attorney-general filed an information in the exchequer, againſt ſome of them. The court, without decreeing concerning the right, on account of their poverty, recommended it to Sir Richard, not to oppreſs them for ſo trifling an article, the ſtones not being worth more than the labour of raiſing them; and it ſeems they paid 3*s*. 4*d*. each, as an acknowledgement for digging.

About 27° C .2. they firſt carried their coal-works, which had been begun in the foreſt, into the incloſed lands adjoining, which occaſioned ſeveral conteſts at law, between the freeholders and miners. And in 1752, the governors and company of copper-miners, in England, commenced an action againſt one Philips and others, for breaking and entering their cloſe. The defendants juſtifying, pleaded the cuſtom of the free-miners entering the lands of all other perſons, as well as of the king, within the hundred of St. Briavel's, by the licence of the king's gaveller, entered, &c. and paying the king certain dues. Iſſue was joined, and the cuſtom found by the jury, before Mr. Juſtice Birch, at Glouceſter aſſizes.

As to their right to timber, it ſhould be obſerved, that ſoon after the paſſing of the act 20° C. 2. proper incloſures were made, and planted with young oaks and acorns, and new officers, with ſalaries, appointed for the preſervation of them. The foreſt courts were regularly holden, offenders puniſh'd, incroachments on the king's ſoil removed, and in ſhort, every meaſure was taken to raiſe a fine foreſt of timber. But there are always people ready to catch every opportunity to avail themſelves of public commotions; ſo at the revolution, the incloſures were again thrown open, and dreadful ſpoil made of the timber.

During king William's reign, and the latter part of queen Anne's, the miners were allowed to take wood, but not timber.

Orders having been iſſued in the latter part of her majeſty's reign, for cutting beech, and dead and dotard trees, not likely to become timber, great ſpoil was again committed; and upon information being filed by the attorney-general, againſt Richard Whetſtone and others, for cutting timber, the defendants ſet forth their cuſtom of taking it, upon application to, and obtaining an order from, the court of attachments, to the proper officers, for the delivery of it. But this cauſe never came to a hearing; for the queen dying, the warden, lord Weymouth, was removed, and proceedings were ſtayed. And ever ſince the miners have had timber alſo for carrying on their works, of which it is computed they uſe about 1000 tons yearly.

From the above records, act of parliament, grants, reſervations, and accounts extracted from antient papers, it may be ſeen what privileges the miners formerly had, and have claimed from time to time, and what they now enjoy.

Soil, Produce, Manufacture, &c. of the FOREST.

The face of this country is remarkably uneven, full of little hills, with ſprings and pleaſant rivulets purling down, and running between them. The ſoil is various, but much inclining to clay, proper for the growth of oak, which flouriſhes here exceedingly. Here is alſo plenty of beech, birch, holly, and other kinds of wood.

Our enemies * have always been ſenſible of the great advantage we derive from the oak timber of Dean foreſt, which is perhaps the beſt in the world for ſhip-building, being extremely tough and hard when dry, and not ſo apt to ſplinter as that of the growth of other countries.

The ſoil of the foreſt is alſo particularly agreeable to the cyder-apple. Styre cyder is almoſt peculiar to this diſtrict, and yields a moſt extraordinary price. But beſides this particular ſort, it is the opinion of very competent judges, that the foreſters make the beſt cyder in the kingdom. In the year 1763, was ſuch a plentiful crop of apples, that great quantities of them were ſuffered to rot, for want of caſks to put the cyder in; yet even in that year, the beſt old ſtyre ſold at fifteen guineas the hogſhead, and is ſince advanced to twenty. Indeed there is no fixing the price of it, being chiefly purchaſed by perſons of fortune. It is, however, aſſerted, that Glouceſterſhire cyder is worth more money in the maker's cellar, than the fineſt wines in the world, in the reſpective countries of their own growth. The reaſons generally alledged for this liquor bearing ſo great a price, are, that the ſtyre-apple is not a plentiful bearer, and the cyder in keeping is ſaid to be ſo particularly liable to injury, from accidents altogether unaccountable, that its proving good is very precarious.

There is not much corn planted here, but ſome people think the produce in that reſpect ſufficient for the uſe of the inhabitants.

The foreſt is full of iron-ore, coal, and ochre, and the waters of many of the ſprings and rivulets, as they run along, tinge the ſtones and other ſubſtances, lying in their courſes, with a reddiſh brown colour, received from the iron-mine, and ochre, thro' whoſe beds they paſs. I have ſeen great variety of iron-ore at Mr. Worrall's, at

* Mr. Evelyn obſerves, that the Spaniards, in queen Elizabeth's reign, ſent over an ambaſſador into England, on purpoſe to try if he could, either by private practices, great rewards, fair promiſes, or any other contrivances whatever, procure this wooden wall, the ſtrength of our kingdom, as they called it, to be deſtroyed, who, had he effected his majeſty's commiſſion, had right well deſerved his particular favour. But what the crafty Spaniard could not do by treachery, was in the time of the great rebellion nearly compleated thro' our own diviſions and diſſentions, by expoſing to ſale for fewel thoſe ſtout and ſturdy oaks, whoſe preſervation might have proved a ſure defence and bulwark on the water, if the frozen winter of that iron age had not deſtroy'd them by fire. Evelyn's Sylva.

Lidney, who is curious, and has collected many beautiful ſpecimens out of this country; the chief of which are,

1. Minera ferri cryſtalliſata; an ore of a cryſtaline form, not much attracted by the magnet.

2. Minera ferri nigricans, magneti amica; the dark-coloured ore, of which there are multitudes of varieties as to form, ſome being ſtriated or channelled; teſſulated, breaking into dice; radiated, &c. &c. The miners here call this ſpecies by the general name of bruſh ore. It is very rich, and the magnet attracts it ſtrongly.

The pipe ore is an aſſemblage of ſmall cylindrical columns, of various lengths, ſtanding cloſe together, and iſſuing at one end from a lump of the ſame kind of matter. The cylindrical ſhape is occaſioned by the metallic matter falling in a liquid ſtate from the maſs, to which the pipes are fixed, and like icicles gradually concreting into the various forms in which we find them.

Some of the ore is found in lumps, crowned with ſpar, reſembling a cawliflower, and other curious figures. I ſaw there a piece of kidney ore, ſo called from the figure of that gland always appearing at the end of it, when broken tranſverſely; one of the pieces ſhews it in relievo, the other impreſſed. It was almoſt pure metal, but I think this came from Lancaſhire.

The foreſt coal crackles much when firſt thrown on the fire, and burns very bright. It has a more ſhining and gloſſy appearance than the Kingſwood coal, but is not ſo bituminous and laſting; yet is more durable on the fire than the Shropſhire coal. The pits are not deep, for when the miners find themſelves much incommoded with water, they ſink a new one, rather than erect a fire-engine, which might anſwer the expence very well, yet there is not one of them in all this diviſion. They have indeed two or three pumps worked by cranks, that in ſome meaſure anſwer the intention.

Great quantities of iron cinders are found in all parts where blomaries were formerly erected. Some of them are very rich and valuable, and being mixed with the ore, not only help to flux it, but render the metal tougher, and of a better temper.

The furnaces for melting of the ore are built of a gritty ſtone, dug out of the foreſt, that will endure a fire intenſe enough to melt or break down almoſt any other material. The grains of this ſtone, ſays Dr. Grew, muſt therefore be inſuperable, yet not ſo united but that the ſtone is ſomewhat ſoft and crumbly, of a dirty colour, like fuller's earth.

Some furnaces are between twenty and thirty feet high. The cavity is in the ſhape of a crucible, and about ſeven or eight feet in diameter, at the mouth. They are generally built againſt a bank, or at leaſt one is thrown up againſt them, that the workmen may aſcend by a ſpiral kind of path, to throw in the materials at the mouth, which is done in the following manner; firſt ten baſkets of charcoal, then ten of cinders, and laſtly the ſame quantity of ore; which is repeated every half hour. The blaſt is made at a hole about three inches diameter, towards the bottom of the furnace, by two vaſt bellows near thirty feet long, which are driven by water, and work alternately. There is a hole ſtill lower, to which a plug is well adjuſted, where they let out the droſs, which by the violent action of the bellows, is ſeparated from the metal in fuſion, and being the lighteſt, lies at the top. Quite at the bottom of the furnace is another hole, with its plug, which is drawn out once in twenty-four hours, when the iron runs upon a bed of ſand, laid upon the earthen floor, from the furnace to the length of thirty feet. There is a large groove impreſſed in the ſand, from one end of the floor to the other, and ſhort ones all along the ſides of it, one end of each of which enters into the large one, that ſerves as a common conveyance to carry the metal into the ſhort ones, where the iron pigs are caſt. That which fills the large groove is called the ſow, and is broken into convenient lengths for working.

From the furnace the ſows and pigs of iron are carried to the forges, which are of two ſorts, one of which is called the finery, the other the chafery. On the hearth of the finery, is a large charcoal fire, excited by bellows like thoſe at the furnace, but not ſo large. They put the ends of two or three pigs or ſows into the finery together, where ſoftening gradually, they ſtir and work them 'till the metal runs together into one maſs or lump, which they call a half bloom. This they take out, and giving it a few ſtrokes with their ſledges, they carry it to a great weighty hammer, raiſed likewiſe by the motion of a water-wheel, where it is preſently beaten out into a thick, ſhort, ſquare figure. This is put into the finery again, and being made red hot, is worked under the ſame hammer, to the ſhape of a bar in the middle, with a ſquare knob at each end. Laſtly, they give it another heating in the chafery, and more workings under the hammer, 'till they have brought the iron into bars of the required ſhape and ſize.

About ſix years ago, an experiment was tried at Lidney, to make iron with pit-coal, charred to diſcharge it of the ſulphur, which renders the metal friable; but it was not found to anſwer, otherwiſe it would have been a prodigious ſaving to the iron-maſter, as wood gets dearer almoſt every ſeaſon, but the coal-mines are inexhauſtible.

The large iron furnaces now in uſe, were firſt erected by the crown, not long before 1617, as appears by the return to a commiſſion iſſued out of the exchequer in that year. The ſort in uſe 10° E. 1.* was called forgeam errantem. I conclude this ſort was carried from place to place, and worked by hand. It was certainly owing to their uſing machines of little power, that our anceſtors left the cinders ſo rich and full of metal.

* In that reign there were ſeventy-two forges in Dean foreſt, as appears by a record of the affairs of this foreſt, preſerved in a collection of MSS. left by lord chief juſtice Hale, to Lincoln's Inn Library; where it is further ſaid, Et quelibet forgia per annum dabit domino regi vij ſol. et forgia operans p' dimid. anni dabit iij ſol. vj den. et forgia operans per quartam partem unius anni dabit xxi. den.

Some queſtions ariſing between the earl of Nottingham, juſtice in Eire in all the king's foreſts, and the earl of Dorſet, treaſurer of England, concerning the diſpoſing of the king's woods in his foreſts, all the judges of England were aſſembled, by the king's command, to reſolve them. After conference and deliberation, they delivered their anſwer; which, with the order of the exchequer in conſequence thereof, may be ſeen in 4 Inſt. p. 299.

Some paſſages in the courſe of this narration may, perhaps, excite the reader to lament with me the general neglect of the foreſt timber, which ought to be preſerved for public uſe. The produce of it to the crown is very trifling, as appears by the ſubſequent account, the authenticity of which may be depended on, as I had it from a gentleman of honour.

Annis 1748, 1749, 1750, 1751,	It does not appear that any timber was felled in the ſaid foreſt; but there are two warrants directed to the ſaid John Phillipſon, to cut down timber there, one dated the 18th of January, 1749, to raiſe, clear of all charges, the ſum of 373*l.* 4*s.* for repairs in Windſor foreſt; and the other, dated the 29th of January, 1750, to raiſe the ſum of 6767*l.* 17*s.* 4*d.* ½ to be paid to Mr. Whatley, for repairs at Hampton-court houſe, park, and Windſor great park, which the ſaid John Phillipſon has not accounted for, therefore is charged —— —— —— —— ——				Nil.

If when the courts of ſwanimote and attachment were regularly holden, and offenders puniſhed, the very officers of the foreſt were daring enough to plunder it, as appears to have been the caſe *; it can be no wonder ſurely, now thoſe courts are diſcontinued, and the execution of the foreſt law, as to this place, has been laid aſide for nearly thirty years, that the foreſt ſhould become the object of avarice and rapine.

During the laſt war, great quantities of the timber were cut and ſent to Plymouth, for the uſe of the royal navy, which was a proper application of it, and proved a very ſeaſonable ſupply. And it were to be wiſhed, rather, I fear, than to be expected, in this age of prodigality and extravagance, of venality and corruption, that now, before it be too late, proper means may be uſed to preſerve the timber that remains; and that care may be ſpeedily taken to raiſe a future crop, to be ready for uſe before the preſent be intirely exhauſted. This is a matter of great and national concern, and ought not to be neglected.

This foreſt is winter-heined, or exempted from common, between the 11th of November and the 23d of April, by 20° C. 2. c. 3.

The gentry of the foreſt are courteous, hoſpitable and generous; and the poorer ſort of people, by their example, are now brought to an obliging kind of behaviour, which uſed not to diſtinguiſh their character: For this country was formerly ſo intirely covered with wood, ſo dark and terrible, and the roads ſo intricate, from their often croſſing each other, that it rendered the inhabitants barbarous, and emboldened them to commit many robberies and outrages, particularly on the banks of the

* A commiſſion iſſuing out of the exchequer 25 March, 1617, to William Cook, knight, and others, to inquire into the ſtate of the foreſt, they made this return, That George Caſtle and William Callow, the perſons appointed for the marking of trees and delivery of wood for the iron-works, within the foreſt, have felled 160 oaks of timber, at a place called the Hayts, of purpoſe to have the bark thereof; which bark they have ſold, as by the depoſition of John Dobbs. 14° Jac. 1.

Severn; inſomuch that an act of parliament was made 8° H. 6. on purpoſe to curb and reſtrain them. Mining is the chief employment of the poor, who, I am told, can earn more money than any common labourers in the kingdom beſides.

The foreſters boaſt of their independency, and ſay that the produce of their own country is ſufficient for them, without being obliged to any other part of the kingdom; which, that the reader may be the better diſpoſed to credit, I will give him, at the concluſion of the account of this country, an old proverb in its favour,

"Happy is the eye betwixt the Severn and the Wye."

There was another foreſt in this county, called the foreſt of Kingſwood; but it was diſafforeſted in the reign of king H. 3. In the act of parliament for erecting the pariſh of St. George, near Briſtol, it is called the now or late foreſt of Kingſwood. It extended from Nibley-green northwards, to the river Avon, which runs to Briſtol, ſouthwards, being ſixteen or ſeventeen miles in length, and in ſome places near ſix miles broad. At preſent, what is called Kingſwood foreſt, lies in the pariſhes of Bitton, Mangotsfield, and St. George's, containing about 5000 acres of ground, ſeveral gentlemen being poſſeſſed of it, by patent from the crown, and it conſiſts chiefly of coal-mines.

Of the FOUR DIVISIONS of the COUNTY.

HAVING taken a ſhort view of the county, in the three grand diviſions made by nature, as at firſt propoſed, it now remains to be conſidered in the parts or diſtricts into which good policy hath divided it, for the ſake of order and government. Of theſe diviſions there are four, viz.

1. Kiftſgate diviſion, comprizing the north and north-eaſt parts, adjoining to Worceſterſhire, Warwickſhire, and Oxfordſhire.

2. The diviſion of the Seven Hundreds, lies S. and S.W. of the former, with Oxfordſhire and a part of Berkſhire on the E. and Wiltſhire on the S. and S.E. of it.

3. Berkeley diviſion extends from the Seven Hundreds to the extremity of the county towards Wiltſhire and Somerſetſhire, with the river Severn on the N. W. of it.

4. The foreſt diviſion takes in all that part of Glouceſterſhire which lies on the N.W. of the Severn, and that part of the hundred of Dudſton and King's-Barton, ſituated on the other ſide of that river.

When this diſtribution was made I have not diſcovered; but conjecture, that it took place for the convenience of the magiſtrates in their petty ſeſſions, ſome of whom reſiding near the extremity of the county, and not being able to attend buſineſs at large, might probably undertake ſuch diſtricts as lay moſt commodiouſly to their reſpective habitations.

The moſt antient diviſion of the counties is into hundreds and tythings, made by king Alfred, to preſerve peace and good order. He appointed, that all free-born men ſhould form themſelves into companies of ten perſons each, and that every of thoſe ten ſhould be ſurety and pledge for the appearance of his fellows; therefore thoſe companies were called tythings, as containing the number of ten free men, with their families. And as it was appointed that ten of theſe companies ſhould meet together at certain times, to conſult on matters of great moment, therefore that general aſſembly was called an hundred.

There are now twenty-eight hundreds in this county, reckoning the hundred of Cirenceſter and the reputed one of Crowthorne and Minety, to be one. (See the diviſion of the Seven Hundreds.) The city of Glouceſter, notwithſtanding its being taken into the foreſt diviſion, will be conſider'd ſeparately, as it is a diſtinct county. The names of the hundreds, with the pariſhes, and ſuch of the tythings and places as have their reſpective officers, are ſet down in the following tables.

high conſtables; the borough was conſigned to two, and the out-pariſhes, with Minety, (which was a member of the manor of Cirenceſter) were appointed to another conſtable; whoſe diviſion, to diſtinguiſh it from the In-Torn, (i. e. the court within the borough) was called Th' Out-Torn and Minety; and ſo by common uſe was at length corrupted to the unmeaning name by which it now paſſes. The name makes it appear to have been originally a diſtinct hundred, whereas it is only a part of the old hundred of Cirenceſter. Thus conſidered, the diviſion of the Seven Hundreds contains its proper number: But if the Out-Torn and Minety be taken as a diſtinct hundred, there will then be Eight Hundreds in this diviſion of the Seven Hundreds. — A moſt glaring abſurdity!

By a ſtatute made 17° E. 2. this county was indulged to continue its antient cuſtom and privilege, that the lands of perſons who might forfeit their lives by felony, ſhould deſcend to their heirs; according to the words expreſs'd in the ſtatute, The father to the bough, and the ſon to the plough. The reaſon of this was, becauſe Wales having newly ſubmitted to England, and this county bordering upon Wales, it was thought convenient to humour the inhabitants with their old cuſtoms. The Kentiſhmen were allowed to enjoy the ſame privilege upon a like account, becauſe that county bordered on France, and was therefore the more liable to ſuffer from invaſion. The cuſtom may ſtill ſubſiſt in Kent, but in Glouceſterſhire, it has not been uſed within the reach of memory; and upon the ſtricteſt inquiry it does not appear to be claimed at preſent in any part of the county.

There is a common proverb reſpecting this county, by different perſons a little variouſly expreſſed. It is ſometimes ſaid, As ſure as God's in Glouceſterſhire; at others, As ſure as God's in Glouceſter. I ſhall not venture to ſay which is the true reading, but Dr. Stukeley takes notice of the latter; and is of opinion, that it was occaſioned by the great number of churches, and religious foundations, in that city; "for you can ſcarcely "walk paſt ten doors, ſays he, but ſomewhat of "that ſort occurs." Itin. Curioſa. p. 64. Sir Robert Atkyns mentions the firſt manner of expreſſion, having perhaps, never heard the other; and ſays, "the proverb was occaſioned by "the words God and Gloſterſhire beginning with "the ſame letter, and not from the extraordinary "multitude of religious foundations, tho' that "was afterwards aſſigned for the reaſon; for "Gloſterſhire had not more religious houſes "in proportion than other counties." p. 4.

Upon this matter I ſhall obſerve, that whether the proverb originally related to the city, or to the county at large, I think it much more likely to take riſe upon ſome religious account, than on that trifling one of two words beginning with the ſame letter. As relative to the former, the learned doctor has given his opinion. Let us now ſee what ground there was for ſuch a ſaying, upon account of religious foundations, ſuppoſing it ought to be apply'd to the latter.

Sir Robert ſays, "there are eighteen † coun-"ties in England larger than this," which, for argument ſake, ſhall be granted him; yet four only of thoſe paid ſo much in penſions, to the members and ſervants of diſſolved religious houſes, in the year 1553, when the penſions in this county amounted to 1434*l.* 11*s.* 2*d.* And by an old account, copied by Stevens in his Supplement to the Monaſticon, V 1. p. 23, it appears, that there were but four counties which exceeded Glouceſterſhire in the yearly value of their religious foundations,

* That the Out-Torn and Minety was part of the hundred of Cirenceſter, will appear from the ſheriff's liſt of the vills in that hundred, viz.

† I ſuppoſe he meant ſeventeen, becauſe he immediately refers to Mr. Houghton's table for the proportions of the counties to each other; by which it appears, that ſeventeen counties have a greater number of acres than Glouceſterſhire.

foundations,

foundations, at the time of the diſſolution; viz. York, Lincoln, Somerſet, and Middleſex, including the city of London. Therefore it may be preſumed this county had more, or at leaſt, better endowed houſes, than many others of greater extent, which might occaſion the proverb in queſtion.

By the above account, the clear yearly value of religious houſes, including the abbey of Kingſwood, in Wilts, becauſe it was intirely ſurrounded by Glouceſterſhire, and the priory of Lanthony, in the county of Monmouth, becauſe it was a cell to Lanthony, near Glouceſter, was 6672*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.* 3 farthings.

The cuſtom of waſſalling, or going from houſe to houſe at Chriſtmas, with a bowl to be filled with toaſt and ale, or cyder, is grown much out of uſe in this county. Lambard gives the following account of the riſe of the "auncient maner "of the Waſſallinge cuppe," which he takes from Galfride [Geoffry] of Monmouth: "Hengiſt hav-"ing finiſhed his caſtle, [now called Thong-caſtle, "in Lincolnſhire] for which he had obtained leave "of Vortigern, invited him to a banquet, and "after he had well pleaſed his taſte, he aſſayed, "by ſhewing of his daughter, to ſatisfy his ſight "alſo. The maid therefore (being of excellent "beautie) came forth with a cuppe of wine in her "hand, and kneeling downe in his ſight, ſaid, as "ſhe had been taught, laꝓoꝛꝺe cynyng ꝑaꝛꝛaıl, "Lord king, be in health; which, when the king "underſtood by his interpreter, he anſwered, "ꝺꝛıncheıl, drink in health; and ſo the maid drank "to him, and he pledged her ſo heartily, that be-"fore it was long he took her to wife."

Of PARISHES, &c.

HONORIUS, archbiſhop of Canterbury, about the year 640, divided that part of England which was then converted to chriſtianity into pariſhes.

The number of pariſhes has increaſed ever ſince the conqueſt. When they were firſt laid out, it is preſumed that due regard was had to the extent of them, and to the number of the inhabitants; for it was neceſſary to conſider both circumſtances together, in order to divide the duties of the pariſh prieſts equally amongſt them. But large members have been continually lopped off from the mother churches, and becoming independent, the pariſhes are now very diſproportionate. Under this head, Sir R. A. has obſerved, that "the pariſh of Newland, in the foreſt diviſion, is "30 miles in compaſs; the pariſh of Rudford, in "the ſame diviſion, is 3 miles in compaſs; ſo "that the one pariſh is an hundred times as large as "the other." But theſe premiſſes will not juſtify the learned author's concluſion; for though it ſhould be admitted, that Newland is an hundred times as large as Rudford, it is poſſible, notwithſtanding, that the latter might be the largeſt. No competent judgment can be formed of the ſize of a pariſh, from the circumference of it, without aſcertaining its ſhape and figure; for which reaſon I have ſeldom mentioned the circumference of places.

When the Antient and Preſent State of Gloſterſhire was firſt publiſhed, the following remarks were in ſome meaſure juſt and ſeaſonable. "It is," ſays the author, "a neglect that the "highways and footpaths are not better amended; "that lights in the dark nights are not ſet up in "market-towns, as they are in London; that "hoſpitals are not erected in the greater towns, "for the relief of the ſick and wounded, and for "the conveniency of women to lye in. Many "more ſuch public charities are neglected, be-"cauſe faith, like Pharaoh's lean kine, has de-"voured charity. It is hard to allow neither free "will nor good will."

The firſt objection is ſince in a great meaſure obviated, by the erecting of turnpikes on every conſiderable road in the kingdom; a mode of collecting money but little known to the author. That between Glouceſter and Birdlip was one of the firſt turnpike roads in the kingdom. I wiſh it might be ſaid to be one of the beſt.

As to the other objections, it is proper to obſerve, that the city of Glouceſter is enlightened with lamps, by virtue of an act of parliament; and that in the ſame city is a noble infirmary, erected and ſupported by ſubſcriptions and private donations; a more particular account of which will be found in a ſubſequent ſection of the general hiſtory.

Some perſons have conſidered the latter part of the quoted paragraph, as containing an unneceſſary, not to ſay injurious, inſinuation of the want of public charity; for my part, I underſtand the author as warmly expreſſing his zeal for the promotion of the practice of that great and noble virtue. That he never intended to reflect on the county, of which he had written the hiſtory, is evident from the following paſſage: "It appears, "ſays he, by examining the particular charities "in the ſeveral pariſhes, that this latter age "has been as fruitful in good works as any of "the former. There has not been ſo many "pompous buildings, and extravagant donations, "which are often the effects of proud and ſuper-"ſtitious minds; but the modern charities tend "to the relief of the ſick and poor, which proceed "from an humble and compaſſionate mind. "The others go away with the loud applauſe of "the world; but theſe are the true praiſe-wor-"thy, and ought to be encouraged." p. 16.

The

The Monaſticon Anglicanum of Sir William Dugdale, and the Supplement to it, by Mr. Stevens, have been ſometimes produced to ſhew the many and great acts of charity before the reformation, by way of depreciating the latter ones; but with how little reaſon, will appear to thoſe that will take the trouble to examine into the many public charities done ſince that time, and compare them with thoſe in any like number of years before it. By this method, ſuch a difference will be ſeen as to render the one unworthy of a compariſon with the other. Dr. Willet, in his Synopſis Papiſmi, has given us a ſhort ſpecimen with regard to the two univerſities, and the city of London; but vaſt numbers of benefactions have been made ſince that work was firſt publiſhed. Beſides, the author was not fully informed of all the charities, down to the time when he wrote.——All nations muſt acknowledge, that none enjoys freedom of ſentiment more fully than this, nor is charity any where more liberally diſpenced to the poor and needy. Whatever virtues have deſerted our country, charity ſtill continues to adorn it.

" There is no part of Gloſterſhire, ſays Sir " R. Atkyns, but what is within ſeven miles * of " ſome other county: This happens becauſe the " city of Gloſter is a diſtinct county, and the " pariſh of Kingſwood is in Wiltſhire;" to which he might have added, that Poulton, in the ſame county, and Broadway, in Worceſterſhire, are both completely ſurrounded by Glouceſterſhire. There are alſo ſeveral places in this county ſurrounded by Oxfordſhire, Wiltſhire, Worceſterſhire, and Warwickſhire, which will be particularly taken notice of under the reſpective pariſhes.—Theſe are a few of the vaſt number of inſtances that might be given of the great irregularity and confuſion in the antient diviſion of lands in the kingdom; which ſome perſons have ſuppoſed to have been occaſioned by the great influence of the barons after the conqueſt; who, jealous of the rights and honours of their manors, procured their lands on the borders, and within the limits of neighbouring counties, to be appropriated to thoſe in which their demeans, and chief places of reſidence lay.—But it is very certain that this diſtribution, as to Glouceſterſhire, took place before the conqueſt; becauſe, when the kingdom was ſurveyed, at the beginning of the conqueror's reign, neither of the places I have juſt mentioned, as belonging to other counties, were then reputed as part of this; and Widford, which is ſurrounded by Oxfordſhire, was then, as well as now, belonging to Glouceſterſhire. See Domeſday-book.

The ſame learned author, p. 23, has repreſented the pariſh of Keynſham to be in this county, whereas it is in Somerſetſhire. But this is one of thoſe trivial miſtakes which genius frequently overlooks; and which I mention not invidiouſly, being ſenſible that all men are ſubject to error.

Of the RIVERS.

THE principal rivers are the Severn; the Iſis, or Thames; the firſt Avon, at Tewkeſbury; the ſecond Avon, at Briſtol. Theſe receive all the others that either riſe in the county, or run through it.

The SEVERN. The Britiſh name of this river is Hafren, which was given it, if Giraldus Cambrenſis and Geoffry of Monmouth are to be credited, becauſe a virgin of the name of Abren, or Hebren, was drowned in it, by the command of queen Guendoloena, after the death of Locrine, her huſband, becauſe ſhe was the fruit of his unlawful love.

—— In flumen præcipitatur Abren;
Nomen Abren fluvio de virgine; nomen eidem.
Nomine corrupto, deinde Sabrina datur.

Headlong was Abren thrown into the ſtream,
And hence the river took the virgin's name.
Corrupted, thence at laſt Sabrina came.

But Leland deſervedly treats this ſtory as fabulous, and gives it as his opinion, that both this river and the Humber took their names of Aber, which in the Britiſh language ſignifies the mouth of any river.

It riſes out of Plinlimmon-hill, in Montgomeryſhire, and makes, ſays Camden, " ſuch a num- " ber of windings, that a perſon would think " many times he returns again to his fountain." It paſſes by Lanidlos and Welchpool, where it becomes navigable; and proceeding to Shrewſbury and Bridgenorth, enters Worceſterſhire above Bewdley; viſits Worceſter, and haſtens into Glouceſterſhire a little above Tewkeſbury, receiving the Avon from Warwickſhire, about half a mile below that town. Taking its courſe downwards " it " parts itſelf to make the iſle of Alney, which is " rich and beautiful, and then haſtens to Glou- " ceſter; a little below which place, uniting its " divided ſtreams, it waxeth broader and deeper

* When Sir Robert wrote the Antient and Preſent State of Gloſterſhire, the diſtances between places were not ſo commonly meaſured as they now are; therefore, when he ſpeaks of miles, candour will underſtand him to intend the common computation of the country.

" by the ebbing and flowing of the tide." Paſſing by the antient borough of Newnham, to a place below Chepſtow, after a courſe of more than forty miles thro' the county, it receives the Wye, which riſes out of the ſame hill, and loſes its name at the place of confluence, their united waters being called the Severn. Here the river becomes a boundary between Glouceſterſhire and Monmouthſhire, and continues ſo 'till it receives the Avon, which runs from Briſtol, at Kingroad. For many miles above this place, the ſevern is two or three miles over, but here it is three or four times as broad, and capable of receiving ſhips of great burthen.

On this river, from Glouceſter and Newnham, ſeveral brigs are employ'd in the trade to London and Ireland, and a great number of barges, or trows, run to and from Briſtol, Glouceſter, Tewkeſbury, Worceſter, and Bewdley, at which place, a communication is opened, by a canal, with the rivers Merſey and Trent, promiſing great advantages to this trading country.

The Severn is remarkable for its tide, which rolls in with a head of three or four feet high, foaming and roaring in its courſe, as if enraged by the oppoſition it meets with from a ſtrong current of freſh water, which ſeems to contend with it for the ſuperiority. They claſh in ſuch a manner as to daſh the waters to a conſiderable height. This conteſt between them is called the Hygre, or Eager, probably from the French eau-guerre, i. e. water-war. The tide getting the better, marches up the ſtream victoriouſly. Hear Drayton's deſcription of this turbulent river.

——————————" with whoſe tumultuous waves,
Shut up in narrow bounds, the Hygre wildry raves;
And 'frights the ſtraggling flocks, the neighbouring ſhores to fly
Afar, as from the main it comes with hideous cry.
And on the angry front the curling foam doth bring,
The billows 'gainſt the banks, when fiercely it doth fling:
Hurles up the ſlimy ooze, and makes the ſcaly brood
Leap madding to the land, affrighted, from the flood;
O'erturns the toiling barge, whoſe ſteerſman doth not launch,
And thruſts the furrowing beake into her ireful paunch.
As when we haply ſee a fickly woman fall
Into a fit of that which we the mother call.
When from the grieved wombe ſhe feels the pain ariſe,
Breaks into grievous ſighs, with intermixed cries,
Bereaved of her ſenſe; and ſtruggling ſtill with thoſe
That 'gainſt her riſing paine their utmoſt ſtrength oppoſe,
Starts, toſſes, tumbles, ſtrikes, turns, touſes, ſpurns and ſprawls,
Caſting with furious limbs her holders to the walls.
But that the horrid pangs torment the grieved ſo,
One well might muſe from whence this ſudden ſtrength ſhould grow."

Sir Robert Atkyns attempts to account for the tide coming in as above deſcribed, and not ſwelling more gradually, as in ſome other rivers. It is occaſioned, he ſays, by the mouth of the Severn opening to the great Atlantic ocean, which pours in its tide with great violence, and the river growing narrow on a ſudden, it fills the channel at once.

The remark that the tides here are largeſt one year at full moon, and the next at the change; and that the night-tides are larger than the day-tides one year, and the contrary the next, is, I believe, rather a chimera, than the reſult of accurate obſervation.

The Severn has been ſaid to be a rapid river, yet there is not a lock upon it, from the top of the navigation downwards, which is a circumſtance not very conſiſtent with that notion, for rapid rivers are generally full of ſhallows. Like other great rivers, it overflows its banks after much rain, from which the vale of Glouceſterſhire ſuſtained great damage, particularly in the years 1606, 1687, and 1703.

This river does not boaſt of a great variety of fiſh, yet the ſalmon, of which there is great plenty, is truly excellent. To ſome perſons the flavour of the ſhad of this river is very grateful. This is a ſea-fiſh, of the herring kind, by ſome naturaliſts called Clupea. But the Severn is more eſpecially famed for the lamprey, in Latin, lampetra, a ſpecies of Petromyzon. It has ſeveral rows of teeth, without back-bone, or gills, but inſtead of the latter, on each ſide of the throat are ſeven holes to receive water. It is of a dark colour on the back, but of a fine, clear, light blue on the belly. It ſometimes grows to the weight of three pounds, and upwards of two feet and a half in length. They are very ſcarce, much eſteemed, and ſell at a high price.

The Severn alſo produces the elver, a ſpecies of fiſh which the editor of Camden, by miſtake, ſuppoſes not to be found in any county but Somerſetſhire. If the ſpring be mild and open, they generally appear about the middle of April, when they cover the ſurface of the water, more eſpecially about the mouths of the rivers that empty themſelves into the Severn. They are of a dark brown colour, about two or three inches long, and have the name from a ſuppoſition that they are young eels. The country people ſkim them up in great abundance, ſcour and boil them, and bring them to market as white as ſnow, where they uſually ſell at about two-pence a pound.

The bailiwick of the Severn is in the crown. John Arnold had a leaſe of it 1660, for thirty-one years at 10*l.* a year. Mr. Edward Baylis of Gloceſter is the preſent Water bailiff.—2° E. 6. Thomas Hennage and the lord Willoughby had a grant of a fiſhery, from Newnham-ladder to Boxgrove, which formerly belonged to the abbey of St. Auſtin's, Briſtol.

The places for paſſing of this river are as follow, viz.

At the Lower Load, a mile below Tewkeſbury, by ferry.

At the Haw, ſix miles above Glouceſter, by boat.

At Maiſmore bridge.

At the bridge at Glouceſter.

At Framilode, by boat, about ten miles below Glouceſter. The paſſage-houſe is on the S. E. ſide of the river. They land at Weſtbury.

At

At Newnham, two miles farther down, where the paſſage-houſe is on the contrary ſide. They land at Arlingham. Here is a ford, over which, at low water, waggons and people on horſeback, of more reſolution than prudence, ſometimes paſs; for many have loſt their lives in the attempt. The river is here about a mile over. At the above places they paſs almoſt at any time.

At Pirton, in the pariſh of Lidney. They land in Berkeley pariſh.

At Auſt, in the pariſh of Henbury, and Beachley, in that of Tidenham, are correſpondent paſſage-houſes. This paſſage communicates with the roads in Monmouthſhire on one ſide, and thoſe leading to Briſtol and Bath on the other. As it is of great importance to travellers to know the time of paſſing, the following obſervations will be uſeful. The paſſage here depends both on the wind and tide. The ſoutherly, weſterly, and northerly winds are proper for paſſing; but when the wind and tide go both the ſame way, there is no paſſing; therefore, when the wind is northerly it muſt be at flood, or coming in of the tide, and then you may paſs for five hours. On the contrary, when the wind is ſoutherly or weſterly, all paſſing muſt be at ebb, or going out of the tide, which affords ſeven hours good paſſing.

Knowing the age of the moon, by which all tides are governed, the following table ſhows at what hour to paſs every day in the year.

When the tide is coming in, the wind being above, they paſs an hour earlier at the New Paſſage than here; but the tide going out, and wind below, they are an hour later at the New Paſſage; ſo that this table will ſerve for both paſſages.

This river was formerly the limit between England and Wales; and the acts 8° H. 6. c. 27, and 27° H. 8. were intended to prevent robberies upon it. The 20° C. 2. c. 9. is for the preſervation of fiſh therein.

The Avon. This river riſes near Naſeby, in Northamptonſhire, enters Warwickſhire at Colthrop, and paſſes by Rugby, Warwick, and Stratford, where it is navigable. Quitting that county, it haſtens by Eveſham to enter Glouceſterſhire, a little above Tewkeſbury; and about half a mile below the town, is diſcharged into the Severn. The name is Britiſh, and ſignifies a river.

The Iſbourne, a little river which riſes in Charlton Abbats, and runs by Winchcombe, empties itſelf into the Avon a little below Eveſham.

The Carrant, which riſes in Beckford, is a boundary, above Tewkeſbury, between the counties of Glouceſter and Worceſter, and empties itſelf into the Avon; as doth

The Swilyate, a little below that town.

The little river Chilt, riſes at Dowdeſwell, and running by Cheltenham is voided into the Severn at Wainload's-bridge.

The Badgworth river, after receiving a brook that runs thro' Brockworth, falls into the Severn at Sainthurſt, or Sandhurſt.

The Leaden or Leddon, riſes in Herefordſhire, and empties itſelf into the Severn almoſt oppoſite Glouceſter.

The Froome, or Stroud river, riſes at Brimpſfield, runs by Stroud, thro' Stonehouſe, Eaſington, and into the Severn at Framilode.

The Ewelm, riſes at Owlpen and Uly, runs by Durſley, and receives the Broad-well water. Paſſing on, it changes its firſt name for that of Cam, which it communicates to the next village; and collecting ſeveral little ſtreams in its courſe to Cowley and Slimbridge, falls into the Severn at the laſt mentioned pariſh.

The Berkeley Avon, riſes in two heads at Boxwell and Kilcot, and collecting other ſmall brooks in its courſe, paſſes by Berkeley, and a little below it, falls into the Severn.

The Isis. This river has generally been conſidered as the head of the Thames, which, according to the current opinion, had that name from the junction of the names of the two rivers, Thame and Iſis, as their waters alſo join near Dorcheſter, in Oxfordſhire. But however plauſible this etymology may ſeem, the learned author of the additions to Camden's Britannia has made it appear, that this river, which Camden and others have called Iſis and Ouſe, was antiently called Thames or Tems, before it came near the Thame, and produces the following authorities. " In an antient charter granted to abbat Ald-
" helm, there is particular mention made of cer" tain lands upon the eaſt part of the river, cujus
" vocabulum Temis, juxta vadum qui appellatur
" Summerford; and this ford is in Wiltſhire.
" The ſame thing appears from ſeveral other
" charters granted to the abbey of Malmeſbury,
" as well as that of Eveſham; and from the old
" deeds relating to Cricklade. And perhaps it
" may with ſafety be affirmed, that in any charter
" or authentic hiſtory, it does not ever occur un" der the name of Iſis; which indeed is not ſo
" much as heard of but among ſcholars; the " common

" common people, all along from the head of it " to Oxford, calling it by no other name but that " of Thames. So alſo the Saxon Temeȝe (from " whence our Tems immediately comes) is a plain " evidence that that people never dreamt of any " ſuch conjunction. But further: All our hiſ- " torians who mention the incurſions of Æthel- " wold into Wiltſhire, A. D. 905; or of Canute, " A. D. 1016, tell us, that they paſſed over the " Thames at Cricklade.——As for the original " of the word [Thames] it ſeems plainly to be " Britiſh, becauſe there are ſeveral rivers in ſeveral " parts of England of almoſt the ſame name " with it; as Tame in Staffordſhire, Teme in Here- " fordſhire, Tamar in Cornwall, &c. And a " learned perſon of that nation [Mr. Lhwyd] " affirms it to be the ſame with their Tâf, which " is the name of many rivers in Wales; the Ro- " mans changing the pronunciation of the (f) " into (m), as the Latin word Demetia, is in " Welch Dyfed." Camden's Brit. col. 100, 101.

Mr. Lhwyd has alſo ſhewn that where the Latins uſe an (m) the Britons have a (v), as Firmus, Firv; Terminus, Tervin; Amnis, Avon; Lima, Lhiv, &c. and that the word Táv, was, according to the old Britiſh orthography, written Tam; wherefore he thinks that Táv, or Taff, is originally the ſame word with Tame, or Thames; and that tamos in potamos is probably no other.

The Thames has been reputed to riſe in the pariſh of Coats, out of a well that overflows in the winter, or in a very wet ſeaſon only; but in the ſummer, this river can be traced no higher than to ſome ſprings which riſe in the pariſh of Kemble, a little ſouth of the foſs road. The poetical deſcription of the ſource of this river may be found in the Marriage of Thame and Iſis, which Mr. Camden's Biographer ſuppoſes him to be the author of; it begins thus:

Lanigeros quà lata greges Cotſwaldia paſcit, &c.

The following tranſlation of it is taken from the Britannia.

Where Cotſwold's hillocks, fam'd for weighty ſheep,
Their eager courſe to the Dobunians keep;
Near the great foſſe a ſpacious plain there lies,
Where broken cliffs the ſecret top diſguiſe.
Hugh free-ſtones neatly carv'd adorn the gate
The porch with ivory ſhines, the roof with jeat,
And rows of pumice in the poſts are ſet.
But nature yields to art: the workman's ſkill
Does free-ſtone, ivory, pumice, jeat, excel.
* * * * * * * * *
Here awful Isis fills his liquid throne;
Isis, whom Britiſh ſtreams their monarch own.
His never-wearied hands a ſpacious urn,
Down on his azure boſom gravely turn,
And flags and reeds his unpoll'd locks adorn.
Each waving horn the ſubject ſtream ſupplies,
And grateful light darts from his ſhining eyes.
His grizzly beard all wet hangs dropping down,
And guſhing veins in wat'ry channels run.
The little fiſh in joyful numbers crowd,
And ſilver ſwans fly o'er the cryſtal flood,
And clap their ſnowy wings, &c.——

The reader will be eaſily perſuaded that the poet has taken greater licence in deſcribing the ſource of this river, than will be allowed the topographer; and if he ſhould ſurvey the place called Thames-head, he will find, that the picture is not a very ſtriking likeneſs of nature.

This river is navigable as high as Cricklade, in Wiltſhire, from whence it runs to Leachlade, and viſits Oxford, Abingdon, Wallingford, Reading, Henly and Windſor, in its way to the great metropolis.

The Churn is another river, more antiently written, in compoſition, Ceri, Cori, Corin; as Caer-Cori, &c. The name is of Britiſh original; Chwyrn, in that language ſignifies rapid. This river riſes at Cubberly, ten miles north of Cirenceſter, and paſſing thro' that town, joins the Thames near Cricklade; and may with great propriety be called the head of that river, being the higheſt ſource from whence it derives its water.

The Coln riſing near Withington, runs by Compton, Foſs-bridge, Bibury, Coln St. Aldwin's, and Fairford, and pours its ſtream into the Thames, a little above Leachlade.

The Lech riſes in the pariſh of Hampnet, and paſſing by Northleach and Eaſtleach, empties itſelf into the Thames a little below Leachlade, which places all take their names from this river.

The Windruſh riſes near Guiting, and paſſing by Bourton-on-the-Water and Barrington, and ſo on to Burford and Witney, in Oxfordſhire, joins the Thames at Newbridge, in that county.

The Evenlode runs from a pariſh of the ſame name in Worceſterſhire, near Battesford, and after paſſing thro' the eaſt corner of Glouceſterſhire, enters Oxfordſhire, and mingles its waters with the Thames near Eanſham.

The Avon, or Briſtol Avon, takes its riſe at Tetbury, in this county, which it quits immediately; and paſſing by Malmeſbury, Chippenham, Bradford, and Bath, where it is navigable, runs to Briſtol, and from thence to Kingroad, where the Briſtol ſhips firſt ſpread their ſails when outward bound, and firſt caſt anchor upon their return home. This river waſhes the weſtern borders of Glouceſterſhire, and is the boundary between it and Somerſetſhire, for about twenty miles. By 11° and 12° W. 3. c. 23. the mayor, burgeſſes, and commonalty of the city of Briſtol, are conſervators of the Avon, from above the bridge there to Kingroad, and ſo down the Severn to the two iſlands called Holmes. And the preſervation of the rivers Avon and Froome, is the object of the 25th chapter of the ſame ſtatute; and of the 20th chapter of 22° G. 2. It was once propoſed to join the Avon with the Thames by a canal, and ſo to compleat an inland navigation betwixt London and Briſtol, which might be eaſily carried into execution.

The

The Boyd riſes at Codrington, and empties itſelf into the Avon at Bitton.

The Froome riſes in two heads at Doddington and Rangeworthy, and receiving ſeveral little brooks, paſſes on to the key at Briſtol, where it falls into the Avon.

The little river Trin, or Trim, runs from Weſtbury by a very ſhort courſe into the Avon.

The Wye has but little claim to a place in our liſt of rivers. It is a boundary between Glouceſterſhire and Monmouthſhire at Welch Bicknor, and at St. Briavel's. It then runs again into Herefordſhire to take its laſt farewell; and quitting it, as tho' with reluctance, divides the two firſt mentioned counties a little above Monmouth. Half the wooden-bridge over this river at Chepſtow is repaired by Glouceſterſhire, and the other half by Monmouthſhire, as directed by 18° Eliz. and 3° Jac. 1. This bridge is built near the confluence of the Wye with the Severn, at which place is one of the higheſt tides in the world, the flood ſometimes riſing ſixty feet. The Wye is well ſtored with excellent ſalmon, and other fiſh common to ſuch large rivers.

Of the LIEUTENANCY, &c. of the COUNTY.

IN the time of the Saxons, the governors of other counties were called earls, or dukes; but Glouceſterſhire had its vice-roys, or ſub-reguli. Oſrick, or Oſhire, was vice-roy of the Wiccij in the year 680. Huctred ſucceeded him, who was alſo followed by Eanbert and Aldred, his two brothers.

Mr. Camden is of opinion, that the Cuſtodes Regni, ſettled in every county by king Alfred, were of the ſame nature with our lieutenants. And that thoſe were afterwards known in the reign of H. 3. by the name of Capitanei, who, by the aſſiſtance of the ſheriffs were to curb the inſolence of the robbers.

The governors of counties are now called the king's lieutenants. The office of lieutenancy, under that particular name, is but of late eſtabliſhment, tho' of great honour and dignity. Lords lieutenants were at firſt appointed occaſionally by the crown, whoſe repreſentatives they are, with coercive power to keep order, within their reſpective counties, in time of great danger. They ſeem to have been firſt uſed on the ſuppreſſion of monaſteries, which cauſed a great ferment in the nation. They were afterwards eſtabliſhed by law 2° and 3° E. 6. c. 2. and 4° and 5° Ph. and M. c. 3. and confirmed by 13° and 14° Car. 2. c. 3.

The defence of the nation formerly depended on tenures, and on the forces raiſed by the ſheriffs in their counties. King H. 2 iſſued a proclamation, commanding all freeholders and burgeſſes of his dominions, on the continent, to provide themſelves with arms offenſive and defenſive, in proportion to their ſubſtance; an ordinance which afterwards took place in England, according to the regulation of the aſſize of arms, which was executed under the inſpection of the itinerant judges.

Every perſon poſſeſſed of a knight's fee, was obliged to have a coat of mail, a helmet, ſhield and lance, and ſuch a ſuit for every fee he poſſeſſed. Every free layman poſſeſſed of effects, or rents, to the value of ſixteen marks, was bound to have the ſame ſort of armour; and thoſe who had not above ten marks, were excuſed for a ſlighter coat of mail, an iron ſkull-cap and a lance. Burgeſſes were equipped with an iron cap, a lance, and a wambois, or quilted coat; and no perſon could pawn, or lend his armour, nor could a lord take it from his vaſſal by forfeiture, gift, ſecurity, or under any pretence whatſoever. When the poſſeſſor died, the armour deſcended to his heir; and during a minority, the guardian took it in charge, and provided a man for ſervice, until his ward was able to ſerve in perſon. Benedict. p. 365.

Queen Elizabeth, upon the great invaſion threatened by the Spaniard, 1588, by the advice of her council, began to iſſue out commiſſions of array, and to model a ſtanding militia. Lord Chandois was then appointed lieutenant of this county, and the trained bands conſiſted of 3000 foot under ten captains, and 250 horſe, divided into four troops.

The earl of Berkeley had a commiſſion of lieutenancy 7° Jac. when the militia was new modelled, but the county provided the ſame number of men as before. Berkeley diviſion was charged with 750 men, under three captains; the diviſion of the Seven Hundreds furniſhed 750 men, under three captains; Kiftſgate diviſion 750 men, under four captains; the Foreſt diviſion 400 men, under two captains; and the city of Glouceſter, with the hundred of Dudſton and King's-Barton, called the in-county, was charged with 350 men, under one captain.

This body was divided into 600 pike-men, 600 halbardeers, 600 muſketteers, and 1200 calivers. There were then only 200 horſe, under the command of four captains, of whom 20 were furniſhed with lances, and the reſt were called light horſe. The county was alſo charged with 400*l.* to provide ammunition.

The militia was then raiſed by the inhabitants in proportion to their eſtates. By the 13° and 14° C. 2. c. 3. every perſon having a revenue of 500*l. per ann.* or an eſtate in goods or money of 6000*l.* value, was liable to find a horſe, horſe-man and arms; having a yearly revenue of 50*l.* or a perſonal eſtate of 600*l.* in goods or money, other than ſtock upon the ground, made him liable to find a foot-ſoldier and arms, and ſo in proportion for a greater eſtate in both inſtances. But real and perſonal eſtates were chargeable according to theſe proportions, tho' of a ſmaller value, to the ſupplying of arms, and pay.

But this law was repealed 30° G. 2. and a new one, very materially different from the former, took place of it, § which has been ſince explained and amended by 2° G. 3. By the old laws, property was charged with the burthen of the ſervice; which by the new, is determined by lot on perſons between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years, without any regard to property. By 30° G. 2. men were liable to be placed on the liſts from the age of eighteen to that of fifty; and according to liſts ſo made out, one man out of twenty-nine was taken in Glouceſterſhire, to furniſh 960 men, which was the complement for this county, including the cities of Glouceſter and Briſtol. But this proportion would have raiſed a greater number, had the liſts been accurately made.

Among the Romans, the military age, according to Dionyſius and Polybius, was from ſeventeen to forty-five or forty-ſix, and in dangerous times to fifty. Formerly our militia was compoſed of perſons from the age of ſixteen to ſixty; ſo that a great part of them muſt have been old men and boys.

The earl of Berkeley is the preſent lieutenant of Glouceſterſhire. Many of his lordſhip's anceſtors held this office of high truſt, 'till the death of the late earl of Berkeley, when it was ſucceſſively filled by lord Ducie, the late lord Chedworth, and Norborne Berkeley, eſq; now lord Botetourt; who, going to take upon himſelf the government of Virginia, was ſucceeded as colonel of the militia by the earl of Berkeley. This nobleman is alſo Cuſtos Rotulorum of the county.

Of the OFFICE of HIGH SHERIFF, With a Liſt of Sheriffs of this County to the preſent Time.

EVERY county is governed by a yearly officer, whom we call the ſheriff. The name is of Saxon original, compounded of Scyne, already explained, and Geneta, a governor, or conſul; that is, a governor of a ſhire or county. The ſheriff was ſometimes alſo called Viſcount, before the word was uſed to ſignify a title of honour.

The principal functions of this office are thus defined by Mr. Madox, in his very accurate Hiſtory of the Exchequer: "It was the ſheriff's duty to "do the juſtice of his county, to keep the public "peace, to ſtock and improve the king's lands, "and to collect the king's revenue." It appears that in time of war, he alſo performed ſome military functions; and the above-cited author has obſerved, "that he uſually was the præfect, "or governor of the king's caſtle in his county." In the ſecond book of lord Littleton's Life of king Henry the Second, I find moſt of the following further particulars relating to this office. It is ſaid, that among the Anglo-Saxons, the ſheriff was elected in the county-court, by the people; and in the reign of king Henry the Firſt, the citizens of London paid a fine to that prince, of a hundred marks of ſilver, that they might have the privilege of chuſing their ſheriffs themſelves. But no inſtance occurs of ſuch a liberty in the counties after the entrance of the Normans, 'till the ſtatute made by Edward the Firſt, in the 28th year of his reign, by which he granted to his people, that they ſhall have election of their ſheriff in every ſhire where the ſhrivalty is not of fee, if they liſt. Nor did that act of parliament continue long unrepealed. In the times of which I write, ſays his lordſhip, the ſheriffs had the counties committed to them reſpectively, by the king, at his pleaſure, either in cuſtody, or at ferm-certain.

It appears by the rolls, that, under Henry the Firſt, Richard Baſſet and Aubrey de Vere, were joint-ſheriffs of eleven counties. This was extraordinary: but there are ſeveral inſtances under different kings, of two or three being committed to the ſame perſon. Urſo d' Abitot, in the reign of William the Conqueror, was made ſheriff of Worceſterſhire, and the office was granted in fee to him and his heirs. Nevertheleſs it appears that his ſon was turned out of it by Henry the Firſt, for having ordered one of the ſervants of that king to be ſlain. But it went to his ſiſter, and in her right to her huſband, Walter de Beauchamp, from whom it deſcended, by inheritance, to William their ſon, who, in the reign of Henry the

§ An order was publiſh'd, 43 E. 3. requiring all eccleſiaſtics in general, to be array'd and arm'd for the defence of the kingdom. Afterwards they were exempt from perſonal ſervice, but were to find money to provide their quota of men and arms, which they were permitted to ſettle themſelves. But by 30 G. 2. and 2 G. 3. all peers of the realm, the clergy, and members of both univerſities, with a few others, are intirely exempt from this ſervice.

Second,

Second, was alſo ſheriff of three other counties, viz. thoſe of Hereford, Glouceſter, and Warwick. Archbiſhops and biſhops were ſometimes appointed ſheriffs. William biſhop of Ely, who was chancellor to king Richard the Firſt, offered to give the king for the ſhrivalty of the ſeveral counties of York, Lincoln, and Northampton, 1500 marks in hand, and 100 marks increment, (that is, above the uſual term) every year for each county. But the archbiſhop of York out-bid him for Yorkſhire, and was made ſheriff thereof, on the payment of 3000 marks for that county alone, and the yearly increment of 300. Three thouſand marks were then equivalent to 30,000*l.* in our days. This auction of a miniſterial and judicial office, of the higheſt truſt and importance, was a ſcandalous thing; and the permitting of an office of this kind to deſcend by inheritance, may be reckoned among the faults of our old conſtitution; from which the kingdom muſt have experienced great inconveniencies, therefore proviſion was at length made by ſtatute, that no perſon ſhould ſerve two years together, but ſhould be two years at leaſt diveſted of the office, and not 'till then be capable of ſerving again in the ſame county.

The following is a Liſt of the SHERIFFS of the County of Glouceſter, with the Years in which they ſerved, from 1 H. 2. to the preſent Time.

Of

Of KNIGHTS of the SHIRE, ſent from this County to Parliament, from 1° E. 6. to the preſent Time; with a few previous Obſervations on our antient Parliaments.

TO trace out exactly the original of our parliament, and to obſerve the ſeveral alterations it hath undergone, 'till it came to be modelled as we now ſee it, is a work of the greateſt difficulty, owing to the deſtruction of our records in the Saxon and other wars.

The Anglo-Saxons brought with them many of the laws and cuſtoms of the antient German nations, with whom all the freeholders enjoy'd an equal right with the nobles, to aſſiſt in deliberations on affairs of great moment. And it is highly probable, from a paſſage in Matthew of Weſtminſter, that the people's right of appearing in parliament, was exerciſed originally by the whole body of freeholders, aſſembling together in open plains. "The meadow near Steins," ſays he, "in which the Great Charter was granted by "king John, had the name of Runemeed; which "in the Saxon language, ſignifies the meadow of "counſel, becauſe, from antient times, it had been "uſual to conſult there, upon buſineſs which con-"cerned the peace of the kingdom."

The preſence of the people in the Saxon councils, either in perſon, or by repreſentation, and their having had a ſhare in the higheſt acts of legiſlature and government, may be proved, in the ſtrongeſt manner, by the preamble to laws, and other proceedings of thoſe councils.

About the year 800, Egbert, king of the Weſt-Saxons, overpower'd the other kingdoms, and united them under one monarchy. Soon after, the lords of the leet, and the repreſentatives of towns, who were choſen by the burgeſſes, were ſummoned by the king, and appeared at the Witena ȝemot, which in the Saxon language, ſignifies the aſſembly of wiſe men, who met once a year at leaſt, and generally twice, about Eaſter and Michaelmas. Wilkins LL. Sax.

We are not told where this meeting was holden; but 'tis probable, that at this time the cuſtom of aſſembling in the open fields had been diſuſed; nor do we find an inſtance of its being ever revived, 'till that extraordinary meeting in the reign of king John; all the parliaments, or great councils, whereof we have any accounts before, having been held in churches, abbies, or royal caſtles; it ſhould ſeem therefore, that the freeholders muſt have exerciſed their right, not perſonally, as they did in more antient times, but by repreſentatives; for no building could be ſufficient to contain all the freeholders in the kingdom, even in thoſe times.

On long uſage the people's right of going to parliament ſeems to have been eſtabliſhed, before the conqueſt; and it appears to have been continued under William the Conqueror, with other cuſtoms and rights, confirmed by him to the nation; and under his ſucceſſors, by like ſanctions of antient liberties, granted in repeated royal charters. But of what orders of men the Engliſh parliament was compoſed, for ſeveral reigns immediately ſucceeding the conqueſt, is a queſtion much diſputed, and which can never, perhaps, be ſo abſolutely decided as to put an end to any difference of opinion about it; but happily the inquiry is rather matter of curioſity, than of real importance; becauſe the right of the commons to a ſhare of the legiſlature and national councils, even according to the hypotheſis of thoſe who are not moſt favourable to them, has antiquity enough to give it all the eſtabliſhment which can be derived from long cuſtom, and all the reverence and authority, which time and experience can add to the ſpeculative reaſon and fitneſs of wiſe inſtitutions.

We learn from Hoveden, that William the Firſt, after having compelled all the Engliſh, as well as Normans, to take out patents of their lands, to be holden of him by knight-ſervice, ſummoned the moſt eminent of thoſe feodaries called * barons, with perſons learned in the law, to ſit with him in the great council, particularly in the 4th year of his reign, which was that in which he firſt brought the biſhops and abbats under the tenure of barony. To this council, twelve were returned out of every county, who ſhewed what the cuſtoms of the kingdom were, which Aldred archbiſhop of York, and Hugh biſhop of London took down in writing; and they were confirmed in that aſſembly, which was a parliament of that time.

At the coronation of H. 1. Clerus Angliæ, et populus univerſus, the clergy and all the people of England, ſaith Matthew Paris, were ſummoned to Weſtminſter, where ſeveral laws were made and publiſhed. And in the ſecond year of king H. 5. the houſe of commons aſſert, in their petition to the king, that it ever hath been their liberty and freedom, that there ſhould no ſtatute or law be made without their aſſent; and that they are, and ever have been, a member of the parliament; which claim was not diſallowed either by the lords or the king.

* There is no colourable teſtimony in any record or law, that ſo much as ſeems to juſtify the common notion of 13½ knights fees held in capite, making a great barony; and of 20 making an earldom. In truth the contrary is very plain. Jeffery lord Talbot held 20 knights fees in chief, of H. 1. the ſame which Walter de Meduana held afterwards of H. 2. yet neither of theſe were ever accounted to have had earldoms. The ſame may be ſaid of John de Port, who had 57 knights fees, &c. and many others, as may be ſeen in the records of the exchequer, where are ſome who have had fewer than 13, and yet are equally barons with the reſt. Selden's Tit. of Honour.

We are aſſured by a record which Dr. Brady has cited, that ſo late as in the 15th year of king John, not only the greater barons, but all the inferior tenants, in chief, of the crown, had a right to be ſummoned to parliament by particular writs; but theſe were far from being all the freeholders in the kingdom. We are therefore to inquire whether at this time the reſt were excluded from parliament, or were preſent there by any kind of repreſentation.

Sir Henry Spelman, and ſome other learned writers, have ſuppoſed, that every ſuperior lord who held of the king immediately, and in chief, being the head of his tenants, in all the degrees of ſub-infeudation, whatever he agreed to in making of laws, bound all his vaſſals, he being as it were, their tribune or procurator; in like manner as the freeholders are now bound by the acts of the knights of the ſhire. But it is to be obſerved, that the knights, citizens and burgeſſes, who are now the repreſentatives of the commons of England, are elected by thoſe for whom they ſerve; all their power is derived to them from their electors, and on the calling of a new parliament, thoſe electors are at liberty to make a new choice; whereas the ſuperior lords were neither elected, nor liable to be changed, at any period of time, by thoſe whom, according to Sir H. Spelman's hypotheſis, they repreſented; and indeed it ſeems improper, and a force on the words, to call them repreſentatives, or procurators.

But further, if the barons, and ſuperior lords of great fiefs, holden immediately of the crown, had, by virtue of the inſtitutions of William the Firſt, been ſuppoſed to repreſent their vaſſals in parliaments; and the notion was then, that every feudatory, holding by a meſne tenure, was bound by the parliamentary acts of his lord; how came that notion to be diſcarded in the reigns of H. 3. Edw. 1. Edw. 3. &c. ſince it is certain, that a baron who held of the crown, was to all intents and purpoſes the head of his vaſſals in thoſe reigns, as much as in any of the preceding ones? How happened it then, that the conſent of the vaſſals to the making of laws in thoſe reigns, was not ſtill included in the vote of their lord? And why was it given, againſt the courſe of former proceedings, not by him, as their repreſentative, but by knights of the ſhires, or by citizens, or by burgeſſes, choſen by the vaſſals?

Some learned men have aſſerted, that this change was brought about by the power of the earl of Leiceſter, 49° H. 3. But we have a record that demonſtrates that date to be falſe. A writ of ſummons directed to the ſheriffs of Bedfordſhire and Buckinghamſhire, requiring two knights to be ſent for thoſe counties, is extant in the cloſe roll of 38° H. 3. And there is a clauſe in the Great Charter, of the 9th of the ſame king, whereby it is declared, that together with the ſpiritual and temporal lords, other inferior freeholders, et omnes de regno, by which words I underſtand the whole commonalty of the realm, granted to the king the fifteenth part of all their moveable goods, in return for the liberties accorded to them in that charter. Nor can I diſcover, in the hiſtory of thoſe times, any reaſon ſufficient to render it probable, that ſo great an alteration ſhould then have been made in the conſtitution of England. But if it had been made, it muſt naturally have produced ſome diſputes, which would have been taken notice of by ſome of the many hiſtorians who lived in that age, and who have left very large and particular accounts of leſs important tranſactions; whereas they are quite ſilent as to any diſputes between the nobility and the people, on this account, from the earlieſt times of the Saxon government, down to the reign of Ch. 1. wherefore I think we may preſume, that the right of the commons muſt have been inconteſtably eſtabliſhed by cuſtom, and interwoven into the original frame of our government; and that the antient parliaments, from the conqueſt down to H. 3. contained in them the firſt elements of thoſe we have now; but were only a rough draught, in which regularity and decorum were abſolutely wanting.

The clergy had formerly their particular repreſentatives in parliament. There are not, indeed, any writs of ſummons now remaining, which require proctors to be ſent for them to the parliaments of this kingdom, before 23° E. 1. but from the annals of Burton it appears, that the whole body of the clergy was ſo repreſented, 39° H. 3. And the commons, in a petition to the king, 21° R. 2. ſhew'd, That before thoſe times, many judgments and ordinances, made in the times of the progenitors of our lord the king, in parliament, had been repealed and diſannulled, becauſe the ſtate of the clergy were not preſent in parliament, at the making of the ſaid judgments and ordinances.

Upon the reformation of religion, in the reign of E. 6. an attempt was made in convocation, to have the lower houſe united to the houſe of commons, according to antient cuſtom, Sicut ab antiquo fieri conſuevit. It was alſo propoſed to queen Elizabeth, but rejected. The clergy continued to tax themſelves, in a ſeparate body, 'till the reſtoration of Ch. 2. ſoon after which they were taxed in the ſame manner, and conjointly with the reſt of the commons; and have ever ſince been repreſented in parliament by the ſame perſons; which has more embodied them with the laity, and prevents the ſetting up of a church intereſt, diſtinct from that of the people. It is remarkable, that this very important alteration in the ſtate of this kingdom, was made without any law, by agreement with the clergy.

The knights of the ſhire were formerly paid 4 ſol. and the citizens and burgeſſes 2 ſol. per diem each, for their attendance on the public buſineſs, which many of the boroughs thinking too great an expence for them to bear, got themſelves exempted.

In antient times, all mitred abbats ſat in the great council. In the 49° H. 3. 102 abbats and priors were ſummoned to parliament, and only 25 lay barons. 1° E. 2. 56 abbats and priors were ſummoned; but 4° E. 3. there were only 33, and in the reigns preceding the diſſolution of monaſteries, no more than 27 abbats and priors ſat in parliament; which ſhews the gradual decline of the power of the clergy.

When the commons formerly went to conſult by themſelves, upon any buſineſs of great moment, they returned their anſwer by a member of their own, whom they choſe upon that particular occaſion. Their firſt ſtanding ſpeaker was Sir Thomas Hungerford, 51° E. 3.

Sir Edward Coke, 4 Inſt. p. 2. ſays, "of antient "time both Houſes ſat together;" which is a miſtake he was led into by a miſtranſlation of the French word grants, in Sir Robert Cotton's Abridgment of the parliamentary rolls in the Tower, which he has rendered commons, whereas it ſignifies great men.

In Sir Robert Atkyns's Ancient and Preſent State of Gloſterſhire, p. 19, is the following obſervable paſſage, concerning the Britiſh parliament:

"The ambition of prieſts has aboliſhed the like "conſtitution in Italy; the mutual wars betwixt "contending princes have extinguiſh'd it in Ger-"many; the pride of monarchs has deſtroy'd it "in Spain; differences in religion have laid it "aſide in France; the arrogancy of the lords has "ſubverted it in Denmark; the madneſs of the "commons has ruined it in Sweden; and the "barbarity of the Muſcovites has not admitted "it in Ruſſia*; but curſt be the man who ſhall "attempt to undermine this happy conſtitution "of Great Britain."

* It has been the ſingular fortune and wiſdom of England, ſays lord Lyttleton, that whereas France, Spain, and other realms, in which much the ſame feudal policy had taken place, have, thro' an impatience of the oppreſſions which the people often ſuffered from the nobility, deſperately run into abſolute monarchy, or have been compelled to yield to it by force of arms; in the change which has gradually happened in ours, all that exceſs of power which the nobles have loſt, has been ſo divided between the crown and the commons, that the whole ſtate of the kingdom is much better poiſed, and all incroachments of any one part on the other are more effectually reſtrained. Life of Henry II.

not altogether ſubſcribe to his politicks; for in the ſame page he propoſes a plan, that in all probability, would ſoon ſubvert that very conſtitution he ſo ardently wiſhes to have preſerved. "Perhaps" ſays he, "it might be a good expedient, in "Utopia, that ſenators ſhould hold their places "for life, and their eſtates ſhould conſiſt of "500*l.* a year, which ought to undergo a ſtrict "examination. If their members by theſe means "ſhould be thought too many or two few, this "might be regulated by fixing an age, either "thirty or forty years old.—Theſe perſons would "be above temptations, and all debauchery and "animoſity in elections would be prevented; they "would then be a venerable aſſembly of wealthy "citizens."

I agree with the learned hiſtorian, that perſons of independent fortune are certainly the propereſt to repreſent the people. Such will probably be moſt careful of the public treaſure, who have contributed largely to the ſtock themſelves; but on the other hand, the hiſtory of the preſent age will furniſh inſtances of men whom no fortune will ſatisfy, and whoſe avaritious diſpoſitions will always expoſe them to temptations.

I am a declared enemy to riot and debauchery, but the expedient propoſed to prevent them, I fear, would be attended with greater inconveniencies. We have found, by dreadful experience, that in long parliaments, thoſe who at their firſt election were truly the repreſentatives of the people, become, in time, a cabal of men, that purſue their own intereſts more than the public ſervice.

Tho' ſome inconveniences attend elections, eſpecially in the preſent mode of conducting them, it is their frequency by which the good people of England hope to preſerve their liberties, and the conſtitution; for by how much the oftener elections recur, by ſo much the more dependant on the people will their repreſentatives be, as the conſtituents will not probably make thoſe the objects of their ſecond choice, whoſe former conduct they have diſapproved. I ſpeak now of counties, and of thoſe cities and boroughs only, which have too many voters to be purchaſed, if any ſuch there be: for corruption hath ſo univerſally ſpread her baleful influence through the petty ones, that I cannot ſuppoſe ſuch to be in the leaſt attentive to the conduct of their repreſentatives, who never made their characters, when candidates, the ſubject of inquiry among them; and to whom their perſons and very names have been totally unknown, 'till perhaps the day before polling.

If I have digreſſed from my ſubject, I have taken no greater liberty than the gentleman whoſe notions I have oppoſed, becauſe I think him miſtaken in a matter very eſſential to the good of my country.

Of the COUNTY INFIRMARY.

ABOUT the year 1756, a ſubſcription was opened for eſtabliſhing a county infirmary, which was filled with great ſucceſs, under the auſpices of Norborne Berkeley, eſq; now lord Botetourt, and the Honourable and Reverend Dr. Talbot, who contributed to this noble charity in a meaſure adequate to their great generoſity, and public ſpirit.

A large ſum of money being raiſed, and a piece of ground purchaſed in the ſouth-gate ſtreet, in the city of Glouceſter, a very handſome and commodious building was erected for the purpoſe, and patients were admitted as ſoon as it could be got ready for their reception, which was in the year 175 . But the charity was extended to proper objects long before this houſe was built; for the governors purchaſed the Crown-and-Sceptre, a large inn, in the Weſtgate-ſtreet, and fitted it up for the reception of patients, 'till the contributions were ſufficient for building the preſent infirmary, towards which his late majeſty granted 9,200 feet of timber, out of the foreſt of Dean. The building coſt 6,200*l.*

This extenſive charity is ſupported by annual ſubſcriptions, amounting to 997*l.* 10*s.* 6*d* in the year 1767; and by the intereſt of near 12,000*l*, placed out on government and land ſecurities. It is managed by a ſociety, called the governors of the infirmary, who have eſtabliſhed rules, by which the whole is orderly and prudently conducted.

All ſubſcribers of two guineas a year, or contributors of 20*l.* or more, at one time, are governors, and may attend and vote at the meetings.

Every ſubſcriber hath a right to recommend one in-patient, and one out-patient, every year, for each guinea per ann. ſubſcribed and paid, provided the in-patients do not exceed five. A benefactor of 50*l.* hath the privilege of a ſubſcriber of five guineas; of 20*l.* that of two guineas per annum. But no ſubſcriber can have more than one in-patient at a time; nor can a benefactor of leſs than 20*l.* at one time, recommend a patient. Only ſuch as are recommended by a ſubſcriber, or benefactor, and appear to the weekly board and receiving phyſician and ſurgeon to be curable, and real objects of charity, to be admitted, and that on Thurſdays only; except in ſuch caſes as will admit of no delay.

If at any time, more ſhould be recommended than there is room for, in caſes of equal exigence the preference preference is given, firſt, to thoſe that come from the greateſt diſtance; ſecondly, to the recommendation of ſuch ſubſcribers as have not ſent any in-patient, within the year of their ſubſcription; thirdly, to the recommendation of the greateſt ſubſcribers to the charity.

Proper objects excluded at any time for want of room, are entered in the books as in-patients, and received by the matron, without order, on the firſt vacancy. And perſons recommended according to the rules, are received into this infirmary, from any country or nation.

Whilſt we admire the truly chriſtian charity of thoſe gentlemen who were moſt active in promoting this eſtabliſhment, we cannot too much applaud the beneficence of all that contribute to ſupport it.

Of the TRADE, MANUFACTURES, &c. of the COUNTY.

NOTWITHSTANDING the port of Glouceſter is furniſhed, by the favour of queen Elizabeth, with proper cuſtom-houſe officers, very few foreign entries are made there. Yet, if we import but little goods, this county ſupplies large quantities for exportation, part of which is the produce of the ſoil, and part the manufacture of the induſtrious inhabitants.

The manufactures are woollen cloths of various ſorts, harrateens, chenies, cotton and worſted ſtockings, carpets, blankets, rugs, men's hats, leather, pins, paper, bar-iron, edge-tools, nails, wire, tinned plates, braſs, &c. Of the growth of the county, the principal articles of commerce are, cheeſe and bacon, cyder and perry, fiſh, &c.

I ſhall firſt ſpeak of the cloathing manufacture, as it has a juſt claim to the preference on every account. It is probable that the colony of Flemings, who came into this kingdom in the reign of William the Conqeror, might bring with them the art of making woollen cloth, which their countrymen excelled in, and that in proceſs of time the Engliſh learnt it of them; for the records ſhew, that payments were made by various gilds of weavers in many parts of the kingdom, for the farm of their gilds, in the reign of Henry the Second, and Richard the Firſt; when, according to the learned Sir Matthew Hale, this kingdom greatly flouriſhed in the art of manufacturing woollen cloth: but by the troubleſome wars in the time of king John and Henry the Third, and alſo of Edward the Firſt and Edward the Second, this manufacture was wholly loſt, and all our trade ran out in wool, woolfels, and leather, carried out in ſpecie. It is alſo obſerved by Mr. Madox, in his Hiſtory of the Exchequer, that the cities of Worceſter, Glouceſter, Nottingham, Norwich, Bedford, and many other towns, paid fines to king John, that they might buy and ſell dyed cloth, as they were accuſtomed to do in the time of king Henry the Second. This ſhews, that both the cloathing and dying trades had then flouriſhed, and had been free from ſome oppreſſions with which they were afterwards loaded.

Many centuries ago, the city of Glouceſter was famous for its cloth manufacture, where Brookſtreet, ſituated upon Fullbrook, was the place of habitation for clothiers, dyers and ſhearmen; and even as lately as 1629, there was a company of clothiers in that city. It was conſiderable at Cirenceſter, in the reign of king H. 4. who granted a charter to a company of weavers there, which ſtill ſubſiſts. It has flouriſhed alſo at different times in various other parts of the county. But nature pointing out the moſt convenient ſituation for carrying on this manufacture, which requires plenty of water for driving the fulling mills, and ſcouring of wool; it has long ſince ſeated itſelf principally on the borders of the little rivers and brooks in the pariſhes of Biſley, Hampton, Stroud, Painſwick, Woodcheſter, Horſley, Stonehouſe, Stanley, Uley, Durſley, Wottonunderedge, and neighbouring places of leſs note. 'Tis there the maſter clothiers live, and the moſt curious operations of the manufacture are performed under their immediate inſpection; but the women and children all over the country are chiefly employ'd in carding of wool, and ſpinning of yarn; nor is the Glouceſterſhire cloathing bounded by the limits of the county, if it be allowable in point of language to ſay, that it furniſhes employment for great numbers of hands, from the borders of Wiltſhire to the edge of Saliſbury plain.

The manufacture has been gradually advancing in this county during the laſt century, but by very unequal ſteps, for it is ſenſibly affected by the ſituation of our public affairs. In time of war, there is an extraordinary demand for cloathing the army; and if it be with the French, who are our great rivals in this trade, it is an additional circumſtance in its favour, as they have uſually at ſuch time been much interrupted by our ſuperior fleets, in the conveyance of their goods to market: and then alſo the great internal enemies of our country, the ſmugglers and owlers of wool, find it it very hazardous to help our neighbours to that commodity, without which they could not ſucceed ſo well in the woollen † manufacture.

To enable the reader to judge of what importance this manufacture is to the nation, I have procured from ſome of the moſt intelligent clothiers, perſons of acknowledged judgment and integrity, the various particulars which, taken together, make the following account of the preſent ſtate of it. I ſhall conſider it under four heads, 1. The country trade, or inland trade. 2. The army trade, and that with the drapers in London. 3. The Turkey trade. 4. The Eaſt India company trade.

1. The inland trade, in the language of the manufacturer, muſt not be ſtrictly taken, as if confined to our own kingdom, for that is not the fact. It may be ſo called from its furniſhing the ſorts of cloth uſually worn in our own country, conſiſting of ſuperfines, ſeconds, foreſts, drabs, naps, duffils, and all that variety to be found in a well ſtored draper's ſhop.

This trade is governed by faſhion and fancy, and has been introduced into Glouceſterſhire within the laſt fifty or ſixty years. Great part of the goods are diſperſed by means of travelling thro' Great Britain and Ireland, by the manufacturers themſelves, or their ſervants. Many of them are likewiſe ſold to merchants, who ſend them to our colonies, and other foreign markets; and ſome go to the warehouſes in London, from whence they are diſperſed in like manner.

This branch has been ſupported with ſuch ſpirit and induſtry, as from ſmall beginnings to become very valuable.—Being leſs ſubject to fluctuation than the other branches, it employs more regularly and uniformly a number of hands, perhaps the moſt of any of them. Many perſons have ſucceeded in it, and ſome large fortunes have been made; but at preſent, thro' the dearneſs of proviſions, the diſagreement with our colonies, and other diſcouraging circumſtances, common to moſt trades at this time, 'tis in a languid condition, tho' the returns in it are eſtimated at 250,000 l. per ann.

2. The ſecond branch is the trade with the drapers in London, who take a variety of goods for their retail cuſtomers; and the cloth for the army, the marines and the militia paſſes thro' their hands. The demands in this part of the cloathing trade at different times is very diſproportionate. In time of war 'tis great; but not very conſiderable at preſent, the ſhare which this county has of it being eſtimated at 100,000 l. per annum.

3. The third branch is the trade to Turkey, which is much declined. The French, by reaſon of their political connections with the Porte, the ſituation of their country, the price of labour, and their method of conducting their trade, have gained a great ſuperiority over us at this market. But I am told that our ſuperfines ſtill ſupport their credit there, and that the ſhare of this country in the Turkey trade cannot be leſs than 50,000 l. per annum.

4. The cloth made for the Eaſt India company, is the laſt and moſt conſiderable branch of our foreign trade, yet from the preſent method of conducting it, 'tis far from being advantageous to the clothier. Very few perſons have ſucceeded in the coarſe trade, whilſt many, labouring all their time with great care and aſſiduity, have ruined their fortunes, without making a bad debt in it. In ſhort, there are not wanting perſons of obſervation, knowledge and integrity, who are confidently of opinion, that, averaging the profit and loſs on all the coarſe cloth, ſold to the company, for many years back, by the clothiers in this county, not a ſhilling has been gained by it.

This will ſeem ſtill more unaccountable to the reader, when he is informed, that the company never require of the clothier any abatement of price, nor doth it appear that they wiſh to withold from him, that reaſonable profit which ſhould be the reward of his ſkill and induſtry. This is a kind of paradox, which I ſhall endeavour to explain, as things have been often repreſented to me.

Firſt it ſhould be obſerved, that the buſineſs of the ſales to the company, is tranſacted by the Blackwell-hall factors, who are the clothiers agents; and the courſe cloth, which is by much the largeſt quantity, lies in the hands of a few, not more than four or five of them. The ſales are conducted in the following manner.

The company having given the factors previous notice of the time appointed for buying, they ſend in ſample cloths for the inſpection of the buying committee, with the prices, and number of cloths they have to ſell, correſponding with the reſpective ſamples. In buying, the company's ſervants impartially chooſe the beſt ſamples, according to the prices, 'till their quantity is ſupplied; and if ſuch as are deemed equal in quality and price ſhould amount to more than are wanted, they have lately taken a part of each lot, in order that every clothier might benefit by the ſale. Theſe meaſures are ſo prudent and equitable, that I have never heard any perſon object to them.

Let us now turn to the factor, and upon inquiry, inſtead of finding him a mere agent to the clothier, which he originally was, and ſtill ought to be, it will appear that he is now, by inſenſible degrees, become a very different kind of perſon; for the commiſſion on the ſales being great in proportion to the value of the goods, and the buſineſs attended with little trouble, he hath found out an expedient to eſtabliſh himſelf on a firmer foundation than the mere good opinion of the clothier; which was all, according to the original inſtitution, he had to depend on. By this expedient he hath virtually, in many inſtances, the power of the principal, yet ſtill preſerves the appearance, the indemnity, and every other advantage of the agent. 'Tis thus: He ſeeks out perſons of little or no fortune; ſome who have been ſervants to clothiers, and may have worked at particular branches of the manufacture; others who underſtand no branch of it. To ſuch as theſe he lends money at common intereſt, to make cloth for his warehouſe: And it can be no wonder, ſurely, if many embrace the offer, from a poſſibility of gaining ſomething by it.

† It is the common notion that all ſorts of wool are ſmuggled to France; but I have been informed that it is principally, if not ſolely, the long wool, for making of worſted ſtuffs. The French, beſides what is grown in their own country, are ſupply'd with the coarſe cloathing wool from Barbary.

By theſe means it may be conceived, that goods are too often ill made, to the diſcredit of the manufacture; however, if they ſell at any rate, the factor is not affected by abatements on them, his commiſſion ariſing from the number of cloths ſold, without regard to the value of them. This being the caſe, 'tis the factor's buſineſs to bring large quantities of goods to market; and when there, the clothier is often induced, by ſpecious arguments, to offer his goods at a lower rate than he can afford them, occaſioned by the factor's endeavouring to appear at the ſale to a greater advantage than his rivals in the ſame buſineſs.

In order to this, as the ſales approach, would it be matter of wonder, if the dependent clothiers in the country ſhould be adviſed of the general apprehenſion of a dull ſale, on account of a great quantity of cloth in town; and with the report that the company will buy but little? The inference is eaſy, i. e. that unleſs the goods are offered at a very low price, they can have no chance of being ſold for that ſeaſon. It ſhould be obſerved, that they are fit for no other market, and at this there is but one buyer.

Notwithſtanding all this, ſome manufacturers might be diſpoſed to wait an opportunity 'till they could ſell their goods for a reaſonable profit; but when a man, conſiderably indebted, receives information that the money advanced in his favour will be ſhortly wanted, he begins to be convinced that he is not abſolutely his own maſter, and finds himſelf under a neceſſity of ſubmitting to diſagreeable terms.

Thus it happens, that cloths of eight or nine pounds value, are frequently offer'd at thirty or forty ſhillings leſs than they coſt the maker; and tho' not always ſo, yet the many diſadvantages and expences conſider'd, ſuch as ſhort ſales, a glutted market, occaſioned by ſetting up, and puſhing on ſo many people in the trade; the loſs on returned goods ſpoilt in the hurry of making; intereſt of money, warehouſeage, * commiſſion, &c. &c. it is not doubted, by ſuch as beſt underſtand this branch of the manufacture, but that during the laſt ten years, the Glouceſterſhire clothiers have been loſers upon an average.

Let us conſider this matter a little further. In this inverted order of things, when the clothier becomes the factor's ſervant, he ſends his cloth as faſt as 'tis made to the factor, to be a collateral ſecurity for the money borrowed of him; with whom it remains 'till the ſales begin. At firſt the new adventurer is enabled to pay his creditors in the country, by draughts on the factor, in virtue of which he ſoon gets in debt, and enlarges his trade upon his credit with the woolſtapler and yarnmaker; proceeding (as is too often the caſe) from time to time, 'till he has wormed himſelf ſo deeply in their books, as to be unable to make good his payments. For having, to the factor's knowledge, been loſing conſiderably in the courſe of trade, his draughts are no longer honoured, than the goods remitted to the factor are ample ſecurity for them; who, knowing the ſituation of this ſort of people much better than any other perſon, generally takes care to abandon them when they appear to be no longer in a condition to ſerve his purpoſe.

Hitherto I have been ſpeaking of the neceſſitous clothier only; but what is the caſe of the man of capital in this branch?—After a moment's conſideration will it not appear, that if others offer great quantities of goods at under rates, he will alſo be obliged to ſell at the ſame prices, if he ſell at all. Beſides, let it be conſider'd, that if the factor hath it in his power to prefer one perſon before another, as no doubt in ſome caſes it may be poſſible, will not his intereſt direct him to promote the manufacture where his money is employ'd at five per cent. and from which he may derive other conſiderable advantages? Therefore many clothiers of property have declined the company trade, and ſtruck into other employments. Some of them who continue ſtill engaged in it, are convinced by experience, that unleſs ſome regulations take place, it will never anſwer, tho' the returns in it are very conſiderable, eſtimated, for this county only, at 200,000*l. per annum.*

Thus, if I am rightly informed, has the clothier in the courſe branch of the company trade, which is by much the greateſt part of it, the trouble and hazard of a large buſineſs, without a reaſonable advantage from it. The poor indeed have hitherto been employ'd by fits, but how long this branch may furniſh any work for them, when the manufacturer has no reaſonable proſpect of advantage to himſelf, I will not take upon me to determine.

Cloathing is the great manufacture of the nation, and that branch of it which cet. par. keeps the labouring hands moſt conſtantly employ'd, is certainly the moſt valuable. But the meaſures complained of render it unſteady, languid and convulſive. For a conſiderable time back, we have had two or three bankrupt clothiers within the year, for many thouſands each, which without ſuch connexions with the factors could never have happened, as few, if any of them, had ever been worth a ſhilling. If one of them die, or break, which caſes differ but little in conſequence,

* The commiſſion on a cloth of 6*l.* or 7*l.* value is 5*s.* beſides 6*d.* for drawing, and 6*d.* for caſh-money, which laſt I don't well underſtand.

the factor ſeizes the cloth in his hands unfold, and the debts outſtanding, to ſecure himſelf, leaving the woolſtapler, yarnmaker, ſhopkeeper, poor workmen, and other creditors in the country, to divide four, five, or perhaps two ſhillings in the pound, and ſometimes leſs.—A long train of dreadful conſequences always follow: Many of the creditors are greatly injured in their fortunes, ſome utterly ruined. The poor, who ſeldom ſave a penny in times of the greateſt plenty of work and proviſions, being out of employment, are reduced to the pariſh, to beggary, and ſome of them expoſed to famine itſelf.

Theſe evils which are growing, for bankruptcies are more and more frequent, ſeem to ariſe chiefly from the too great ſecurity of the factor, who, in caſes of failure, claims all the bankrupt's goods remaining in his cuſtody, and all debts upon contracts by him made, to indemnify himſelf, not for his commiſſion only, but for all monies advanced on intereſt to the clothier.

I have never been made ſenſible, by any good argument, why the factor ſhould be ſo highly privileged over other creditors. On the contrary, I apprehend it has a manifeſt tendency to diſcredit the manufacture, to advance the raw materials, to beggar middling tradeſmen; but to inrich, (beſides about half a dozen individuals) the moſt opulent trading company on earth; who ought, and 'tis probable would be willing, to give a fair price for the manufacture of their country.—If the factor was made equally liable to loſſes with other creditors, he would be more cautious to whom he lent his money, and it might prevent the ruin of numbers that are decoy'd, by ſpecious appearances, to credit thoſe that trade, or rather trifle with it. This is a matter that calls loudly for redreſs, which might probably be obtained; but many of the clothiers are ſo intirely in the power of the factors, as to make it unſafe for them to apply for it.

Thus, free from the leaſt intention of injuring any perſon, in eſtate or reputation; and without either an apprehenſion of offending, or the hope of pleaſing, any man, or ſett of men whatever, I have given the ſtate of the company trade, as fairly and impartially as poſſible, agreeably to the information received from ſeveral perſons of credit, who underſtand the ſubject, and will vouch for the facts. I am willing to believe, notwithſtanding, that there may be ſome inſtances of exception, among the body of people whoſe conduct is reprehended.—That regard to truth which I profeſs, and that juſtice which is equally due to all, will have it acknowleged, that there are at this time a few clothiers, who were ſet up by the factors, as already mentioned, that, either from their ſuperior ſkill, great application, or ſome other cauſe, too latent for me to diſcover, have flouriſhed in the trade, and continue to carry on buſineſs with credit and reputation.

The iron manufacture is of the next greateſt conſequence to this county. In the foreſt of Dean are ſeveral furnaces and forges, that afford employment for great numbers of miners, colliers, carriers, and other labourers. See Foreſt, p. 35.

———At Froombridge, in the pariſh of Frampton upon Severn, has lately been erected one of the largeſt and completeſt works of the kind in the kingdom, conſiſting of a ſet of mills for making of iron and ſteel wire. And at Framilode is a tin-plate work, carried on by the ſame proprietors.

There are two very large braſs-works in this county; one at the Baptiſt-mills, near Briſtol, the other at Warmley, in the pariſh of Bitton. They are both carried on in company, by perſons of large fortune, and vaſt ſums are employ'd in the trade.

At Glouceſter is a valuable pin-manufacture, which employs great numbers of the women and children, and beſides a large country trade, returns near 20,000*l.* from London yearly.

The making of cards, for the uſe of the clothier, has ſeated itſelf at Durſley, Stroud, and Wottonunderedge.

Scarlet-dying is ſcarcely any where done in that perfection as about Stroud.

Worſted combing is carried on at Glouceſter, Cirenceſter, Tewkeſbury, and Tetbury. The markets for the goods are Kidderminſter, Andover, and Leiceſter, where they are manufactured into ſhalloons, ſtuffs, ſtockings, &c.

Stocking-frame knitting is found at Cirenceſter, Tewkeſbury, Newent, and a few villages in that neighbourhood.

Carpet-weaving has been lately brought into Cirenceſter, by two perſons, who make all the various ſizes and patterns, with good ſucceſs.

The heavy edge-tools, made at Cirenceſter, are in great reputation. Two families have enjoy'd one branch of that buſineſs for ſome time unrivalled throughout the world, at leaſt they know nothing to the contrary. It is that of making knives for curriers to ſhave the leather with, which the people of Birmingham have attempted in vain.

Harrateens, cheneys, and a few other woollenſtuffs are made at Cirenceſter, and ſent white to London.

Fine writing paper is made at Poſtlip, in the pariſh of Winchcombe, at Quenington, and at Abbenhall; and brown ſorts at a few other places in the county.

The manufacture of felt-hats, at Frampton Cotterel, deſerves a place in our account, becauſe it employs ſo many hands. Neither would it be juſt to paſs by, unnoticed, the rug and blanket manufactures, at Nailſworth, Durſley, Nibley, and other places of the clothing country, with which I ſhall cloſe this ſhort account of the Glouceſterſhire manufactures. Woolſtapling, or breaking of wool, is not mentioned in the number, becauſe it will hardly be admitted to be one, in the common acceptation of the word, tho' it is a very conſiderable trade; and the moſt eminent places for for it are Glouceſter, Cirenceſter, and Tetbury. To be ſo particular as to enumerate every trade carried on in the county, would be impertinent, but I think I have omitted no manufacture that deſerves notice.

The chief article of our produce is grain, of which large quantities are raiſed in the vale, and on the coteſwolds. The city of Briſtol is ſupply'd out of Glouceſterſhire with great part of its proviſions, from whence it has been concluded, that this county grows a great quantity of corn more than it conſumes. But if it be conſidered, what a vaſt conſumption there is of every kind in the manufacturing and populous parts of the county; and that the meal-men and corn-dealers are continually ſupplying the markets in the ſouth-eaſtern parts, with grain and flour, out of Oxfordſhire and Berkſhire, and that in common years a great quantity of corn is brought to Glouceſter market from Herefordſhire, in waggons, as well as by water from Upton upon Severn; there is good reaſon to believe that the corn of the growth of this county is not more than ſufficient for its inhabitants; ſo that grain will not be an article in our account.

The quantity of cheeſe made in the county is calculated in the following manner: The vale is eſtimated at 500,000 acres, allowing for the Severn, &c. 350,000 of them are in paſture, of which admit 158,000 acres to be fed by milch cattle. Then at three acres to each cow, the ſtock will be 50,000. The moſt uſual calculation is 3 C. weight of cheeſe to a cow, according to which the ſum of the whole year's making, in the vale, will be 7,500 tons. But there are milch beaſts kept in the other parts of the county. If you allow 20 to every 3000 acres, upon an average; then on 500,000 acres will be found 3333 milch cattle, from which, according to the above proportion, may be made about 500 tons of cheeſe: And together, the year's making will be 8,000 tons for the whole county.

For the three or four laſt years, cheeſe upon an average has ſold at about 28 l. per ton; therefore the value of the whole will be 224,000 l. The greateſt part of it is ſent by the factors to London; a conſiderable quantity of it goes to Briſtol, and to the fairs at Glouceſter, Stow, Leachlade, &c. and ſo is diſperſed thro' the country.

Glouceſterſhire bacon is in good repute; London and Briſtol take large quantities of it annually.

Cyder is another article, of which we make more than we conſume ourſelves, to the amount, perhaps in a good year, of about 5,000 l.

Salmon is the only kind of fiſh that is ſent from hence to London in any quantities, for which the metropolis pays us about 4,000 l. annually.

The value of fat cattle fed in the county, with their ſkins, hides and wool, muſt be very great, but I have not been able to collect particulars enough to make an eſtimate of the amount of them.

Of the antient SURVEY of the KINGDOM, but more eſpecially as far as it relates to GLOUCESTERSHIRE.

OUR hiſtories are almoſt wholly ſilent as to particular property in this county, 'till the 11th century, when there was a regiſter made by the command of William the Conqueror, with great care and exactneſs, of all the lands in the kingdom, and the names of the owners of them, with the quantities and other particulars of their eſtates, except in the counties of Northumberland, Cumberland, Weſtmoreland, Durham, and part of Lancaſhire, with Wales, which were not then ſurveyed. The buſineſs was begun under the care of five juſtices in each county, appointed for that purpoſe, in the year 1081, and compleated in 1086. The materials of this ſurvey were digeſted, and fairly entered in a book, which ſome have called Liber Judiciarius, vel Cenſualis Angliæ, others Domeſday-Book §, from the Saxon word ꝺom, cenſus, vel eſtimatio. It is a moſt antient record, and now remains in the exchequer, very fair and legible.

A ſoon as William had ſettled himſelf in his his new dominions, he made ſuch alterations in § Ingulphus ſays, that king Alfred made ſuch another roll, which he kept at Wincheſter, and called it Domeſday. It referred to the time of king Æthelred, as that made by William the Firſt refers to the time of Edward the Confeſſor. There is a third book in 4to, differing from the others which are in folio, more in form than matter, made by the command of the ſame king, which is more fairly written, hath fewer eraſures, and ſeems to be more antient. A fourth Domeſday is kept in the exchequer, being only an abridgement of the firſt; and there is a fifth, an exact copy of the laſt, kept in the remembrancer's office. There is alſo a book in the exchequer, ſomething of the ſame nature, called Nomina Villarum, made at the command of king E. 2. containing the names of all the hundreds, cities, burghs, and vills in England, and the poſſeſſors of them, returned by the ſheriffs of all the counties; I have a copy of the part concerning Glouceſterſhire. What is contained in the Domeſday of W. 1. appears by theſe old verſes.

Quid deberetur fiſco, quæ, quanta tributa,
Nomine quid cenſus, quæ vectigalia, quantum
Quiſque teneretur feodali ſolvere jure,
Qui ſunt exempti, vel quos angaria damnat,
Qui ſunt vel glebæ ſervi, vel conditionis,
Quove manumiſſus patrono, jure ligatur.

the laws, partly from policy, and partly from prejudice, as to bring the whole conſtitution to as near a conformity as he could with that of Normandy, by ingrafting the feudal tenures, and other cuſtoms of that country, upon the old Saxon laws, which produced a different political ſyſtem, and changed both power and property in many reſpects; though the firſt principles of the feudal law, and general notions of it, had been in uſe among the Engliſh ſome ages before. But that the liberty of the ſubject was not deſtroy'd by theſe alterations, as ſome writers have ſuppoſed, plainly appears by the very ſtatutes that William enacted, in one of which we find an expreſs declaration, That all the freemen in his kingdom ſhould hold and enjoy their lands and poſſeſſions free from all unjuſt exaction, and from all tallage; ſo that nothing ſhould be exacted or taken of them but their free ſervice, which they by right owed to the crown, and were bound to perform. It is further ſaid, That this was ordained and granted to them as an hereditary right for ever, by the common council of the kingdom.

Some of our eminent lawyers have been of opinion, that 'till this time eſtates were not hereditary in England; but that William made them ſo, in imitation of the ſyſtem that had then lately obtained in the kingdom of France, where the nobility and gentry had had their honours and eſtates granted to them and to their heirs in feodo for ever; whereas before, the French held them only at will, or for life. But in objection to this opinion, it is moſt certain, that our Saxon anceſtors had their hereditary eſtates, which Spelman calls thaneland, and ſpeaks of it as ſynonymous to Bocland, which in antient writings has been interpreted by * Allodium, Terra † hereditaria, Terra ‖ libera, Terra § teſtamentalis. But our Saxon anceſtors had other lands of a feudal nature, diſtinguiſhed from the former, by the name of Folcland, perhaps, becauſe they were ſuch as the common people poſſeſſed; yet the barons, or thanes, frequently held both ſorts together. Folkland was perſonal, and held only for life, and ſometimes indeed at the will of the lord, or for a certain number of years. But theſe eſtates were made hereditary fiefs under William the Conqueror, and moſt of the Bocland was converted into the ſame kind of tenure.

If we conſider this change with regard to bocland alone, in which before they had an abſolute property, and power to diſpoſe of it by will, it may ſeem at firſt a matter of aſtoniſhment, that freeholders thus poſſeſſed of alodial eſtates, ſhould ever have been diſpoſed to convert them into fiefs, ſubject to ſo many ſervices, entails and other burthens. Yet it is certain, that ſuch alterations were deſired. The reaſons given for it are theſe: The poſſeſſors of fiefs had ſeveral privileges, which other freemen had not; a higher value was ſet upon their perſons; the compoſitions for injuries done to them were greater, which was an important diſtinction, when moſt offences were puniſhed by pecuniary fines, according to rates aſcertained and fixed by law; and what ſeems to have weighed more than any other reaſons, the demeſne lands of thoſe who held by knight-ſervice, were exempted from tallage, and many other impoſitions, which fell heavy on the poſſeſſors of alodial eſtates.

Originally all proper feuds, I mean, all of a military nature, deſcended in equal proportions to all the ſons of a vaſſal, but not to daughters. This excluſion of females had been taken off in moſt countries, before the Normans came hither; but whether the equal diviſion of all military fiefs continued after that time, and when it abſolutely ceaſed, is not very clear. The impartibility of them is aſcribed, by many writers, to a conſtitution made by the emperor Barbaroſſa, in the year 1152. But earldoms and baronies, which that ordinance chiefly relates to, had before been indiviſible, both in England and in France, except in the caſe of a baron leaving ſeveral daughters, and no ſon, at his death. I ſhould therefore ſuppoſe that the cuſtom of preſerving knights-fees undivided, in the courſe of deſcent, which ſeemed neceſſary to enable the military tenant to perform his honourable ſervice with the requiſite dignity, began to prevail among the Engliſh ſome time before it was ſettled by law in the empire. And, together with that, was introduced the right of primogeniture in feudal ſucceſſions. For when, in order to preſerve the tenure intire, only one ſon could take it, the eldeſt was preferred as ſooneſt able to perform the duties of the fee, and moſt naturally coming into the place of his father. Certain it is, that when Glanvile's Treatiſe was writtin, it was the eſtabliſhed law of England, that in a military fief, the eldeſt ſon ſhould ſucceed to the whole inheritance. Yet it appears from records, that men frequently held by parts of a knight's-fee; but ſuch diviſions either aroſe from marriages with the daughters of a military tenant, who had no ſon, and ſeveral daughters; or were made by enfeoffments, and not in virtue of the rule and courſe of ſucceſſion. Lands held in free ſocage were equally divided among all the ſons, unleſs they were ſuch as had been impartible, by antient cuſtom; of which ſome went to the eldeſt ſon, and others to the ſecond.

William divided the kingdom into 60,215 knight's-fees, making 30,000 baronies, vills, or manors, the proprietors whereof were the only freeholders in the kingdom. The number of them in the whole county of Glouceſter was between ſixty and ſeventy, including the Cyninger Ðegenr, or the king's thanes, by which I mean, thoſe that held of the king in chief by knight-ſervice; and all the lands, beſides what they held, were either in the crown or the church.

* Textus Roffenſis, † Leges Aluredi. ‖ Leges Ethelredi. § Leges Canuti.

Theſe

Theſe thanes, according to Mr. Selden, were honorary, and were of the ſame kind with them that were, after the Normans, parliamentary barons; and the tainlands only were the parliamentary baronies. But there was an inferior order of men called Webmepa ðezen, or middle thane, who after the Normans, were often ſtiled Vavoſors, a name that never was honourary here, but only feudal, and occurs ſometimes in Domeſday book, as a ſynonymy with liberi homines regis.

Thoſe lands which were in the poſſeſſion of Edward the Confeſſor, and afterwards came to the Conqueror, and were ſet down in Domeſday-book under the title Terra Regis, are § antient demeſnes; and therefore, whether they are ſuch or not, can be tried only by that book.

Of theſe lands there were two ſorth of tenants, one that held them frankly by charter, the other by copy of court roll, or by the verge, at the will of the lord, according to the cuſtom of the manor. The privileges of this tenure conſiſted in three points; the tenants holding by charter could not be impleaded out of their manor; they were free from toll for all things concerning their livelihood, or huſbandry; and they were not liable to ſerve on juries. F. N. B. fol. 14, and 228. Theſe tenants held originally by plowing and cultivating of the king's lands, for the ſupplying of his houſhold with proviſions, wherefore ſuch liberties and privileges were allowed them, which ſtill belong to that kind of land, tho' the ſervice is now changed from labour to money.

The names of all the manors and their dependencies, together with the owners, and other particulars of them, at the time of the general ſurvey, are ſet down in Domeſday-book; a copy of which, in the contracted manner of that writing, as nearly as it could be imitated with the common printing types, is as follows. Note, the Apoſtrophe ['] ſhews the place of contraction.

§ The fee-farm rents remaining to the kings of England from their antient demeſnes, were many of them alienated from the crown, in the reign of king Charles the Second.——How doubtful people were of the title to alienations, of any nature, from the crown, may be gathered hence: Whilſt theſe rents were expoſed to ſale for ready money, there were very few purchaſers; but an expedient was found out, which ſerved as a ſpur; it was no leſs than ſtopping ſome of his majeſty's payments. People then began to purchaſe them, as the only method of getting their own in that conjecture; and by 22 C. 2. c. 6. ſ. 10. the letters patents by which theſe alienations are made, are confirmed, and declared to be good.——— But alienations from the crown have been better ſecured to the ſubject, by the deciſion of the houſe of lords, in the caſe of the earl of Portland, in 1769, wherein the Nullum Tempus, ſo often pleaded by the crown in caſes of reſumption, was ſet aſide.

END OF GLOUCESTERSHIRE IN DOMESDAY-BOOK.

The following EXPLANATIONS will elucidate ſome Paſſages in the ANTIENT SURVEY.

SOME authors derive the word Villani from the French, vilain, or from the Latin, villa, a country farm. Villenage was of two kinds, the one being a ſtate of ſervitude, which ſome were ſubject to from their birth, called pure villenage; from whom, ſays Bracton, uncertain and undeterminate ſervice was due to the lord. The other was villenage by tenure, by which the tenant was bound to perform certain ſervices agreed upon between him and his lord, ſuch as plowing of his ground, reaping of his corn, &c. Of this ſort the Villani ſo often mentioned in Domeſday are ſuppoſed to be.

The Bordarii were ſuch as held a cottage, or ſome ſmall parcel of land, on condition of ſupplying the lord with poultry, eggs, and other ſmall proviſions for his board and entertainment. Hence ſmall eſtates ſo held were uſually called bord-lands. Gloſſ. to Kennett's Par. Antiq. The bordarii held thoſe lands which we now call Demeſnes.

The Servi and Ancillæ were pure villeins, living under the arbitrary pleaſure of the lord, and received their wages according to his diſcretion.

Liberi homines were ſuch as might diſpoſe of their eſtates without leave of their lords.

Radchenifires are explained in Domeſday to be free men. See Terra S. Petri Weſtmon. p. 72. col. 2.

Sochs, for Socmanni. A certain number of free ſocmen appears to have been neceſſary to every lord of a manor, for holding the pleas of the manor court, which the Saxons called Soke, or Soc, a word ſignifying a franchiſe, or juriſdiction, to which a franchiſe was annexed. And it is from this that ſome derive the terms ſocmen and ſocage, with great appearance of truth. Lord Lyttelton's Life of H. 2. vol. 2. p. 252.

Francigena was a general name for all perſons who could not prove themſelves to be Engliſh. Canute, the Dane, having ſettled himſelf in the kingdom at peace, at the requeſt of his lords diſcharged his army, upon condition, that whoever ſhould kill an alien ſhould be liable to juſtice; and if the manſlayer eſcaped, the town where the man was killed ſhould forfeit 66 marks to the king; but if it was not able to pay the fine, it ſhould be levied on the hundred. And further, that every man murdered ſhould be accounted francigena, except he could be proved to be an Engliſhman before the coroner.

Coliberti, men who held in free ſocage, whom we ſometimes meet with under the names Conditionales and Colones, from which laſt the word Clown is ſuppoſed to be derived.

Ut ſcira dicit, (p. 76, col. 2. &c.) in the language of Domeſday, ſignifies the jury by which the ſurvey was made, the form of which remains now in the Cotton Library, beginning thus: Hic ſcribuntur Inquiſitio terrarum quomodo barones Regis inquiſiverunt, videlicet, per ſacramentum Vicecomitis, Scire, & omnium Baronum, & earum Francigenarum, & totius Centuriatus, Preſbyteri, Prepoſiti, ſex Villani, uniuſcujuſque villæ. Each article concludes in theſe words,—& alii omnes Franci & Angli de hoc hundreto juraverunt. Cott. Lib. Tib. A. vi.

Burgaris and Burgenſes are properly men of trade, or the inhabitants of a borough or walled town.

Hai, Haia, a hedge, and ſometimes it ſignifies a park, or incloſure. Bracton.

Harduices, is a word variouſly underſtood. Cowell derives it from Heord-wic, the herdſman's village, which ſeems to be a right interpretation.

Broce, a thicket, or covert of buſhes and bruſh wood.

The Pound, ſo often mentioned in Domeſday-Book for reſerved rent, was the weight of a pound of ſilver, conſiſting of twelve ounces.

The Shilling, conſiſted of twelve pence, and was equal in weight to ſomething more than three of our ſhillings; ſo that the Norman Pound, conſiſting of twenty of ſuch ſhillings, was worth three pounds two ſhillings of our preſent money. The Saxon Shilling was valued at five pence, and forty-eight of them went to the pound; but one of their pence was three times the weight of our preſent ſilver penny, conſequently the Saxon Pound was alſo worth three pounds ſterling of our preſent money. But it is obſervable that there was no ſuch piece of money as the ſhilling coined in this kingdom, 'till the year 1504. The penny was antiently the only current ſilver coin, 'till about the reign of king John, when the ſilver half-penny and farthing were introduced; but in the year 1353 king E. 3. began to coin larger pieces, which obtained the name of Groats from their ſize. Crowns and Half-Crowns were firſt coined in the year 1551.

The Mark, muſt be underſtood to be two thirds of a pound of ſilver, that is, twice the value of our preſent pound ſterling. And Mr. Madox has ſhewn, in his Hiſtory of the Exchequer, that, in the reign of king Steghen, nine marks of ſilver were accepted in payment for one mark of gold, as appears from the pipe-rolls. And that, in another inſtance, ſix pounds in ſilver were paid for one mark of gold.

Sir Robert Atkyns has endeavoured to ſhew what proportion the value of ſilver, at the time of the ſurvey, bore to the preſent value of it. "The rate of neceſſaries," ſays he, "which ſubſiſt "humane life, is the true eſtimate of money. Since therefore "wheat corn ſeems to be the moſt neceſſary of any one thing, "we may beſt value coin by the price of wheat in the ſeveral "ages. A buſhel of wheat, ſoon after the Norman conqueſt, "was ſold for a penny, which was equal in weight to our three "pence. At this day a buſhel of wheat, one year with another, "may be valued at four ſhillings, which is ſixteen times the value "of it ſix or ſeven hundred years ago. The concluſion will be, "that a man might live in that time as well on twenty ſhillings "a year of our money, as on ſixteen pounds a year at preſent. "And to carry it further, two pounds of their money would buy "as much wheat as ninety-ſix pounds of the preſent.

Oro, in Domeſday, ſignifies a Saxon piece of coin, value ſixteen pence, and ſometimes, according to the variation of the ſtandard, twenty pence. In the laws of king Canute fifteen Oræ make a pound.

The expreſſions libras numeratas, penſatas, ad penſum, de numero, ad ſcala, are to be underſtood in this manner. It has been already ſhewn that 240 ſilver pence, perfect as they came from the mint, weighed juſt a pound Troy. But much of the money being clipped, the words penſatas, ad penſum, were ſometimes inſerted to ſignify that the money ſhould not be received in payment by tale; but that if the coin had been any way diminiſhed, the payer ſhould make good the weight, by adding other money, altho' it amounted to more or leſs than ſix-pence in the pound, which was the ſolutio ad ſcalam. The libra numerata, or ad numerum, or de numero, was the pound by tale of 240 pence, without regard to the weight of them. The payment ad numerum was always intended in grants, unleſs the contrary was expreſſed.——Arſas et penſatas. Arſas ſignified lawful money, whoſe alloy was tried by fire.

Firma,—Red. firmam unius noƈtis,—unam noƈtem de firma.—The two latter of theſe expreſſions are to be underſtood of entertainment for ſo many nights. For our anceſtors computed time not by days, but by nights, which was not intirely out of uſe 'till about Henry the Firſt's time; and hence it is that we now ſay a fortnight, ſe'nnight. The A. S. word Feormian ſignifies to feed, or yield victuals; and thoſe who held the out-lands of the lord, as cuſtomary tenants, paid him a certain portion of victuals and things neceſſary for human life, which rent they called a Feorm; and tho' ever ſince the reign of H. 2. the rent has been changed from victuals into money, yet we ſtill retain the names farm, and farmer.

Geldat. Geldum with the A. S. ſignified tributum. So geldare here ſignifies to pay tax or tribute.

Menſura, was a buſhel.

Modius, uſually a buſhel, but various, according to the cuſtom of the country.

Dicra ferri, a quantity of iron, ſuppoſed to conſiſt of ten bars. Gale's Hiſt. Brit. 766.

Leuca, Leuua, a meaſure of land conſiſting of 1500 paces; but according to Ingulphus (p. 710.) of 2000 paces. In the Monaſticom (1 tom. p. 313.) 'tis 480 perches.

THE

THE HISTORY

Of the CITY and DIOCESE of GLOUCESTER.

Of the Name, Foundation, Situation, Extent, &c. of the CITY.

GLOUCESTER is a handſome city, the capital of the ſurrounding county, to which it gives name. It is ſituated in lat. 51° 49′ ‖, longitude 101 miles W. from London; in the midſt of the fine and extenſive vale of * Glouceſter. It ſtands 36 miles N. E. from Briſtol, 25 S. W. from Worceſter, 32 S. from Hereford, and 26 E. from Monmouth.

The river Severn flows on the weſt ſide of it, where is a convenient key or wharf. It is the firſt port upon that river, with its proper officers, viz. a cuſtomer and collector, a controller, a ſearcher, a ſurveyor and two boatmen. Queen Elizabeth granted the city this privilege by her charter, dated the 20th of June in the 22d year of her reign.

The proſpect of the city, on the weſt ſide of it is delightful, being adorned with many beautiful towers and ſpires, but more eſpecially with the lofty and moſt elegant tower of the cathedral church, which, to uſe Leland's expreſſion, ſtands as a pharos to all parts around for a conſiderable diſtance.

From the middle of the city, where the four principal ſtreets meet, there is a deſcent every way, which makes it not only clean and healthy, but adds greatly to the beauty of the place.

The buildings are chiefly of brick, whereas formerly they were of wood. The ſtreets are well paved, and enlightened with lamps by authority of parliament. An act paſſed 12° E. 4. to oblige the inhabitants to pave the ſtreets, and the next year, the king by his charter impowered the corporation to do it. This had before been an object of royal care, for king E. 3. in the 9th year of his reign, gave the toll of Glouceſter for ſeven years for that purpoſe; and afterwards king H. 4.

‖ But according to Sir Robert Atkyns, 51° 53′.

* This has ſometimes been called the vale of Eveſham, but I know not by what authority. Antiently this vale was denominated from the city of Glouceſter; for Malmeſbury de Giſt. Pont. Aug. l. 4. and Camden from him, ſays, this city ſtands in the Vale of Glouceſter. Ravelle in his Giſt. to the priory of Beckford, in Mon. Ang. ſays, Beckford is in the Vale of Glouceſter. In a confirmation of lands by king R. 1. to Almaric Deſpencer, Stanley is expreſsly ſaid to be in the Vale of Glouceſter. And Malmeſbury ſays, that Briſtol ſtands in the ſame vale.

in the 13th year of his reign, did the ſame for five years, as appears by the city books and writings.

The Britons called this city Caer Gloi, Caer Glou, or Caer Gloui; which name, after the Romans had ſubdued a great part of this iſland, was changed into Glevum, or Clevum, agreeable to the Latin idiom. This conqueſt was made in their ſecond expedition by Aulus Plautius, the prætor, under the emperor Claudius, about the 44th, 45th, or 46th year of the Chriſtian æra. Many of the Britons ſubmitted to the Roman government, and a colony was ſtationed at Glouceſter, as a convenient ſituation to curb the Silures, who gave the invaders more trouble than any other of the inhabitants of the iſland. It was called Colonia Glevum, as appears by an antient inſcription to be ſeen on a ſtone near the north gate at Bath. Dr. Gale has given his reading of it, which Mr. Hern, in his notes upon Leland's Itinerary, finds fault with, and ſubſtitutes the following:

DEC. COLONE GLEV.

VIXT AN. LXXX, VI.

The doctor thinks the decurio died at Bath, whither he is ſuppoſed to have gone to refreſh his forces.

When the Romans quitted this iſland, the Britons were maſters of the town for ſome time; but it was taken from them by the Saxons in the year 570, or 577. They called it Gleaucerter, Gleaucerre, Gleapanceaſter, Glouceſter, Gleuceſter, Gleancerre. By the modern Latiniſts it is written Glavorna, Glavornia, Glovernia, Gloveria, Gloceſtria, Glauceſtria, Gloeceſtria, and Glouceſtria. By antient Engliſh writers, Gloceſtar, Glouceſtre, Glowceſter, Glouceſtyre, Gloeceſter; and now we write it Glouceſter, or, by contraction, Gloceſter, but it is pronounced Gloſter.

Varunnius and others have accounted differently for the name of this place. They would have us believe that the emperor Claudius, having here married his daughter Genuiſſa to king Arviragus, commanded the town, and caſtle, adds the maſter of St. Albans, to be § built, and ordered it to be called after his own name. Thus, according to them, have we the origin of Claudia, Claudioceſtria, Clauceſtria, Claudiana civitas, Claudiaceſtrienſis civitas, Claudioceſtre, Clauceſtre, &c. A little after this, a ſmall alteration is ſaid to have been made in the name, out of reſpect to one Gloius, a general, whom Claudius begat here, and was ſometime governor of Demetia, a part of South Wales. Robert of Glouceſter ſays, (Chron. p. 66.) that before the emperor Claudius's time 'twas a little town, and that to render it more like to Gloius's name, it was called Glouceſtre, inſtead of Clauceſtre, which was its former name.

But Dr. Plot, in his Natural Hiſtory of Oxfordſhire, obſerves, that notwithſtanding the name Claudii Caſtrum may ſeem to favour theſe ſtories, yet in all likelihood there was never any ſuch matter; for tho' Suetonius and Dion enumerate the emperor's daughters, and ſhew to whom they were married, neither of them mentions any thing of this † Genuiſſa; which might be expected, eſpecially as the latter of theſe hiſtorians lived in Claudius's time, and bore the office of conſul. Beſides, the beſt hiſtorians agree, that ‡ Arviragus was never heard of before the time of Domitian: So that this derivation of its name, founded on ſo many fabulous ſtories, muſt be rejected.

Ninius advances an opinion of his own, that there were three brothers, the ſons of Glouus, great grandfather to king Vortigern, who built this town, and called it after their father's name; but this ſtory is as groundleſs as the former, for Clevum, or Glevum, with its diſtance from Durocornovium, or Corinium, now Cirenceſter, is mentioned long before that time by Antoninus, in his thirteenth journey.

Others have conjectured, that when the Romans divided Britain into five parts, the making of this town the head of Flavia Cæſarienſis, which was one of the five, gave riſe to the name; for, ſay ‖ they, Flavius in the Britiſh language ſounds the ſame as Glaui, which by a Britiſh pronunciation might eaſily paſs into Gloui.

But this etymology is alſo to be rejected for the better one of Minſhew, Skinner, and others, who are of opinion, that the Britons gave it the name of Caer Glou, or Caer Gloyw, which in their language ſignifies the bright or * ſplendid town, on account of its ſituation, which is on a fine eminence in the midſt of the flat and low part of the country of the Dobuni, and therefore it might juſtly be eſteemed fair, bright, and beautiful. Camden is of this opinion, and ſays that upon the like account, the Greeks had their Callipolis, Callidromos, Calliſtratia, and amongſt the Engliſh, Brightſtow, and Fairford.

The Romans, as was uſual with them, altered the termination of the Britiſh name, to make

§ They pretend that this was the city mentioned by Seneca, in Lib. de morte Claudij, who ſays, that the barbarians in Britain worſhiped him for a god, and built a city for his honour.

† Bale, (Cent. 1. p. 18.) ſays, Genuiſſa was the emperor Claudius's natural daughter. Her name is ſometimes written Jeniſſa, Genniſa, and Gewiſe.

‡ Biſhop Stillingfleet mentions Arviragus (Ant. Brit.) as a conſiderable Britiſh prince, and an enemy at firſt to Cæſar; but he brings him down to the time of Domitian. He is otherwiſe called Armiragus, Armoger, Arivoger, or Arivog; by Hector Boetius, Protuſagus; by the Britons, Gwerydh ap Arwenydog, brother to king Guiderius, and ſon to king Cunobeline.

‖ Gale's Antoninus, p. 129.

* The word Caer, ſignifies only a wall, fortreſs, or incloſure; which being prefixt to the names of Roman towns, becauſe fortified, has occaſioned ſeveral to ſuppoſe the genuine ſignification of it to be a town or city. We have divers camps on our mountains called Caereu, where we have not the leaſt ground to ſuſpect that ever any cities were founded; and in ſome places I have obſerved the church-yard wall to be called Caer y Vynwent. Nor does it ſeem improbable that this Kaer was derived originally from Kai, which ſignifies to ſhut up or incloſe. Camden col. 822.

it more agreeable to their own language, and called it Glevum; whence, or from the Britiſh name, the Saxons called it Gleaucearcre; for wherever they found the word Caer, in the Britiſh names of places, they always tranſlated it by cearcre, which was of the ſame ſignification in their own language.

This is a place of conſiderable antiquity. Alfred of Beverly mentions Kair Gloi, i. e. Glouceſtria, as one of the twenty eight cities built by the Britons before the Roman invaſion. One of thoſe highways, called by the Romans Vias Conſulares, Regias, Prætorias, Militares, &c. paſſed thro' the town, from St. David's to Southampton, in Hampſhire. This was the Irminſtreet, and ſeems to have come from Newland or Dudſton, on the N. ſide of St. Mary de Cript church, along the ſchool-maſter's garden, and Mary-lane, and under the gate belonging to the ſchool, acroſs the ſouth-gate ſtreet, to the houſe directly oppoſite to the ſchool, and thence to the river Severn.

It is obſervable that this place is called a city, [civitas] when many others, at preſent much larger, are called only burghs. Alfred of Beverly ſays expreſſly, that it is a city; and Huntingdon affirms that there are more cities in England than biſhopricks, and then inſtances Glouceſter, &c. But notwithſtanding the title of civitas, or city, was frequently given to this place in ſeveral king's charters, pope's bulls, and other authentic records and regiſters, it cannot thence of neceſſity be inferred, that it was really ſuch. Antiently indeed there was little difference between cities and great boroughs; but afterwards a diſtinction aroſe, when cities, properly ſo called, were inveſted with particular privileges, and by particular charters made counties of themſelves. The word Urbs, which is often uſed when ſpeaking of this place, is of a more reſtrained ſignification than Civitas, and denotes a large and populous place.

This town being well ſituated to curb the Silures, was enlarged by the Roman emperors, as their occaſions and neceſſities of employing more forces required. It is ſaid to have been large and populous, when the conſul of it was ſummoned, together with other great perſons, to attend king Arthur's court, to ſolemnize his coronation.

In the year 577, according to the Saxon chronicle, when it was taken from the Britons by the Weſt Saxons, 'twas reputed one of their principal cities.

During the wars between the Britons and Saxons, and (after the Norman conqueſt) between the crown and the great barons, this place was thought very important, on account of its ſituation, which always gained it the favour of one party, and drew upon it the reſentment of the other; ſo that it hath experienced a great variety of fortune.

In the year 679, (as it is in Mon. Anglic.) Wolphere, ſon of king Penda, repaired it, having greatly ſuffered in the wars, and ſo enlarged and adorned it, as Bede informs us, that about the beginning of the eighth century, it was eſteemed one of the nobleſt cities in the kingdom. And in the year 918, it was very inſtrumental in routing and deſtroying the Daniſh army.

In § 1087, or according to ſome 1088, the greateſt part of the town was conſumed by fire, in the wars between the different parties of William Rufus and his brother Robert. And again in 1093, or according to others, 1095, William de Ewe, or Auco, with his Welch confederates, in an inſurrection to depoſe king William the Second, aſſaulted and greatly damaged the town and neighbourhood.

The town being antiently built of timber, made it extremely ſubject to fire. On the eighth ides of June, 1101, ſays Dunelm, (others will have it to be on the 11th of June, 1102) moſt of the town was burnt down; and on the 7th ides of March, 1121, (Leland's Itin.) or 1122, (Antiq. Brit.) it ſuffered the like calamity.

In the beginning of king Stephen's reign 'twas large and handſome, but ſiding with the empreſs Maud, and her adherents, greatly impoveriſhed it. And we learn by a MS. called the Glouceſter book, in the library of C. C. C. Oxon, that it was burnt on the 5th ides of May, 1150; and that again on the 17th of June, 1264, almoſt the whole town was deſtroyed by fire.

About 1487, there were 300 houſes in it fallen to decay; and an act of parliament was made 27 H. 8. to enforce the rebuilding of part of it, which had ſo good effect, that even in the ſame reign, there were ſeveral ſtreets and lanes which are now intirely demoliſhed and forgotten. But the terrible deſtruction made at the ‡ ſiege, Aug. 10th, 1643, in pulling down or burning 241 dwelling houſes and other buildings, reduced it ſo much, that it has ſcarcely yet recovered its former ſize and grandeur.

Mr. Camden ſays of Shrewſbury, when the Normans firſt ſettled here, it was a well built and well frequented city; for it appears by Domeſday-Book, that it was taxed at 7*l.* 16*s.* to the king yearly. Upon which it may be obſerved, that if the extent and riches of places, hold any proportion with the tax paid to the king at that time, Glouceſter muſt have been, and it certainly was, greatly ſuperior to Shrewſbury, as appears by the following account.

In Domeſday-Book, the groſs of the borough is ſurveyed at the beginning of the county, diſtinctly from the Berton. The demeſnes of the crown are placed firſt, as follow, viz.

§ Loyde, in his Hiſtory of Wales, ſays, that in 1087, the earls of Hereford and Shrewſbery, with the Welchmen, burnt all Worceſterſhire and Glouceſterſhire. The Saxon Chronicle mentions the commotions in that year.—Dugdale ſays, William de Auco, or Ewe, with his forces, did great miſchief in Glouceſterſhire 1 Willi Rufi; but by miſtake he calls this 1088. For the intent of this rebellion was to obtain the crown for Robert, upon his father's death, which was in 1087. But hiſtorians beginning the year at different times might occaſion this difference.

" In king Edward's time, the city of Glou-

" meaſure of the burgh; thirty-ſix dicres of iron
" [each of ten bars]; a hundred iron rods drawn
" out for the nails of the king's ſhips, and ſome
" other ſmall cuſtoms in the king's hall and cham" ber. Now this city pays the king ſixty pounds,
" twenty in ora, and of money the king hath twenty.

" In the demeſne lands of the king, Rogerius
" de Berchelai holds one houſe, and one fiſhery
" in the vill, and it is out of the king's hands.
" Balduinus held it in king Edward's time.

" All theſe manſions paid royal cuſtom in the

" Theſe manſions were in the farm of king
" Edward when he was alive, and after his death;
" but now they are taken away from the farm
" and cuſtom of the king. In king Edward's
" time, there was demeſne of the king in the city,
" all his entertainment and clothing. When
" earl William was received to farm, he was like-
" wiſe clothed.

" There were ſixteen houſes where the caſtle
" ſtands, which are now wanting, [demoliſhed] and " in the burgh of the city, fourteen that are waſte.

The number of burgages and houſes with the names of the owners, ſpecified in the above account, are twenty three, beſides ſixteen which were demoliſhed for the building of the caſtle; fourteen that were waſte; and ſome that belonged to Oſbernus, that are not numbered; but they yielded the yearly rent of ten ſhillings, which at five pence or ſix pence a houſe, the uſual rate of houſes in Glouceſter at that time, will produce twenty in number. Beſides theſe, there are mentioned in the ſame ſurvey, under the titles of ſeveral owners of lands, as Terra S'ti Dyoniſij, &c. about eighty two in all. Under the title Terra S. Petri de Glouec' it is ſaid, " In king Edward's " time Saint Peter in Glouueceſtre had from its " burgages xix. ſol. and v. den. and xvi. ſalmons. " Now it hath the ſame number of ſalmons and " l. ſol." In this inſtance alſo the number of burgages is not mentioned, but according to the above calculation, we may well ſuppoſe them to be a hundred. Admitting then this calculation, the total of burgages and houſes taken notice of in Domeſday, are about two hundreds and fifty-five.

That Glouceſter was formerly a place of conſiderable note, may alſo be collected from its fines, tallages, aids, and fee farm rents.

In Madox's Hiſtory of the Exchequer, pp. 226, 227, 485, &c. are the following particulars. The ferm of the burgh, 16, 17, 19, 22 H. 2. was lv. lib. and the increment thereof v. lib. King Richard the Firſt, by his charter dated the 5th and 6th of May, 5° regni, granted to the burgeſſes to farm the whole borough, with the appurtenances, at the yearly rent of lv. lib. and x lib. increaſe of farm. King John, by his charter in the firſt year of his reign, granted it ſo to them; and 8° regni, § they paid c. marks for having this to farm, according to the king's charter. 2° and 9° H. 3. the old increment of the borough was v. lib. and the new x. lib. more; and that king, by his charter 6 Apr. 11° regni, granted it to them exactly as king John did by his.

The king, by his letters patents, dated 10 Jan. 7° E. 3. for a fine § which they paid him, and for ſome other cauſes, granted to them the borough, with its rents, free from all charges, except lxv. lib. per ann. And it appearing that king H. 3. granted to Ely de Rocheſter, and his heirs, v. lib. thereof, to be allowed, that allowance is yearly made, and the fee farm rent now paid is but lx. lib. per ann.

Glouceſter was antiently a diſtinct hundred of itſelf, and 'tis probable that it continued ſo 'till the reign of king E. 3. for before that time, ſeveral acts are expreſſly ſaid to be done in the full hundred of Glouceſter. The high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire, in anſwer to the king's writ, dated 5° Mar. 9° E. 2. certified as follows: Hundred de Glouceſter. Et D'na Margaret regina eſt Domina ejuſdem Hundred. Hundred of Glouceſter. And the lady queen Margaret is lady of that hundred.

which is generally walked every year, is about three miles. Thomas Styward and John de Elmore, bailiffs of the borough, die Mercurij, 44° E. 3. perambulated the liberties thereof; and the perambulation was then as follows, viz.

From the weſt-gate to the croſs in the middle of the weſt bridge, the meadows of the abbot of S. Peter's on each ſide of the bridge excepted. Then from the river Severn, within the little gate towards the eaſt, between the meadow of the archdeacon, and the garden of the Bartholomews, to Little Severn; and ſo from Little Severn to Tulliwell brooke, on which there is a bridge with iron bars. Thence from the highway to the gate of the monks garden, with the lane called Fetelane, to Newlands, by marks and bounds, as appears by the ſtones there fixed. Thence to the ſouth-gate, to the limit there, the inn excepted, with the houſes and lands on the other ſide. Thence from Rigley ſtile, to the tenements of the abbat of S. Peter's. Thence to the lane called Severn-ſtreet, to the key at the end of that ſtreet, the king's caſtle, and the meadows excepted, as it appears by the extent of the city, in the treaſury of the kings of England. And, to prevent diſputes, great ſtones with C. G. cut on them, are now ſet up at the limits thereof.

Or it may be from hail, which formerly, as well as at preſent, was uſed to ſignify health, vigour and ſtrength; and as 'tis likely this was antiently eſteemed the ſtrongeſt gate in the city, and particularly mentioned, which the other parts never are, as newly erected, about the reign of king H. 3. perhaps this gate hence received its denomination, and was called by way of eminence the Hails, or ſtrong Gate.

In the year 1562, the number of houſholders in this city, according to biſhop Cheiney, was 936, to which 16 more were added for St. Margaret's and St. Mary Magdalen's hoſpitals. About the year 1710, the number of houſes is reckoned at 1003; of inhabitants, 4990. In Mr. Wantner's MS. Collections, about 1714, it is ſaid that there were not leſs than 6000 ſouls within the precincts. In the year 1743, there were 1335 houſholders, and about 5585 inhabitants in Glouceſter; and in the hamlets which are within the liberties, 275 houſholders and 936 inhabitants more.

Of its Strength, Walls, Gates, Bridges, &c.

EARL Eldol, in 489, and Edmund Ironſide, in 1016, flying to this city for ſafety, protection and ſuccour, againſt their adverſaries, evidence that in thoſe times 'twas of great ſtrength. In king Stephen's reign, 'twas kept for the king, with a ſtrong garriſon. But the inhabitants of the town, who ſided with the empreſs Maud, drove out the garriſon, and frequently gave vigorous aſſaults to his adherents; particularly in November 1139, when they ſent out a conſiderable army of horſe and foot to ſpoil the city of Worceſter, for refuſing to eſpouſe the empreſs's title. King John, in May 1216, fled hither for his defence, and continued here for ſome time. The parts about it that were open and undefended were frequently moleſted by war, and brought almoſt to ruin, by the great forces of Lewis, the French king's ſon. Upon king John's death, the pope's legate and the earl of Pembroke, took care to ſecure the young king, queen Iſabel his mother, his brother Richard, with his ſiſters, and great numbers of the nobility, and chief of the realm, in this place, which then was eſteemed the ſafeſt in the kingdom. One of that king's reaſons for his being here often in his long reign was, as we are told in Fuller's Church Hiſtory, becauſe it was the ſtrongeſt, and adhered to his intereſt. In 1326, king E. 2. retired hither, and the queen ſoon followed him, and had the gates opened to her. At this place ſhe publiſhed a proclamation, inviting him to come and reſume the government of the realm. Her army was very much increaſed by the addition of new forces, which, whilſt ſhe was here, came to her; particularly the lords of Percy and Wake, and others from the Northern parts, and from the Marches.

In 1473, queen Margaret, wife of king H. 6. having got together a great army at Briſtol, would fain fain have went thro' this town, but ſhe was refuſed by the governor; and there being no likelihood of taking it at the firſt aſſault, much leſs by laying ſiege to it in form, they reſolved to paſs the Severn at Tewkeſbury.

The walls occur in merlin's propheſy *, tho' 'tis ſaid § That they were founded, or rather perhaps regularly made round every part of the town by the ſame prince that founded thoſe at Chicheſter, who was Ciſſa, the ſecond king of the South Saxons. † King William the Conqueror, after he had ſettled the ſouthern parts of the kingdom, viſiting the weſtern ones, came to Glouceſter; and greatly liking the ſituation of this place, which he conſidered as a barrier between England and Wales, from which it was divided by the river Severn, he therefore cauſed the north-eaſt and ſouth ſides to be fortified with embattled ſtone walls, and gates, to repel the incurſions of the turbulent Welch, who had greatly diſquieted the peace of king Edward the Confeſſor.

Sir Thomas de Bradeſtan, or Bradſton, an active perſon in thoſe days, and eminent for his military employments, was very inſtrumental in repairing and ſuſtaining them, and it appears by the city books, that, 19° E. 3. he obtained a grant of the tolls, or rather the fee-farm rent of the town for this purpoſe. Before that time, as well as ſince, a great deal was expended for murage. And particular perſons, called Murage-gatherers, accounted for the money which they received for this uſe. In the time of H. 8. according to Leland, the town was ſtrongly defended by its walls, where it was not well ſecured by the river Severn, and ſo it continued 'till the ſiege in 1643 ‖; when, from the South-gate to the North-port, or Poſtern gate, was an antient wall, well lined with earth to a conſiderable height. Thence to the North-gate was a ſlender work, raiſed upon a low ground. From the North to the Weſt-gate was no antient defence, but a ſmall work newly raiſed, with the advantage of marſhy grounds without, and a line within, from the inner North-gate under the college wall, to the priory of S. Oſwald. From the Weſt towards the South-gate, along the river ſide, it had no more defence than the river itſelf, and the meadows being level with the town. From the caſtle to the South-port was a firm and lofty work, to command the high ground in the ſuburbs. The ditches or moats narrow, but watered round.

In 1662, the walls were demoliſhed by order of the commiſſioners appointed for the regulation of corporations.

Before the walls were taken down, four principal gates ſtood in them, denominated, as already obſerved, from their ſituation, Eaſt, Weſt, North and South, which are ſtill remaining.

The Weſt-Gate, belonging to the porter that attends the eldeſt ſheriff, was built in the reign of king H. 8. . It is a very handſome building, little impaired by time.

The Eaſt-Gate, belonging to the porter that attends the younger ſheriff, is now the houſe of correction. A charity ſchool alſo was kept here 57° H. 3. In antient deeds belonging to Bartholomew's hoſpital, 'tis called The New Eaſt-gate.

The North-Gate, which ſtands upon Fulbrook, is now the city priſon §§ for debtors and malefactors. Mr. Richard Pate, recorder of the city, bequeathed twenty marks for the repairing of the Eaſt and North-gates, provided it were done within two years after Feb. 2, 1588. The mayor and burgeſſes expended that ſum, and 40*l.* or, according to ſome MS. papers, 100 marks more, for building the houſe adjoining on the eaſt ſide of it, for the goaler's lodgings.

The South-Gate, belonging to the porter that attends the mayor's wife, was ſo battered ‡ at the ſiege, that very ſoon after it fell to the ground. In the ſame year it was rebuilt; and on it was cut in capital letters ‡‡ round the arch, on the one ſide, A CITY ASSAULTED BY MAN, BUT SAVED BY GOD. On the other ſide next the city, EVER REMEMBER THE FIFTH OF SEPTEMBER, 1643. GIVE GOD THE GLORY.

'Tis ſaid that the arms ‖‖ of the king, the prince, and the duke, were appointed to be erected here: but they were afterwards demoliſhed, and 1671, the two firſt were put up, and an inſcription was appointed to be cut thereon.

This gate remains almoſt intire. Part of the city wall, tho' reduced to the height of eight or nine feet, runs eaſtward of this gate, and is a boundary to the lands of the late friary of Franciſcans, or Gray Friars. On the weſt ſide alſo of the ſaid gate a ſmall part of the wall remains.

There are other gates of leſs note within the city, and they are,

King Edward's Gate, a noble one, and made of freeſtone. It was built by king E. 3. and repaired by abbat Parker, but almoſt demoliſhed in the civil wars.

Lady Bell's Gate, received its name from the Lady Bell, who, with Sir Thomas Bell, her huſband, lived at the Black Fryers, which from him was termed Bell's Place; and was called the Eaſt-gate of the Black Fryers. 'Twas neatly arched with freeſtone, and lately fell down.

There were two other gates which led out of the city, and were in the walls thereof, but not of conſiderable note, and they were,

The Poſtern-Gate, which was in the middle between the Eaſt and the North-gates, and had, as I ſuppoſe, on the eaſt ſide of it, a kennel for the hounds belonging to the city.

The Blind-Gate *, which is ſometimes called St. Oſwald's gate, as being near, and leading to the church and priory of that name.

Theſe gates were within the liberties of the city, tho' without the walls.

Alvin-Gate, and the Lower North-Gate, are found in the Suburbs.

Within a little time after the reſtoration, it is reported, generally, that the doors belonging to the gates, by the king's order, were pulled down, and moſt of them given to the city of Worceſter, where they now are. A great many of the large iron hooks, which were part of the hinges thereof, ſtill remain here.

Forreign Bridge §, which was antiently accounted to be over the chief arm of the Severn, was of ſeven great arches.

Cole-Bridge, which is a little below the Bartholomew's Hoſpital, conſiſts of one arch, and ſerves to drain the meads. It is likely it received its name from its ſituation, as it is very convenient for conveying coals, fuel and other things, from Severn to St. Bartholomew's Hoſpital.

The Weſt-gate Bridge was built by † Nicholas Walred, clerk, in the reign of king H. 2. William Coxnel ‡, miniſter of St. Nicholas, claimed, in right of his church, 5° H. 3. forty feet of paſture on each ſide, for the repair and ſuſtaining thereof. William Fitz Catherine gave lands to it, about that king's reign. In the time of king E. 3. the brethren of St. Bartholomew's Hoſpital claimed St. Nicholas's church, with all its cuſtoms, eſpecially for the ſuſtentation of it. The priors and brethren thereof frequently repaired it, as appears by a proceſs in the King's Bench, 10° H. 7. And in divers records, that prior is called by the name of the keeper of the ſame. Dame Joan Cook, 31° H. 8. gave to the mayor and burgeſſes 5 l. per ann. towards the keeping of this bridge and the cauſeys in repair. Alſo Sir Thomas Bell, 34° H. 8. gave 10 l. per ann. for the ſame uſes. About the time of this reign, there were ſeveral ‖ benefactions to it. It is probable, that the acre of land in Winnals, in the pariſh of Haſfield, called formerly Bridge-Acre, was given for it. This bridge conſiſts of five great arches over Severn. In 1691, the water works on the ſouth ſide were begun, and here perhaps the two water-mills, erected 30° H. 6. might ſtand.

From the bridge there goes a great and lofty  cauſey of ſtone, called, according to the name of the place at the other end of it, Over's Cauſeway, thrown up, thro' the low meadows, acroſs the iſle of Alney. In it are ſeveral arched bridges, ſome of one, ſome of two, and ſome of three arches, intended to draw the water off the meadows when they are overflowed. Part of it is within the liberties of the city, and is repaired by it to near the bridge. 'Twas made as it now is in the reign of king H. 8. and is about half a mile long, conſiſting of thirty-ſix arches.

PUBLIC STRUCTURES.

IN the midſt of the city ſtood the lofty and beautiful High Cross, which received its name from its ſituation, and to diſtinguiſh it from ſeveral other croſſes in various parts of the city. There were ſeveral elegant ſtatues at full length placed upon it, in diſtinct niches, facing the ſeveral ſtreets. Weſtward ſtood thoſe of king John, and king Edw. 3. Eaſtward, king H. 3. and queen Eleanor. Northward, queen Elizabeth, and king Charles the Firſt. And Southward, the kings Richard the Second, and Richard the Third.

Leland takes notice of this building, and ſays, The beauty of the town lies in two croſſing ſtreets, and at the place of the middle meeting is an aqueduct incallated. The Grey Fryers, in 1438, granted, that water might be brought hither from Matteſnoll, or Robin-Hood's hill, for the uſe of the city. Civ.

It was built in the reign of king Henry the Seventh, and has been repaired ſeveral times ſince,

* Perhaps it was ſo called becauſe it was but as a poſtern, or little gate, out of the city, which had four others that were more conſpicuous; whereas that was reputed as a dark and blind paſſage thro' the walls, and no particular porter appointed to it. La Walchard, which was toward Brook-ſtreet, and is mentioned 1255 Barth. 'tis probable was this, and ſo called becauſe it is a ſhoard or break made in the wall to paſs thro'.

§ It was called Forreign Bridge from its being outward, near the weſt end of the town. Very antiently what was beyond it is ſaid to be beyond the bridge. And even in the reign of king H. 3. St. Bartholomew's hoſpital is mentioned as ſo ſtanding. See the word Forinſecus, in the Gloſſary to Kennet's Paroch. Antiq.

particularly particularly in 1550, 1635, and 1712. But by act of parliament, 23 G. 2. it was taken down, becauſe, being ſituated in the centre of the four principal ſtreets, it greatly interrupted the paſſage of carriages.

‡Several ſelds ſtood near the high croſs, and the burgeſſes, 6 Joh. paid the king 20 ſol. fine for amoving them §.

The TOLSEY, or TOLSEND, or TOLBOOTH,‖ ſo called, according to biſhop Kennet, becauſe it was the place where the lord of the manor received his dues, rents, and profits of the fair or market, called Toll. The Tolſey was antiently employ'd, as it is now, for the public affairs of the city.

By an act of parliament, 23 G. 2. the old Tolſey was taken down, and has been lately rebuilt from the ground, with a handſome front. Here the mayor, and juſtices for the city and in-county, hold the quarter-ſeſſions, and tranſact all public buſineſs. But the trial of criminals, and all civil cauſes of importance, are carried before the judges of aſſize at the Boothall.

The BOOTHALL, ſometimes called Bohalle, and Guildhall. Mr. Madox ſays, that the burgeſſes paid 2*s.* to the king, for a fine to buy and ſell therein for the improvement of the borough, 5 R. 1. It was rebuilt in the year 1606, and by the charter of the city is made ſubject to the juriſdiction both of the out-county and of the city; and here the aſſizes are held, and the quarter-ſeſſions for the out-county only.

The KING'S BOARD*, (formerly aſſigned for the ſelling of butter and cheeſe) was built or repaired by king Richard the Second, but it is now taken down†.

The KEY occurs by that name in the reign of king Edward the Fourth, as alſo the lane leading to the key, in that of king Henry the Seventh. In queen Elizabeth's time 'twas called the King's Key. In 1621, 1622, and 1713, 'twas greatly repaired and enlarged. In the preſent charter, expreſs mention is made of the Old and New Key; and there was lately a pillar of timber ſtanding on the great key*, and the following inſcription engraven on a braſs plate, at the top of it.

1650, QUI FELICITER OPTAT CIVITATI GLEVENSI, NON UT HERCULEAM COLUMNAM, SED PERPUSILLAM, HOC PIGNUS AMORIS ET GRATITUDINIS.

In the middle were theſe arms: On a chevron three roſes; and on a canton a dexter hand gules, to denote they belonged to a baronet.

The BARLEY-MARKET-HOUSE*, in the Eaſt-gate-ſtreet, appointed for barley, beans, and oats, was built in 1655, or 1656. Margery Price gave 50*l.* towards it, and ſtones were taken from the churches of St. Katherine, and St. Mary de Grace, and uſed in this market-houſe. Before that time, there was one which ſtood nearer to the Eaſt-gate; many of the materials of which were alſo applied to the building of this.

The WHEAT-MARKET-HOUSE*, in the South-gate-ſtreet, was built in 1606. Being very much battered and weakened at the ſiege, another, with a poor ſtatue of king Charles the Second, in a nich at the north end of it, was erected in 1660 and 1661.——Near it, in the midſt of the ſtreet, on a pedeſtal incloſed with iron paliſades, is a ſtatue of queen Anne. And near to the ſouth end of this market-houſe, in the middle of the ſtreet alſo, is a Gothic building, of an octagonal form, incloſing a ciſtern for the water of an antient aqueduct from Robinhood's hill, which at ſtated hours is open for public uſe. On the ſouth ſide of it is an inſcription. This was erected at the charge of alderman John Scriven, in 1636.

The STATUE of king George the Firſt, upon an ornamented pedeſtal, incloſed with iron paliſades, ſtands in the Eaſt-gate-ſtreet.

The CASTLE of Glouceſter. 'The caſtle of 'Eſtbrighoiel was built by earl William, and paid 'only 40 ſol. in his time for ſhips going to the 'foreſt.' Domeſday, p. 66. It is now the common jail for the out-county. Some part of the buildings is in private hands, held by leaſe from the crown; but the greater part belongs to the county, and is ſettled in the ſheriff, by a ſtatute 19 H. 7. It is extraparochial, and ſo is the hill adjoining, called the Barbican, which, according to Camden, is an Arabic word, ſignifying a watch-tower, or military defence.

There were many other places of note in the city, which are now either converted into pariſh dwellings, or totally deſtroy'd, as

St. MARTIN'S PLACE*, near the ſcite of the High Croſs, which king Edward the Third, in 1371, granted to the bailiffs, to erect a tower, and place a clock therein, for which the ſheriffs of the city paid 12*d.* yearly.

‖ It formerly conſiſted only of the council-chamber, and the room under it, (which were erected in 1602, upon the demoliſhing of the former edifice, made in 1565) 'till 1648, when the north wall of All Saints church was taken away, and the whole church converted into a court for the ſheriffs, and other public uſes. The chancel was turned into a ſtair caſe, leading to a room over it, and to the council-chamber. Some lands between that church and the ſtreet were afterwards purchaſed to enlarge the place. And, in 1685, the chamber over the ſheriff's court was made into a chapel, and king James the Second coming to Glouceſter, in his progreſs in 1686, was ſeated on a throne erected for him there, at the city charge; and from him it obtained the denomination of the King's Chapel. But ſoon after the revolution, in 1688, moſt of the coſtly furniture belonging to it was burnt and deſtroy'd.

† It was a magnificent market houſe, according to Dr. Stukeley, of Gothic Architecture, uncommon and antient, but finely adorned. Over the arches, and on the ſides and ends of it, were carvings of many hiſtorical parts of the Holy Scripture. At each corner was a large ſtatue, and on the upper part a croſs upon a pyramid, between four effigies, and it had battlements round it. In 1572, the upper part was repaired, and about 1691, was taken down, that a large ciſtern might be erected as a reſervoir for water, conveyed thither from near the Weſtgate.

The MEAL-MARKET, joining to the eaſt end of St. John's church. It was ordered to be repaired in 1619, and about 1657, was converted into a dwelling houſe. But upon rebuilding St. John's church, in 1733, or 1734, it was intirely demoliſhed, as being very incommodious.

Formerly there were ſeveral conduits and public wells in the city, which are now deſtroy'd, and there are no veſtiges of them remaining.

The lands extending along where the work-houſe now is, to a moat which led to the caſtle, and thence down to the key, were called Mary-Bone Park, and were incloſed in 1635, and afterwards built upon, in 1644.

By a voluntary ſubſcription of the inhabitants of this city and county, an act of parliament was obtained 23 G. 2. whereby certain commiſſioners were appointed, and impowered to purchaſe and pull down ſeveral buildings, both public and private; among others, the antient High Croſs, as before obſerved; the King's Board, or Butter-market-houſe, with the tower of the demoliſhed church of the Holy Trinity, which ſtood in the middle of the Weſt-gate-ſtreet, and were very incommodious to carriages. By this act, theſe buildings, with ſome dwelling houſes, were taken down; and lately, ſeveral public nuiſances and obſtructions have been removed, and the ſtreets new paved, greatly to the public conveniency, and beautifying of the city.

Of COINAGE, MINT, and MONEY.

THIS town, together with all other great places*, antiently enjoy'd the privilege of coining. King John's grant of a mint ſeems to be no more than a confirmation of a more antient grant, and 'tis very likely, that ſome of the Britiſh coins which have been found here in great plenty, were ſtruck in this place. There is a ſilver coin of king Harold, the ſon of king Canute, with this inſcription,—HAROLD REX ANGLOrum. The king had crown and ſceptre. The reverſe is, WVLFGEAT ON (de) GLEapecerc̃ne. With PAX in the middle.

In antient grants to this place, the Monetarii (moneyers, or coiners, who were miniſters of the mint, and made, coined, and delivered out the king's money) are expreſſly mentioned, and had particular privileges granted to them. It is probable that ſeveral of the coins, whereon are fleurs de lis, and this inſcription, AVE MARIA GRATIA PIA ET PLENA, were ſtruck in this place, ſince they are ſo frequently found here.

In 1657, a farthing was coined, with the city arms in the middle, and round them this inſcription: FOR NECESSARY CHANGE. On the reverſe, in the middle, C. G. round which LUKE NOURSE MAIOR, 1657.

On another farthing, in the middle, the arms of the city; round them THOMAS PRICE MAIOR. On the reverſe, in the middle, C. G. round which, A GLOCESTER FARTHING.

On another farthing, in the middle, the city arms; round them, THE ARMS OF GLOVCESTER. On the reverſe, in the middle,

Of COURTS.

THERE were courts held in this town very antiently, particularly before the reign of king John, who granted the burgeſſes a charter, by which they were impowered to hold all pleas in the town for their lands, tenures, wages, juſt debts, and whatſoever was due to them there. King Edward the Second, in the 6th year of his reign, granted them, that they might hold pleas of lands and tenures in the vill; and for the future, that they might hear complaints, and puniſh offences, ſo as not to be ſubject to communicate with, or impart to foreigners, but only with their fellow burgeſſes. King Richard the Second, by his charter, in the twenty-firſt year of his reign, gave them like authority to hear and determine all cauſes, and to puniſh offenders in the town; at which time the court was held in the Guildhall.

And ever ſince that king's reign, the burgeſſes of the vill have had authority to hold pleas, real and perſonal, within their liberties. And 'tis expreſſly granted, by former charters as well as the preſent §, That the mayor, &c. upon every Monday, may hold a court for this purpoſe, as the ſame uſed to be holden time out of mind. And that the ſheriffs, for all debts, &c. may hold the Tolſey-court, from hour to hour, and from day to day, as there is occaſion.

The ſheriffs ſhall, in every month, hold a county-court, and twice in the year a law-day.

The ſuitors of this hundred, or law-day court, were as follow†, 18 H. 7.

The earl of Glouceſter.
The archbiſhop of York.
The prior of Lanthony.

* As at the council, or ſynod of Grateley, held by king Athelſtan, in 928, and alſo by the king's own order, it was appointed, that there ſhould be one mint for coining of money in all Burghs, as 'tis in the Saxon, which is rendered by Mr. Lambard in Latin, oppida, or towns; caſtles, as 'tis in Cl. Wilkins's Councils, vol. 1, p. 206; great towns, as in Tindale's Notes upon Rapin, vol. 1, p. 114; it may thence be well concluded that there was a mint in Glouceſter long before the time of king John; and that that king only eſtabliſhed it by his charter.

Mr. Camden, in his Remains, p. 185, ſays, There was in every good town one coiner, called Monetarius, in the time of our antient Saxon kings. The mint, or place particularly appointed for coinage, was near Trinity church, in the reign of king Henry the Second. A. 5. A. 6. A. 9.

After the reſtoration, inſtead of the purchaſers of the Dean and Chapter's lands, the Dean and Chapter, are ſuitors to this court.

In 1660 and 1688, Henry Sutton, D. D. occurs in the place of Miles Clent. October 8, 1688, John Webb, A. M. occurs, in the place of Dr. Sutton, as he does alſo in 1700. Saunders Saunders, gent. occurs in the place of Mr. Webb, as he does alſo in 1717. Since that time Saunders Saunders, gent. ſold ſeveral poſſeſſions which he had in the city, to Mr. Bridges Pateſhall, after which, his widow was reckoned ſuitor to this court.

‡ An act of parliament was paſſed in the firſt year of king William the Third, for the erecting of a court of requeſts, or court of conſcience, for all debts under forty ſhillings, to be holden as often as the commiſſioners ſhall think fit, before three at leaſt of them. This court being deſigned for the benefit and relief of the burgeſſes and inhabitants, the expences of proceedings are ſo moderate as not to fruſtrate the intention of it.

Beſides this court of the town, there was alſo another court, which was commonly called the Foreign court of the honour of Glouceſter, and was holden within the juriſdiction of the honour, but not within the liberties of the governors of the town. Maud, the wife of the laſt Gilbert de Clare, who was earl of this place, had for her dowry an aſſignment, among other things, of the Foreign court of the honour of Glouceſter. Dug. Bar. v. 1. p. 217. And this foreign court is mentioned Clauſ. 8° E. 2. It was reſerved by earl Mylo, the founder of Lanthony priory, and his deſcendants enjoyed the ſame for many ages after him.

'Tis ſaid, that upon the death of Humphry de Bohun, Mary, his daughter, had aſſigned to her, amongſt other things, for the purparty of her father's part, the court of the honour of Hereford, holden at Glouceſter; which was worth ten ſhillings a year. And Henry of Lancaſter, her huſband, having ſworn fealty to the king, his majeſty commanded his eſcheater, by his charter, dated at Weſtminſter, the 22d day of December, 8° R. 2. to give the ſaid earl poſſeſſion thereof.

Of the HONOUR of GLOUCESTER.

ALTHOUGH in a great many writers the Honour and Title are confuſed, and frequently put one for the other, I rather chuſe to mention them diſtinctly and ſeparately.

The honour of Glouceſter was enjoy'd by ſeveral perſons who never had any title of dignity taken from this place; whilſt others took their titles hence, but were never poſſeſſors of the lands which belonged to this barony, which was very great.

What is affirmed of land baronies *, That they were divided and ſubdivided, 'till at length they were brought to little or nothing, may truely and properly be ſaid of the honour of Glouceſter, to which, being a noble ſeigneury or lordſhip, tho' ſeveral others did originally belong, yet was it afterwards greatly reduced, as will appear by the following ſhort account of it.

Brictrick † (called alſo Brithrick) obtained it from Hailward Snow, before the conqueſt; but having incurred the hatred of Maud, William the Conqueror's queen, whom, when he was a public ambaſſador abroad, he had refuſed to marry, ſoon after the entrance of the Normans ſhe revenged the inſult, by procuring his impriſonment, and the confiſcation of his eſtate.

The queen, after Brictric's death, enjoy'd it, and after her death king William the Firſt, to whom ſucceeded king William the Second, who held it for ſome time, and then granted it to and aſſiſtant to the Conqueror, who had very large poſſeſſions in ſeveral places. This great perſon was the firſt, I ſuppoſe, who held the honour and the title together. He was the chief actor in the conqueſt ‖ of Glamorganſhire, in 1091, and ſeated himſelf for the moſt part at Cardiff, where, ſays Camden, (col. 733) he fortified the town with walls and a caſtle, and made it both a ſeat of war and a court of juſtice. In 1102, he new built the abbey of Tewkeſbury, with all its offices, and endow'd it with many lands, rents, and large poſſeſſions, and made Cranburne, in Dorſetſhire, a cell to it. In the retaking of Faleiſe, in Normandy, he was ſtruck on the temples, which deprived him of his ſenſes, but he lived a conſiderable time after; and dying, he was buried in the chapter-houſe of Tewkeſbury, in 1107; but was moved into the middle of the preſbytery in 1241. And in 1397, an admirable chapel was made by abbat Parker, on the north ſide of the chancel, and certain offices were daily celebrated for him. Round the top of the chapel was written, but now not legible, "In iſta capella jacet D^nus^ Robertus Filius Hammonis, hujus loci Fundator." His bones now lie wrapt in fine diaper in a plain tomb above ground, in the middle of the chapel.

But 'tis probable that king Stephen ‡ took this honour away from Earl Robert, and gave it to Miles of Glouceſter, who, I think, had it but a little time before his revolt to the empreſs. Afterwards 'twas again ‖‖ in the king's hands; for Hugh Bardolf §§ 1° R. 1. was accountable for 42*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* of the antient farm of the honour of Glouceſter; and likewiſe for 370*l.* 18*s.* 9*d.* for the farm of the manors belonging to it, for three quarters of a year, before the king gave it to his brother John; and for 32*l.* for the third part of the profits ariſing from the pleas of the county for half a year. And by Mag. Rot. 9° R. 1. it appears, that William de Warrenna accounted for 340*l.* 8*s.* 7*d.* for the ſcutage of the honour of Glouceſter, aſſiſed for the king's redemption, after his return from Aleman; of the knights of the ſaid honour, which he can find, as he ſays, in the treaſury 196*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.* and of Euſtace of Grainville of the fee of one knight, by the king's writ, which he holds in capite of the king, as the ſaid William ſays. And he owes 143*l.* 7*s.* 9*d.* which ought to be required of the knights, whoſe names are noted in the roll which the ſaid William delivered in the treaſury, when he left off to have the cuſtody of the ſaid honour. The ſame accounts for the ſame debt nothing. Alſo of Thomas de Sandford, 25 ſol. who went to the ſervice of the king by the ſaid writ, and he owes 145*l.* 12*s.* 9*d.* which ought to be required of the aforeſaid knights, as he ſays.

Robert Fitz-Haman left behind him † four daughters, viz. Mabel, by others called Sibil, or Maud, who afterwards married Robert Melhent; Cicily, afterwards abbeſs of Shafteſbury, in Dorſetſhire; Hawiſe, abbeſs of Wincheſter, or, as Dugdale ſays, of Wilton; and Amice, who married the earl of Britain. But among theſe four females king Henry the Firſt would not have the honour divided, and therefore gave this whole honour to his natural ſon Robert, concerning whom hereafter.

Earl Robert was ſucceeded in this honour by his ſon William, who dying, left three daughters.

John the fourth ſon of king H. 2. received this honour of his brother king Richard, as a portion with Iſabel, one of the daughters of earl William; and tho' he was afterwards divorced from her, yet he retained  the honour to himſelf; for it is ſaid, Mag. Rot. 1° Joh. that William de Faleiſe and Maſter Swain, rendered an account of the honour of Glouceſter, namely, 223*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.* for the ferms and iſſues of the manor of this honour, which were in the king's hands for half a year; that is to ſay, 18*l.* 10*s.* for the ferm of Bradeſtede for half a year, it having been let to ferm at that rate by the ſaid William and Maſter Suein, 78 ſol. ariſing by the ſale of wood, five marks for the  aſſiſed §§ aid in the ſaid vill, 46 ſol. and three halfpence of the  aſſiſed §§ rent of Peteresfield, of the ſaid ferm; five marks in toll, and other perquiſites; four marks for the tallage of the ſame vill; 8*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.* for the rent aſſiſed of Mapelderesham; 7*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* for the tallage of the ſame town, and in many other items.

* Guy de Chancels, 15° John, accounted for the ſcutage of the honour of Glouceſter, as well of the old feoffment as of the new, viz. for 327 knights fees and a tenth, and a twelfth part of a fee. Several of the knights fees belonging to this honour, about twenty in number, could not at preſent be found, or aſcertained.

‖ This conqueſt was made in the following manner: Jeſtyn, lord of Glamorganſhire, having been defeated in a rebellion againſt Rhees ap Tewdor, ſent Eneon, a Welch gentleman, to Robert Fitz-Haimon, who was a great baron and a gentleman of the king's privy chamber, to ſollicit him to come to his aſſiſtance, with promiſes of great rewards and emoluments; and Eneon, if he ſucceeded in his negotiation, was promiſed Jeſtyn's daughter in marriage. The propoſal was agreeable to the ſpirit of the times, and Fitz-Haimon, with twelve knights of conſiderable note and diſtinction, at the head of a large body of troops, joined thoſe of Glamorganſhire, and invaded the territories of Rhees ap Tewdor, who met them near Brecknock, and giving them battle was vanquiſhed by them, and ſlain in the action. Jeſtyn kept his engagements with the Normans very faithfully, but broke his word with Eneon, who burning with reſentment, followed the Normans who were already embarked for England, and complaining to them moſt bitterly of his maſter's perfidiouſneſs, incited them to turn their arms againſt him; upon which, partly out of regard to the man, and partly being alured by the bait he propoſed to them, of the conqueſt of the country, they all returned with him, attack'd the lord of Glamorganſhire, defeated, and ſlew him. This is the account given by Caradoc of Lancarvon; but another account ſays, that Jeſtyn refuſed to perform the covenants he had made with the Normans. However, Fitz-Haimon ſeized the country, and reſerving to himſelf ſome principal parts, and the ſeignory of the whole, gave all the reſt of that fertile province to be held as fiefs under him, by the twelve knights and ſome others who had aſſiſted him, particularly Eneon.

‖ King Henry the Third, towards the latter end of his reign, granted ſeveral manors in the counties of Southampton and Kent, belonging to the honour of Glouceſter, to the then counteſs of Glouceſter, and her ſon Gilbert de Clare. I ſuppoſe this honour, at or before the time laſt mentioned, was continually decreaſing. In the ſecond year of the reign of queen Mary, 'twas given by the queen, with other things, to the lady Urſula Stafford. And 13° Eliz. it appears that this honour was then worth but 19*s.* 11*d.* 'Tis certain, 32° H. 3. earl Gilbert de Clare, who then had this, gave to William, his brother, the inheritance of the manors of Maplederham and Petersfield in the county of Southampton, which formerly belonged to it, and that other eſtates which were part thereof have been ſince parted with.

Of the EARLS of GLOUCESTER.

THERE is no earldom in the kingdom ſo antient as this of Glouceſter. Eldol, * or Edel, the Briton, by ſome called earl, by others duke and conſul, was earl of this place in the year 461; and attended king Vortigern at the treaty of peace at Ambreſbury, in Wiltſhire, to which they were invited by Hengiſt the Saxon, when it was agreed that neither party ſhould go thither armed; but the Saxons concealing long knives under their cloathes, murdered great numbers of the Britons. At this time Eldol is ſaid to have taken up a ſtake, which he found by chance, and to have laid about him with ſuch courage and effect, that he ſlew no leſs than ſeventy of them; and having broke the heads, arms, and limbs of many more, got from them into Glouceſter, his own city. Alſo, that in the bloody battle fought between Ambroſius, king of the Britons, and Hengiſt, in 489, earl Eldol charging thro' the midſt of the pagan army, took Hengiſt priſoner, and remembering his former treachery, cut off his head.

Swaine,  or Suane, eldeſt ſon of Godwin, earl of Kent, was earl hereof in the time of king Edward the Confeſſor, and going to Jeruſalem barefooted, on penance, to expiate the murder of Beorne, his kinſman, took cold thereby, and died at Licia, in his return in the year 1053.

Some have obtruded §§ William Fitz Euſtace, in 1094; but it does not †† appear that there ever was ſuch a man.

Robert Melhent, or Fitz Roy, ſometimes called Robert Rufus, conſul of Glouceſter. He was natural ſon of king Henry the Firſt, born of Neſta, the beautiful daughter of Rhees ap Tudor, or Theodore, prince of South Wales, and was made firſt earl after the conqueſt. For as it was not eſteemed honourable to be enriched with great poſſeſſions, without ſome title or dignity, having married Sibil, the eldeſt of the daughters of Robert Fitz Haman, he was created, in 1109, earl of this place, which was the moſt eminent of her heritage. By the writers of that time, he is called the conſul, and alſo earl of Glouceſter, and was a perſon above all others, of a great and undaunted ſpirit, never dejected by misfortunes; and who being eſteemed a prudent, learned, brave, and valiant prince ‡‡, ſkilled in the arts of war and peace, performed many heroic and difficult exploits with great honour, in the cauſe of his ſiſter Matilda, againſt king Stephen. As his mother was daughter to Rhees ap Teudor, the laſt king of South Wales, he derived from the affection of the Welch to her family a great intereſt there,

‡‡ All writers concur in their teſtimony of the excellent character of this nobleman, "who had no inconſiderable tincture of learning, and was the patron of all who excelled in it; qualities rare at all times in a nobleman of his high rank, but particularly in an age when knowledge and valour were thought incompatible, and not to be able to read was a mark of nobility." Lord Lyttelton's Life of H. 2. p. 281. And in another place, "He was unqueſtionably the wiſeſt man of thoſe times; and his virtue was ſuch, that even thoſe times could not corrupt it. If when the nation was grown equally tired of Matilda and of Stephen, he had aſpired to obtain the crown for himſelf, he might very poſſibly have gained it from both; but he thought it leſs glorious to be a king, than to preſerve his fidelity and honour inviolate. He ſeems to have acted only from the pureſt and nobleſt principles of juſtice and duty, without pride, without paſſion, without any private views, or ſelfiſh ambition; and to this admirable temper of mind he joined all the addreſs and extenſive abilities, that are peculiarly neceſſary for the head of a party; who muſt connect and keep together great numbers of independent perſons, held by no regular bond of obedience; conciliate their different paſſions and intereſts, endure their abſurdities, ſooth their ill humour, manage their pride, and eſtabliſh an abſolute authority over them, without ſeeming to exerciſe any, but that of perſuaſion." p. 344.

which was ſtill increaſed by a cloſe union with two of the moſt powerful lords in thoſe parts, who were couſin-germans, and acted together in ſupport of Matilda, namely, Brian Fitz-comte and Milo Fitz-walter. The former of theſe poſſeſſed the lordſhips of Abergavenny and Overwent, in what is now the county of Monmouth; the latter enjoyed the beſt part of Brecknockſhire, in right of his wife, with ample poſſeſſions in Herefordſhire and Glouceſterſhire, having alſo the government of the royal caſtle of Glouceſter, and being hereditary conſtable of England. When king Stephen was taken, in 1140, he would ſurrender to none but this earl. And when the earl of Glouceſter was taken priſoner, in 1141, and by William de Ypre ſent to Rocheſter caſtle; tho' an offer was ſoon made to releaſe him for the king, he would not hearken to it without the empreſs's conſent. And at length after ſix months impriſonment, the empreſs agreed that the king and he ſhould be ſet at liberty; and this exchange, one for the other, was deemed equal.

This earl * had with his wife, beſides this whole honour, a great inheritance in Normandy, and all the land of Hamo Dapifer, his wife's uncle. Mr. Tyrrel ſays, that his father, king Henry the Firſt, by his will, made him his executor, and is ſaid to have given him 60,000 lib. at his death. He died at Glouceſter of a fever, on October 31, 1147, and was buried under a great jaſper ſtone in the choir of St. James's priory, in Briſtol, which he had founded upon his own demeſne lands, and endowed with lands, ornaments, poſſeſſions and liberties, and made a cell to Tewkeſbury abbey, whereof he had the abbat and twelve monks to dine with him conſtantly every ſunday. He built the caſtles of Briſtol and Cardiff, and of that at Briſtol, which was made of ſtone, brought from Caen in Normandy, he gave every tenth ſtone towards the erecting of St. Mary's chapel §, in St. James's priory there. He alſo founded, in 1147†, the priory of Morgan, in Glamorganſhire, valued at its diſſolution at 181*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.* or 188*l.* 14*s.* And is ſaid ‡ to have founded a priory at Cardiff, and was a great benefactor to the priories of Nethe and Great Malvern ‖, and to the abbies of Tewkeſbury and Glouceſter. After his death the empreſs's cauſe declined very much, and at length came to little, the chief ſupport being gone. This great ‖ and illuſtrious earl had the town of Briſtol, which Robert Fitz Haman, his father-in-law, held in fealty of king William the Conqueror. At his inſtance the prince, afterwards king Henry the Second, came into England, and ſtaying a conſiderable time here, the earl, his uncle, conducted him into Normandy, on his return. He left iſſue behind him, by the beforementioned Sibil, or Maud, his wife, four ſons, viz. William, his ſucceſſor in that honour; Roger, biſhop of Worceſter; Haman, and Phillip; and one daughter, named Maud.

§§ William, his eldeſt ſon, ſucceeded him in his earldom. In his father's time, he was made governor of the caſtle of Warham; and 12° H. 2. upon levying the aid for marrying the king's daughter, certified his knight's fees in Kent to be twenty-two and an half and a third part, and elſewhere two hundred and ſixty and a half de veteri Feoffamento, and thirteen and a half de novo. Having, with other gentlemen, oppoſed the king in behalf of young Henry, 20° H. 2. he returned to his obedience. He had a great conteſt with one Yvor, or Ivor, ſurnamed Bâch, a little man of ſtature, but exceedingly reſolute and couragious, who kept himſelf chiefly in the woods and mountains, of which this earl endeavoured to bereave him, or at leaſt to ſtraiten his limits. Yvor being irritated thereat, came in the night to Cardiff caſtle, with his men, and tho' the walls were high, and there were no leſs than 120 ſoldiers, beſides a large number of archers therein; he ſcaled them, and took away this earl William, with his counteſs, and their young ſon, and carrying them to the woods, refuſed to releaſe them, until he had full reſtitution of what had been wrongfully taken from him. This earl obtained the lordſhip of Caerleon from Meredith ap Howell, who was lord thereof. He died †† November 23, 1173, or as others 1183, and was buried in the abbey of Keynſham, which he founded, and amply endow'd and adorn'd, next his wife Hawiſe, the daughter of Robert Boſſu, earl of Leiceſter, and a ſon called Robert, who is before mentioned. He alſo had three daughters, viz. Mabel, Amice, and Iſabel, or rather Aviſa. This earl was a great benefactor to the monaſteries of Bradenſtoke, Co. Wilts; Nuneaton, Co. Warwick; Tewkeſbury, Co. Glouceſter; Bermondſey, Co. Surrey; St. Auguſtine's and St. James's, Briſtol; Stanley, in Wilts; Neth, in Glamorganſhire; Lyra, in France; Dureford, in Suſſex; and the cell of Goldcliff, in Monmouthſhire. of the kalends of October, in 1176, he conſtituted for his heir,

John, commonly called Sans-Terre, or Lackland, fourth ſon to king Henry the Second, and of all his children was the chiefeſt favourite. But that king retained this honour in his own hands for many years. And, as 'tis in Annal. Teux. in Mon. Anglic. and ſome other authors, in the laſt year of his reign, gave one of earl William's three daughters in marriage to his ſon John; who * had with his wife this whole earldom. He was alſo earl Moreton in Normandy, and, during the reign of his brother king Richard the Firſt, built the long bridge at Tewkeſbury, and gave the toll of the market there for the repair thereof. But becauſe earl John and his lady were in the third degree of conſanguinity, (for king Henry the Firſt was great grandfather to them both) Baldwin, archbiſhop of Canterbury, put all the earl's lands under an interdict; but from that interdict he appealed to the ſee of Rome. His appeal was confirmed, and he was releaſed by the Pope's legate from it. This John was afterwards king of England, and having no child by his wife, after he had reigned one year, was divorced from her, whom, after he had retained in his hands part of her inheritance, 'tis ſaid §, he ſold, with all her lands and fees, except the caſtle of Briſtol, and chaces thereto belonging, for 20,000 marks, to Geofry de Mandeville †, earl of Eſſex, in the fifteenth year of his reign, and created him earl of Glouceſter, and gave him the county of Glouceſter. This earl Geofry, the ſame year, delivered up the cuſtody of the tower of London, which he before had, 17° Joh. He had ſeiſin of all the liberties belonging to the honour of Glouceſter, of the inheritance of Iſabel his wife, as amply as William earl of Glouceſter, his father, had enjoyed them, having then the title of earl of Glouceſter. But ſoon after, ‡ adhering with the barons, who then were in arms againſt the king, he was excommunicated by the Pope, and was one of the chief of thoſe lords who would have aſſumed the whole ſway of the realm in their own power. And about that time he was killed by a Frenchman at a tournament holden at London, and left no iſſue. Iſabel, his wife, ſurvived him, and afterwards married to Hugh de Burgh, juſtice of England, who was a great benefactor to Dureford priory, Co. Suſſex. Iſabel died without iſſue by either of her huſbands, whereby the honour of Glouceſter came to her nephew,

Almerick ‖, ſon to the earl of Eureux, in Normandy, as being deſcended from Maud, another daughter of earl William, before mentioned. But he enjoy'd this earldom only for a ſhort time, and was buried at Keynſham, to which, and Dureford priory, he was a great benefactor. He died without children, whereby

Gilbert de Clare , ſon of Richard de Clare earl of Hertford, who married Amice, another daughter of earl William, was the firſt earl of Glouceſter and Hertford jointly. The county §§ of Hertford had very antiently earls that were of the family of Clare, who therefore were more commonly called earls of Clare, from Clare, their principal ſeat in the county of Suffolk. But when this family, by right of inheritance as well as by their prince's favour, came to be alſo earls of Glouceſter, they bore the two titles jointly, and were ſummoned to parliament by the names of earl of Glouceſter †† and Hertford. Leland ſays, that he took thoſe two earldoms into his poſſeſſion, in 1216, and was one of the chief of thoſe barons who kept themſelves in arms againſt king John, in the ſeventeenth year of his reign, ſeizing the city of London totally in their own power, and appointing that all things ſhould be directed by twenty-five perſons, whereof he was one. He was excommunicated ‡‡ by Pope Innocent the Third, and adhering to Lewis the French king, was taken priſoner at the battle of Lincoln,

* But there is a great diſpute concerning the perſon who gave this earldom to John. The pipe roll, 1° R. 1. implies that king Richard the Firſt, had it in his hands for ſome time before he gave it his brother. Robert of Glouceſter ſays, that king Richard gave to his brother John this earldom, and many lands in England and beyong ſea. Hoveden, p. 655, ſays, that king Richard the Firſt, came into England, and gave to his brother John the earldom of Moreton, and thoſe of Cornwall, Dorſet, Somerſet, Nottingham, Derbyſhire, and Lancaſter, and the caſtles of Merleberg, and Lutegareſhale, with the foreſt and all their appurtenances; and the honours of Wallingford, Tikehill, and Hain; and the county of Glouceſter, with the daughter of the earl, whom he made immediately to be married to him; and alſo Le Peel, and Boleſovers; but the duke (meaning the king) retained ſome of the caſtles of the ſaid earldom. Probably king Henry the Second verbally gave this earldom, &c. to his ſon John; but the king died before earl John was legally poſſeſſed of it; for Brompton ſays, that the duke (meaning king Richard the Firſt) granted and gave to his brother John all the lands which his father gave him. He granted him alſo the daughter of the earl of Glouceſter, with that honour; and that this John married the ſaid daughter on the 4th of the kalends of September, at Marleberg. It is affirmed alſo by other hiſtorians, that at king Richard's coronation, which was on the 3d of the nones of September, John was then called the earl of Glouceſter and Moreton, and carried one of the royal ſwords before him.

He was in the expedition into Wales, 7° H. 3. and on that account had ſcutage of all his tenants by military ſervice. He was alſo one * of thoſe Engliſh noblemen who firſt invaded Ireland, and ſubdued it to the crown of England. He died at Penros, in Britanny, 14° H. 3. being then in his return from thoſe parts, leaving iſſue, by Iſabel his wife, three ſons and three daughters, Richard, William, and Gilbert; Amice, Agnes, and Iſabel; and was buried in the middle of the choir at Tewkeſbury, to which abbey he was a conſiderable benefactor. At the S. W. end of that town, on an elevated ſituation, at a place called Holmes, he and his ſucceſſors had an eminent caſtle, which is now deſtroyed. Leland ſpeaking of it ſays, In the time of mind, i. e. in memory, ſome ruins of bottoms of walls did then appear, and now it is called Holme Hill. The time of the building of it is uncertain. It is certain that the Clares, earls of Glouceſter, eſpecially the Redde earl, lay much at Holmes. His coat armour is, Topaz, 3 Chevrons Ruby, which may be ſeen in Tewkeſbury church, and in the church windows; but on the covering of the tomb of this earl is the ſame coat, with the addition in the firſt quarter, of a Label of three points Argent, each charged with a Canton Gules.

Richard de Clare, his eldeſt ſon, ſucceeded him; but in regard of his minority, the guardianſhip of him, with his lands and manors, was committed to Hubert de Burgh, then Juſticiary of England. In 1227, he took up arms with many other barons, and joined prince Richard, to compel king Henry the Third to reſtore the charters to the duke of Cornwall, which he had lately annulled. In 1240, ‡ he went to the Holy Land, notwithſtanding the pope's prohibition. with fatal conſequences, had not the king of the Romans uſed his intereſt to end it, and appeaſe the prince his nephew. In 1261, he and the earl of Leiceſter were reconciled, and ſwearing once more to the Oxford proviſions, ſent a threatening meſſage to the king; but in the year 1262, the earl of Leiceſter retired into France, and the earl of Glouceſter died. It is reported of him §, that being in Tewkeſbury, 45° H. 3. and hearing that a Jew who had fallen into a jakes upon a Saturday, refuſed to be pulled out for the reverence he bore to that day, being his ſabbath, he prohibited any help to be afforded him on the Sunday, being the Lord's day, deluding by this means his Jewiſh niceneſs, but forgetting in the mean time Chriſtian charity and godlineſs; for the ſame day the poor wretch died for want of ſuccour. Keeping his Chriſtmas at Tewkeſbury he made a feaſt there, at which ſixty knights were preſent. He was a great benefactor to Thorney abbey †, and died July 14, or according to the Monaſticon, on the 14th of the kalends of July, 1262. His bowels were buried ‡ at Canterbury, his heart in the church at Tunbridge, in Kent, where he had a caſtle, near the walls whereof he founded a priory of canons of the order of St. Auguſtine; and his body on the right hand of his father in Tewkeſbury abbey, the biſhops of Worceſter ‖ and Landaff, twelve abbats, and a great number of barons, knights, and great men attending his funeral. His wife erected over him a very ſtately tomb, ornamented with gold and precious ſtones, the ſword and ſpurs which he wore when alive, and other valuable materials. Upon the tomb was a large image of the earl in ſilver, and the following epitaph:

* Hic pudor Hippolyti, Paridis gena, ſenſus Ulyſſis,
Æneæ pietas, Hectoris ira, jacet.

Which is thus tranſlated by Weaver, in his Funeral Monuments.

Chaſte Hippolite, and Paris faire; Ulyſſes wiſe and ſly;
Æneas kinde, fierce Hector, here jointly entombed lye.

By an inquiſition after his death it appears that he held the town and court of Glouceſter. It is ſeveral times mentioned in Dugdale's Baronage, that this earl was poiſoned at the table of Peter de Savoy, the queen's uncle, in July 1262, and with him Baldwin Redvin, earl of Devon, and ſeveral others who were of the king's houſhold.

Gilbert de Clare, ſon of the laſt earl, born the 2d of September, at Chriſt-Church, in Hants, ſucceeded his father, at the age of about ſeventeen, and was commonly called the Red, from the colour of his hair. Upon the death of his father, he repaired to the king, at Guienne, in France, to be inveſted with his father's inheritance, but the king having no friendſhip for him, was ſolicited ſome time before he would do him that juſtice; and it was not 'till after receiving a conſiderable preſent that he ſent him away ſatisfied in 1262. The next year he had livery of all his caſtles, manors, and lands in England and Ireland; but not long after, aſſociating himſelf with Simon Montfort, earl of Leiceſter, and the reſt of the mutinous barons, he was one of the framers of thoſe unreaſonable ordinances called Proviſiones Oxonij, whereby they did, in effect, wholly diveſt the king of his royal power, which occaſioned him ſoon after to arm. He was with the barons when the king and prince were taken priſoners at the battle of Lewes. The king of Almaine, or of the Romans, in 1264, ſurrendered to him, who then commanded one part of the army for the barons, and was ſent priſoner by him to the priory of Lewes, in Suſſex. The earl obtained §§ ſeveral lands and poſſeſſions for himſelf, and extorted a commiſſion from the king, authorizing himſelf, with the biſhop of Chicheſter, to nominate nine perſons for the adminiſtration of public affairs for ſome time. But after this victory ††, not thinking himſelf ſufficiently rewarded, and the profits and revenues, and half the money for the ranſom of priſoners taken at this battle, which by agreement he was to have had, being abſolutely refuſed him; and the earl of Leiceſter aſpiring to the crown, and the ſons of that earl growing inſolent, he quitted their party, with whom, above all the reſt of the barons, he was highly diſpleaſed; and, ‡‡ with ſeveral others, endeavoured to reſcue the king's perſon. He was very active in procuring liberty for prince Edward, but firſt told him plainly, that he could not promiſe his aſſiſtance unleſs he would oblige himſelf, by oath, to uſe his utmoſt endeavours to reſtore the antient laws, and to baniſh all foreigners from about the king's perſon. Prince Edward promiſed and ſwore to do it in the preſence of ſeveral barons, and then took the command of the troops raiſed by this earl, who afterwards aſſiſted the king in the great battle of Eveſham, 49° H. 3. wherein he commanded a ſecond brigade of the royal army; and, for his ſervice, obtained a full pardon for all his former offences, and ſoon after had the caſtle of Bergavenny for ſome time. Neuſt. p. 65, That an army being gathered by him in Wales, in favour of the Diſinherited, came to London, and John de Civele, with great force of his accomplices meeting him, he ſeized the city, the citizens favouring him. The earl by meſſengers commanded the legate, who had the tower to dwell in, without delay to deliver up the ſame. And that he might haſten to do it, the earl forbad all perſons to ſell any victuals to him.

for his protection, he ſeized the city of London, and formally beſieged the pope's legate, to whom it was committed, and took the tower at that time, with an army which he raiſed in his own lands, and in Wales; but the king forgave him and his accomplices, and by the mediation of the king of the Romans was reconciled to them in a few days, the earl having engaged under the penalty of 10000 marks not to make any diſturbance for the future. The next year, it is ſaid, the king, at the inſtance of the prince, received him into his full favour and grace; whereupon he was ſigned with the ſign of the croſs, at Northampton, for the expedition to the Holy Land. However, notwithſtanding all this, perhaps there was no perfect reconciliation betwixt him and the king 'till 1270, when demanding from prince Edward the expences and coſts which he had ſuſtained at the battle of Eveſham, wherein he had been inſtrumental in the king's reſtoration, with the livery of all his caſtles and lands which his anceſtors had enjoy'd, he obtained them about the feaſt of Pentecoſt next following; and from that time became ſo firm to the royal intereſt, that in 1272, the king, during his ſon's abſence *, appointed him governor of the realm after his death, and he faithfully executed the great truſt repoſed in him. When the king died, the earl of Glouceſter was the principal of thoſe noblemen who met at the New Temple, in London, and proclaimed prince Edward king, who was then in the Holy Land. At the king's funeral, the earls of Glouceſter and Warren, the clergy, and the people, went up to the altar, at Weſtminſter, and there ſwore fealty to the prince, as their king, by the name of Edward the Firſt. Moreover, upon his arrival in England, the earl of Glouceſter entertained him, with his whole retinue, moſt honourably for many days, in his caſtle at Tunbridge, in Kent. About the 10th of Edward the Firſt §, he had ſeveral encounters with the Welch, and near Lantilawir, or Lantilovawr, obtained a compleat victory over them; but five knights were killed on the earl's ſide, one of which was William de Valenſis, the younger, kinſman to the king. In 1285 †, ſoon after the birth of prince Edward, (afterwards king Edward the Second) the king went to Snowdon, by Weſt Wales, and came to Glamorgan, which belonged to this earl, and was received by him with the greateſt honour, at his own expence. About 13° E. 3. he was divorced from Alice de March, his wife, daughter of Guy earl of Angouleſme, to whom, being very young, he was married in his father's life time, and to whom king Henry the Third, whoſe niece ‖ ſhe was, gave 500 marks for her portion. But tho' the divorce was at her ſuit, he ſettled ſeveral poſſeſſions ‡ upon her. He gave up all his inheritance, 17° E. 1.  to the king and Joan of Acres, or Acon, (ſo called from a place of that name in the Holy Land, where ſhe was born) the king's ſecond daughter, to whom he was preſently afterwards married. On the morrow preceding the kalends of May, the ſame year, the king reſtored to him all thoſe lands again, and they were then entailed. The next year, there were great diſputes between him and the earl of Hereford, concerning ſeveral of their poſſeſſions in Wales, and both earls were committed to priſon, each paying to the king a fine of 1000 marks, for an attonement. About 19° E. 1. there having been a ditch or trench caſt up by the appointment of this earl and his lady, over the creſt of Malvern hills, †† Godfrey Giffard, then biſhop of Worceſter, objected to it, as encroaching upon his territories. But by the mediation of Robert Burnel, biſhop of Bath and Wells, and others, this controverſy was ended, and the following agreement was made between them, That the earl and his counteſs ſhould pay yearly to the biſhop and his ſucceſſors, a brace of bucks and a brace of does, out of their chace at Malvern, at his palace at Kemſey; and in the vacancy of the ſee, the ſame to be paid to the prior and convent of Worceſter, demanding them by their attorney at the caſtle of Henley. He was a conſiderable benefactor §§ to Keynſham abbey, and Mr. Speed ſays he built a nunnery at Markyate, now Market-ſtreet, in Bedfordſhire, to the honour of St. Giles, 6° E. 1. Dying at his caſtle at Monmouth, on the 7th of the ides of December, 1295, he was buried in the church of Tewkeſbury next his father and grandfather, by Godefred biſhop of Worceſter, under a plain ſtone, with an inſcription on braſs round the edges, now defaced. He left iſſue by Joan of Acres, his wife, Gilbert his ſon and heir, and three daughters, Margaret, Iſabel, and Elizabeth.

hood. The earl, her huſband, being dead, ſhe in frank marriage was infeoffed of great part of his lands. This Ralph held them for ſome time; but the king thinking Joan had much debaſed herſelf by this match, was very much incenſed at it, and cauſed all her lands and caſtles to be ſeized, and her huſband to be cloſely impriſoned. But by the mediation of Anthony Beke, biſhop of Durham, he was reſtored, and afterwards beloved of the king, who, in the twenty-fifth year of his reign ‖, gave him livery of all the lands belonging to this great earldom, to hold by the ſervice of fifty knights fees, in the war of Flanders, and was ſummoned to parliament from the 28th to the 35th of E. 1. incluſive, by the title of earl of Glouceſter and Hertford; but after the death of his wife, which was 1° E. 2. he was never more ſummoned by theſe titles, but had ſubſequent ſummons, as a baron only, 'till the eighteenth year of that reign.

Gilbert de Clare, ſon of the laſt earl Gilbert and Joan of Acres, was the next who poſſeſſed this earldom, being, at his father's death, but about five years old. He, tho' in minority and in ward to the king, had his lands reſtored * him; and petitioning § to have all his ſocage rents and franchiſes in the town of Glouceſter, and elſewhere, when he was about eighteen years of age they were delivered to him. Notwithſtanding Ralph de Monthermer had been ſummoned to parliament, and acknowledged as earl of Glouceſter, yet when this Gilbert came of age, he claimed and obtained that title, the ſummons 2° E. 2. being directed to the knight, nephew Gilbert de Clare, earl of Glouceſter and Hertford. In 1307, Robert Bruce †, who was crowned king of Scotland, marched againſt the earl of Glouceſter, who was at the head of another body for king Edward the Firſt, and obliged him to retreat to the caſtle of Aire, which Robert beſieged, tho' without ſucceſs. In 1311, the great men of the nation ‡ being aſſembled at Bedford, they made the earl of Glouceſter the keeper of England; and 4°E. 2. he was ‖‖ conſtituted guardian of the whole realm, during the king's abode in the wars with Scotland. In the diſpute between the king and the peers concerning ſome of their antient liberties and privileges, the earl of Glouceſter adhered to neither ſide, and therefore was appointed and acted as a mediator between them. He was alſo very inſtrumental in qualifying the great diſpleaſure which the king bore to divers of the nobles on the death of Piers de Gaveſton, and earneſtly endeavouring to bring about a reconciliation between them, it was chiefly effected by his mediation, tho' ſeveral perſons of great dignity had before attempted it in vain. The king going to France in 1313, appointed him regent in his abſence. He was afterwards one of the ambaſſadors ſent into France, and was a great ſupporter of the Engliſh ſtate, and therefore much valued and eſteemed by the nobility. Ruſhing precipitately upon the Scotch army, at the battle of Bannockſburne, where he was captain of the king's vanguard, he was killed June 24, 1314, in the twenty third year of his age, being much lamented, becauſe, ſays Leland, he was a good man. The king of the Scots generouſly, and without any price or ranſom, ſent his body to king Edward, at Berwick , which was buried on the left hand of his father, near his grandfather and great-grandfather, at Tewkeſbury, the place of his nativity, in the virgin Mary's chapel, which was near an hundred feet long, then ſtanding at the eaſt end behind the altar, but now demoliſhed, and the ſcite an orchard. It appears §§ that this earl was a promiſing young man, and beloved by the whole kingdom. After two years expectance of another ſon beſide John, (who died in his father's life time, and was buried in the Lady's chapel, at Tewkeſbury) to be born of Maud, his wife, daughter of John de Burgo, ſon to Richard earl of Ulſter, ſeveral manors and poſſeſſions were aſſigned to her. Thus the moſt noble earldom of Glouceſter, which was formerly called the ſecond pillar of the kingdom of England, was divided into three baronies ††, and parted between this earl's three ſiſters, of whom Eleanor, the eldeſt, was married to lord Hugh Deſpencer; the ſecond, named Margaret, to Hugh de Audley, and before that, to Peter, or Piers de Gaveſton, ſometime earl of Cornwall, king Edward the Second's great favourite, much to the earl's diſpleaſure, and the king's deſire; and the third, named Elizabeth, to lord Roger de Damori, or Tamori, and before that to John de Burgo, ſon and heir of the earl of Ulſter, in Ireland. The lady Maud died 1315, and was buried on the left hand of her huſband.

Hugh Deſpencer, or Spencer ‡‡, the younger ſon of the earl of Wincheſter, having married Eleanor before mentioned, doing his homage, had livery of her purparty of the lordſhips and lands which deſcended to her by the death of her brother; and obtained a confirmation of all thoſe royalties within the territories and lordſhips of Glamorgan and Morganog, as Gilbert de Clare, earl of Glou-ceſter and Hertford, lately enjoy'd. But not content with the third part of this earldom ‖, tho' then worth 5000 marks, he endeavoured to wreſt the other two from his wife's ſiſters, whoſe property they were. He was lord Chamberlain * and chief favourite to king Edward the Second, after Gaveſton. And, together with his father, being accuſed § of ſeducing the king, and oppreſſing the ſtate, was, by the queen's particular orders, drawn on a hurdle thro' all the ſtreets of Hereford, on St. Andrew's eve, in 1326, hanged on a gallows fifty feet high, beheaded and quartered, and his four quarters were ſent to ſeveral places in the kingdom, but his head was fixed upon London bridge. At his death he was poſſeſſed † of no leſs than fifty nine lordſhips, in ſundry counties, 28000 ſheep, 1000 oxen and ſteers, 1200 kine with their calves, 40 mares with their colts of two years, 160 draught horſes, 2000 hogs, 40 tuns of wine, 600 bacons, 8 carcaſes of Martinmas beef, 600 muttons in his larder, 10 tuns of cyder, armour, plate, jewels, and ready money better than 10000 pounds, 36 ſacks of wool, and a library of books. He left iſſue by his wife, three ſons, Hugh, Edward and Gilbert. The Deſpencers arms are, Quarterly, argent and gules, a fret or, over all a bendlet ſable, to be ſeen in the chancel windows at Tewkeſbury, and many places about the church.

Hugh de Audley, or Aldithley, the ſecond huſband of Margaret de Clare, as before obſerved, was ‡ by the favour of king Edward the Third, in the eleventh year of his reign, created earl in parliament, being in the wars againſt the Scots. Neglecting to ſerve king Edward the Second, and refuſing to come to ‖‖ Glouceſter, on the third day of April, in the fourteenth year of that reign, in purſuance of the ſummons requiring him ſo to do, his caſtle at Thornbury, in this county, and his other lands, were ſeized by the king's order; but for ſome errors in the proſecution againſt him, they were reſtored in the firſt year of the next reign. In the 13th of E. 3. he was, amongſt others, aſſigned to array all the able men of Eſſex, for the defence of the ſea coaſts there, againſt an invaſion then apprehended. The ſame year being with the king in France, and conſtituted one of the marſhals of the Engliſh army, he was in that part of it which was drawn up for battle at Vironfoſſe, and led by king Edward himſelf. The next year, being ſent into Flanders upon the king's ſervice, he was in the memorable ſea-fight before Sluyce, between the Engliſh and French. Being ambaſſador beyond ſea, 15° E. 3. he had 230 marks allowed him for his expences in that journey. The next year he was one of thoſe gentlemen who then went into Brittany upon the king's ſervice, his troops conſiſting of 100 men at arms, himſelf accounted for one, one banneret, twenty knights, ſeventy-eight eſquires, and alſo 100 archers on horſeback. And in the next year he was ſent with the earl of Lancaſter and divers other great lords into Scotland, to raiſe the ſiege of Loughmaban-Caſtle. He died 21° E. 3. leaving iſſue only one daughter, called Margaret, the wife of Ralph lord Stafford, and thus the honour of Glouceſter came to the lord Stafford's heirs ‡‡. 'Tis remarkable, that the firſt mention made in a charter of creation of an earl, of ſome revenue given to him out of the profits of the county, for the better ſupport of his dignity, is that expreſſly mentioned in the creation charter of this earl; by which he had yearly viginti libratas reditûs de exitibus Com. Gloceſtr, it being in lieu of the tertium denarium de placitis Comitatûs. Dr. Holland, in his Inſertions in the text of Mr. Camden, as publiſh'd in the laſt edition of Camden's Britannia, ſays, That this earl built a houſe at Thornbury, which the duke of Buckingham took down when he built the caſtle there. This earl Hugh was buried at Tewkeſbury, on the north ſide of the high altar. He bore Gules, a fret or, and a bordure argent, to be ſeen about the church where he was buried.

Thomas of Woodſtock, ſo called by reaſon of his birth there, the ſixth, or according to ſome the ſeventh, and youngeſt ſon of king Edward the Third, was conſtituted lieutenant by his father in the twenty-ninth year of his reign, during his abſence in France, upon the occaſion of an intended expedition into that kingdom. Being earl of Buckingham, he was advanced in the parliament by his nephew king Richard the Second, 9° regni, to the dignity of  duke of Glouceſter, and with his title had a grant of 1000*l.* a year, to be paid out of the cuſtoms of ſeveral ports. Having married Eleanor, the daughter and coheireſs of Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford, Eſſex and Northampton, he became poſſeſſed of thoſe earldoms. And 'tis generally ſaid, that his father-in-law being conſtable of England, he alſo ſucceeded him in that title. But Dugdale, in his Baronage, affirms, that in the reign of king Edward the Third, he was made conſtable of England, and others

ſay, that he was ſo to continue during the king's pleaſure. In all his employments, which were very great, he merited much. In king Richard the Second's reign, he was made knight of the Garter. Knighton ſays, that in 1394, he aſſembled a parliament at Weſtminſter, in the king's name. 18° R. 2. being by indenture retained to ſerve the king in his wars of France, with 100 men at arms, whereof three to be bannerets, and eight knights, he obtained a grant to himſelf and heirs male of his body, of the fee farm rent of the town of Glouceſter, and all fines, forfeitures, and amerciaments thereto belonging. Afterwards he was by the parliament, † and alſo by commiſſion from the king, appointed one of the fourteen perſons to inſpect the affairs of the realm, from the time of his father's death. Thomas Arundel, archbiſhop of Canterbury, being made lord chancellor, is ſaid to have granted to this duke the government of the realm, by virtue of which he took upon him regal power. ‡ He was alſo aſſigned with other commiſſioners to depoſe the king. And being of a fierce ‖, head-ſtrong, ambitious and unquiet ſpirit, was * privately ſmothered between two feather beds, at Calais, by the privity and procurement of the king, who mortally hated him, upon Saturday next after the feaſt of St. Bartholomew, 1397. 'Tis ſaid that he made a confeſſion under his own hand, that he had arrogated too much. But perhaps this was only the ſchedule wrote by himſelf, in anſwer to his accuſation §; which ſchedule †† was ſeen, and diſapproved of by the king, who was determined to deſtroy him, and commanded the earl of Nottingham to do it, on pain of death. In the articles againſt the king for his depoſition, 'twas objected to him, That notwithſtanding he had pardoned this earl in full parliament, and by ſolemn oath, made of his own accord, in the preſence of the dukes of Lancaſter and York, and many other lords, at the duke of York's chapel, at Langley, where duke Thomas was alſo preſent; yet when he had him afterwards in his power, he cauſed him to be arreſted and impriſoned, and horribly and cruelly to be murdered; damnably incurring the guilt of perjury. This duke at his manor of Plecy ‡‡, or Pleſhy, in Eſſex, 17° R. 2. founded a college, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, for a maſter and eight ſecular prieſts, two clerks, and two choiriſters, which was valued at its diſſolution at 139*l.* 3*s.* 10*d.* clear, and was buried at the church there, ||| or in the chapel at Weſtminſter abbey . After his death, the king gave away a great part of his lands to the dukes and earls which he made. Stowe, p. 317, ſays, That he was condemned to die after he was dead; by which I ſuppoſe he means no more than what Dugdale and Camden have otherwiſe expreſſed, That he was attainted of high treaſon by act of parliament, after he was dead. Providence ſeems to have revenged this cruel murder, on the king and the duke of Aumerle; for it was not much more than two years after, that the king was depoſed from his government, and murdered in Pomfret caſtle. The duke of Aumerle, or earl of Rutland, did not die a natural death, but was afterwards ſlain in battle. Some of the perſons concerned in this fact were duly executed, and as for the reſt, ſays Dugdale, I preſume they never returned into England, but if they did, they ſuffered accordingly §§. Thomas Mowbray then earl of Nottingham, and earl marſhal of England, but afterwards duke of Norfolk, had a principal hand in the execrable murder of the duke, and was himſelf baniſhed for life, by the very king that had cauſed the duke to be murdered, on that day twelvemonth afterwards; which may ſerve as an example among others to deter all perſons from committing murder, however they may fancy themſelves covered and protected. The parliament prevailed with king Henry the Fourth to grant a general pardon in the firſt year of his reign, in which, however, the murderers of the duke of Glouceſter were excepted.

Thomas lord Deſpencer, commonly called Thomas Deſpencer of Glamorgan and Morganog, great grandſon to Hugh Deſpencer the younger, was created earl about the 4th of October, 21° R. 2. He was one of the perſecutors of duke Thomas of Woodſtock, and of the chief of thoſe peers who formally acted at the depoſition of king R. 2. Being attainted ||||| by act of parliament 1° H. 4. he was firſt ignominiouſly degraded from his title, and afterwards adjudged as a traytor, and beheaded at Briſtol. Iſabel married Richard Beauchamp lord Bergavenny, and earl of Worceſter, and from her, the preſent lord Deſpencer is lineally deſcended. Humphry of Lancaſter, the fourth and youngeſt ſon of king Henry the Fourth, was created † duke of Glouceſter in the parliament held at Leiceſter by the king his brother, in the firſt year of his reign. And by that title, as alſo by the title of earl of Pembroke, had ſummons to the parliament held at Weſtminſter the following year. He behaved very valiantly in ſeveral encounters and battles, and was therefore, in recompence of his paſt ſervices, rewarded with large poſſeſſions. He uſed to ſtile ‡ himſelf ſon, brother, and uncle of kings, duke of Glouceſter, earl of Pembroke, and lord high chamberlain of England. He occurs as lieutenant of the kingdom, 5° and 10° H. 5, and was protector ‖ of his nephew king Henry the Sixth, in his minority, governing the kingdom with great prudence for twenty five years. But the king his nephew being very weak, and eaſy to be guided as thoſe about his perſon would have him, Margaret, queen to king Henry the Sixth, with his uncle the cardinal, who was alſo biſhop of Wincheſter, and ſeveral others, contrived and effected the duke's ruin. In February, 1447, he was ſummoned to parliament at St. Edmondſbury in Suffolk, and coming thither, was arreſted the firſt or ſecond day of the ſeſſions, by viſcount Beaumont, then high conſtable of England, accompanied by the duke of Buckingham and ſome others, and put into cloſe confinement, all his ſervants being taken from him, and thirty two of the chief of them ſent to divers priſons. In the night following he was found dead * in his bed, without any ſigns of violence on his body, which was ſoon after ſhewn to the lords and commons, as tho' he had died with ſome ſudden diſeaſe; but people were convinced that he ſuffered by violent hands.

For his eminent virtues, knowledge and literature, he was beloved by the commons, and greatly reſpected by all men, truely deſerving the name by which he was called, the great duke of Glouceſter. As he was a true friend and patron to his country, ſo he alſo was to learned men and learning §, whereof he himſelf had a great ſhare. Bale ſays of him, that he was Nobilitatis omnis atque eruditionis, Phœnix ſane unicus. And Camden in his Britannia, ſpeaking of St. Edmond's-bury, ſays, "If England ever ſuffered by the loſs of any man, it was in this place; for that true father of his country, Humphry duke of Glouceſter, (a ſtrict patron of juſtice, and one who had improved his own excellent natural endowments, by a courſe of ſevere ſtudies) after he had governed the kingdom under king Henry the Sixth, for twenty five years together, with ſo great applauſe and commendation, that neither the good could find reaſon for complaints, nor the bad for calumnies, was cut off in this place by the malice of Margaret of Lorain ‡‡, who obſerving her huſband king Henry the Sixth to be of a low and narrow ſpirit, ſet about this villainous contrivance, to get the management of the government into her own hands. But in the iſſue, it was the greateſt misfortune that could have befallen either her or the kingdom, for Normandy and Aquitain were preſently loſt upon it, and a moſt lamentable civil war raiſed in England." In the parliament at Weſtminſter, 33° H. 6. it was openly declared, that this duke was a true ſubject to the king. Richard Plantagenet, younger brother to king Edward the Fourth, was, ſhortly after the coronation of the king, advanced to the title of duke * of Glouceſter, and for the better ſupport of his dignity, he obtained a grant of the fee farm rent of that town, and alſo ſeveral other great and rich offices, lordſhips, honours, towns, caſtles, and manors in the counties of Dorſet, York, Oxford, Cambridge, Cornwal, Suffolk, Eſſex, Middleſex, Bedford, Northampton, Rutland, Kent, Somerſet, Wilts, Glouceſter, and other parts of England and Wales. He was made conſtable of England, and juſtice of North Wales, 9° E. 4. and in the eleventh year of that reign was appointed lord chamberlain for life. But not being ſatisfied with theſe and other poſſeſſions which he then had, endeavoured to obtain the crown immediately after his brother's death; for notwithſtanding his oath and recognition of prince Edward, ſeveral perſons have judged, that before the death of his brother, he had a deſign of mounting the throne to the prejudice of his nephews. King Edward the Fourth died April the 9th, 1483, and left his brother, the duke of Glouceſter, protector and guardian over the young king and kingdom: And on the 19th of June, in a proclamation then made at York, Richard was ſtiled brother and uncle of kings, duke of Glouceſter, defender, protector, great chamberlain, and admiral of England. But on the 22d, the duke himſelf was proclaimed king of England, and crowned on the 6th of July following. After his coronation he went his progreſs; and before he proceeded to York, made ſome ſtay at the city of Glouceſter, becauſe he would not be too far from London, whilſt his orders concerning his nephews were executed. His intimate friend the duke of Buckingham attended him thither, and during the king's ſtay, ſent an expreſs order to the governor of the tower to murder the two nephews. 'Tis probable that 'twas about this time that the community of Glouceſter offered the king money, which he refuſed; and it ſeems to be about the month of Auguſt, in 1483, that king Edward the Fifth and the duke of York were barbarouſly murdered by the inhuman uncle's command. This mercileſs fact was committed by ſmothering them in bed about midnight. But in 1485, he was himſelf miſerably ſlain by Henry earl of Richmond, afterwards king Henry the Seventh, in a pitch'd battle at Boſworth field, in Leiceſterſhire; finding, by ſad experience, ſays Camden, That uſurped power is never laſting. The ſame, however, cannot be ſaid of Richard as was of Galba, That he had been thought fit for empire, had he not reigned; for Galba, after he had ſettled in the empire, deceived all men's expectations; but Richard had been moſt worthy of a kingdom, had he not aſpired to it by wicked ways; ſo that in the opinion of the wiſe, he is to be reckoned in the number of bad men, but of good princes. Britannia, col. 290. When he was duke, he obtained two licences § from the king, in the 17th year of his reign, the one to found a college at Middleham in Yorkſhire, for one dean, ſix chaplains, four clerks, ſix choriſters, and a clergyman to officiate in the pariſh church; but he never finiſhed it. The other was, to found another college at Bernard's Caſtle in the county of Durham, for a dean, twelve ſecular prieſts, ten clerks, and ten choriſters, in the chapel there; but there is nothing more ſaid of it. After the battle, Richard was carried in a very ignominious manner to Leiceſter, and buried in St. Mary's chapel, belonging to the Grey Friars there.

Henry of Oatlands, the youngeſt ſon of king Charles the Firſt, was born on the 8th of July, 1640, and declared ‡ duke of Glouceſter by his royal father, and ſo always after entitled; but was not created 'till May 13, 1659, by his brother king Charles the Second, whom he accompanied into England at his reſtoration, and who alſo made him earl of Cambridge. Lord Clarendon and others, in the hiſtories of the great rebellion, have given us an account of the interview between his father and him, the day before the king was beheaded. The king then taking the duke of Glouceſter upon his knee, ſaid, Sweetheart, now they will cut off thy father's head; at which words, the child looked very wiſhfully upon him; Mark, child, what I ſay; they will cut off my head, and perhaps make thee a king; but mark what I ſay, you muſt not be a king, ſo long as your brothers Charles and James are alive; for they will cut off your brothers heads as ſoon as they can catch them, and cut thy head off too at laſt; and therefore I charge you not to be made a king by them. At which the child ſighing, ſaid, I will be torn in pieces firſt; which falling unexpectedly from a child ſo young, made the king rejoice exceedingly. After the king was beheaded, the duke of Glouceſter was ſent with two ſervants to Dunkirk, with a promiſe, it is ſaid, of a ſmall exhibition ‖ for his maintenance, provided he would not come near his brother nor any of his relations. But as ſoon as he arrived on the other ſide of the water, he was received according to his birth and quality, and was attended to the princeſs of Orange at Breda, to the great joy of her and all the royal family. After he had been ſome time at Breda, he was conducted to Paris by the earl of Lauderdale, to the king his brother, and to his mother the queen, and to his other relations, to whom he was as welcome as one riſen from the dead; and was very civilly treated by the king and queen-mother of France. In 1653, when the form of government was to be ſettled, it is ſaid by Mr. Whitlock, that the ſoldiers were then for a republic, the lawyers for a mixt monarchy, and many for this duke to be made king. He died of the ſmall pox, September 30, 1660, in the twentieth year of his age, being one of the king's privy council, and a knight of the garter, much lamented by his royal relations and all that knew him, as he is repreſented to have been wiſe and accompliſhed above his years, and a prince of great expectation. As to his religion, he was an invincible aſſerter of the proteſtant faith againſt all the errors of popery; to preſerve him from the temptations of which, his ſiſter had for ſome years parted with one half of her annual income that was left to her own diſpoſal. His body was buried in the royal chapel of king Henry the Seventh, at Weſtminſter, under the tomb of Mary queen of Scotland, his great grandmother, and on his coffin, of black velvet, was this inſcription, on a ſilver plate.

William Henry, only ſon of George prince of Denmark and the princeſs Ann his wife, afterwards queen of England, was born at Hampton Court, July 24, 1689, and on the 27th following was chriſtened by Henry biſhop of London; king William the Third, and the king of Denmark, by his proxy the earl of Dorſet, being godfathers; and the marchioneſs of Halifax, godmother. As ſoon as he was chriſtened, he was immediately declared * duke of Glouceſter by his uncle king William the Third, who was extremely fond of him. And, at a chapter of the garter, held at Kenſington January 6, 1695, was elected member thereof, having been firſt knighted by the king with a ſword of ſtate, and was inſtalled on the 24th of July following. He was a prince of a tender conſtitution, but of incomparable parts, promiſing whatever a nation could wiſh or deſire. He died in the twelfth year of his age, in the year 1700, being then the only remaining iſſue of the prince and princeſs above mentioned. His death in a great meaſure was occaſioned by over heating himſelf in the obſervation of his birth-day, (being Wedneſday) July 24th, which cauſed a fever, and ſoon after a dilirium, which laſted with his life.

Frederick Lewis, father to his preſent majeſty king George the Third, was created duke of Glouceſter by his royal grandfather, January the 10th, 1718, N. S.

His royal highneſs William-Henry, third ſon of his late royal highneſs Frederick prince of Wales, was born November 25, 1743, N. S. and on the 17th of November, 1764, his preſent majeſty was pleaſed to grant to him and to his heirs male, the dignities of a duke of the kingdom of Great Britain, and of an earl of the kingdom of Ireland, by the names, ſtiles, and titles of duke of Glouceſter and Edinburgh in Great Britain, and Earl of Connaught, in Ireland.

Of COUNCILS, SYNODS, ROYAL and GRAND ASSEMBLIES, and PARLIAMENTS, at GLOUCESTER.

WHEN Aurelius Ambroſius, king of the Britons, in 489, had oppoſed himſelf in a great battle againſt Hengiſt, at Maſebell, beyond Humber in Yorkſhire; the king and his nobility aſſembled together at Glouceſter †, to conſult what was to be done with their priſoner. Among others of the nobility, there were at that time of Glouceſter, three noble and renowned perſonages preſent; Edel, the earl; Eldad, the biſhop; and Eldo, the mayor or chief governor; and when the greateſt part of the company ſeemed to favour the life of Hengiſt, Eldad the biſhop ſpoke with ſuch eloquence and power, that he moved all the company to be of his opinion; and by the common conſent of all preſent, the priſoner was delivered to Eldo § the mayor, who leading him out of the city, put him to death.

In 804, Ethelrick, ſon of king Ethelmund, at the requeſt of a ſynod held here, to which he was invited, was himſelf a great benefactor to the church of St. Peter.

In 896, here was a great meeting of the Mercnamen, when Werefrid, biſhop of Worceſter, recovered ſeveral laws.

It appears from the Saxon Chronicle, that Lanfrank, archbiſhop of Canterbury, held two of his councils or ſynods here, and by his conſent, and at the king's command, at one of them, Thomas archbiſhop of York conſecrated William de S. Carilefo to the biſhoprick of Durham, in the preſence of the king; archbiſhop Lanfrank, and Wolſtan, Oſbern, Giſo, and Rotbertus, at that time biſhops, aſſiſted.

King Edgar, upon innocents-day 964, * in this royal city, as then expreſſly called, gave to the monks of Worceſter certain lands and liberties. This grant was confirmed by the king with the conſent of his princeſſes and archbiſhops; and ſigned by the king, the queen, the two archbiſhops, ſix biſhops, ſix abbats, ſix dukes, and twelve miniſters.

In 1051, earl Euſtace, king Edward the Confeſſor's brother-in-law, fled for ſhelter to Glouceſter, which is called the court, where the king had abode ſome conſiderable time. Leofwine, or Leofric, earl of Mercia, and earl Styward of Northumberland, came to him hither with great forces, where he continued a good while §. And a little after the feaſt of St. Mary, in September, the king appointed a general aſſembly for all the nobility to meet here, which was very full. The ſame king in 1063, kept his court here, and ſent hence a body of horſe againſt Griffin prince of South-Wales; and he is frequently mentioned as being at this place.

King William the Conqueror, every year when his affairs would permit him, kept his chriſtmas here; and to render this aſſembly the more grand, magnificent and ſumptuous, and that the ambaſſadors of foreign nations might admire the appearance of the company; he, by his royal edicts, was attended by all the archbiſhops, biſhops, abbats, earls, thanes, and knights. He wore his crown, and made a grand and delicate fare. The great men appeared in golden, or very ſplendid robes, which were called feſtiva indumenta, and the town found much of his entertainment and clothing, as it did for his ſucceſſors, when at this place. He was at no time more courteous, gentle and kind than at ſuch aſſemblies, ſo that thoſe who came might ſee that his bounty equalled his riches.

In 1076, Lanfrank held his council here, when Wulketul, abbat of Croyland was depoſed.

In 1085, at chriſtmas, the king with his nobles held his court here for five days; and afterwards, the archbiſhop and clergy held a ſynod for three days, and the king's three chaplains, Maurice of Lundene, [London] William of Northfolc, [Norwich] and Redbeard of Ceaſterſcire, [now Litchfield and Coventry] were then made biſhops. Sax. Chron. Archbiſhop Wake's State of the Church, &c. p. 160.

King William Rufus uſually kept his chriſtmas here, which Brompton calls the cuſtom of his father, and held it with great pomp. (p. 979.) Falling dangerouſly ſick at Alveſtan, in this county, which Dunelm calls the royal vill, in 1093, he removed in great haſte to this town, where he continued in a very weak condition during lent; and here he granted the archbiſhoprick of Canterbury to Anſelm, and the biſhoprick of Lincoln to Robert Bloet, his chancellor, and lands to ſeveral monaſteries, and reſtored many rights and revenues which he had before detained. Notwithſtanding articles of peace had been concluded between this king and Malcolm king of Scotland, ſome things ſtill remained to be ſettled between them, wherefore Malcolm came to the Engliſh court in this city, and was received in a very imperious manner by Rufus. At his court held here the next year, great complaints and menaces were ſent to the king by his brother Robert's ambaſſadors, concerning the king's miſbehavour towards him. At another of his great councils held here at chriſtmas, he granted ſome poſſeſſions to the archbiſhop of York, the two archbiſhops, twelve biſhops, eight abbats, eight lords, and others being preſent.

King Henry the Firſt held his court here at candlemas 1123, and ſent his letters all over England, commanding all his biſhops, abbats and thanes to come to it for the chooſing of an archbiſhop of Canterbury: William Corbeil was then nominated, and the king confirmed the election.

In 1175, on the feaſt of St. Peter and Paul, the king ſummoned hither another great council of his earls and barons, and Reſe, and other princes of Wales; when the king iſſued orders to all his ſubjects, that if any of the Welch made inſurrections in their countries, they ſhould unanimouſly fall upon them; and the earl of Glouceſter and the nobility were ſworn to the obſervance thereof.

In 1190, William Longchamp, the pope's legate, protector of the kingdom in king Richard the Second's abſence, and biſhop of Ely, held a ſynod here.

On the eve of St. Simon and Jude 1216, there came to Glouceſter, which was then thought the ſafeſt place in the realm, in the preſence of Walo the pope's legate, the biſhops of Wincheſter, Bath, Litchfield, and Worceſter, the earls of Cheſter, Pembroke, Ferrars, William the marſhal, John his brother, Philip of Albani, with abbats, priors, and a great company. On the morrow, the legate, with the biſhops, earls, and lords before mentioned, led prince Henry to the abbey-church with ſolemn proceſſion, where he publickly ſwore before the great altar, that he would pay due honour and reverence to God and his holy church all his life; adminiſter juſtice, obſerve good laws and cuſtoms, and aboliſh all evil ones; and that he would pay one thouſand marks yearly to the pope for his kingdoms, according to his father's grant. Theſe things being done, the biſhops of Wincheſter and Bath anointed and ſolemnly crowned him with the uſual ceremonies; after which, the biſhops, earls and lords led him, clad in royal veſtments, to the table, where all things being ſet in order, they dined in joyful exultation. On the morrow, the king took the homage and fealty of all preſent; and continued in this town a conſiderable time afterwards.

In 1233 or 1234, on Saturday the morrow after St. Catharine's day, being November 26, there was a provincial council holden here before the archbiſhops and biſhops; and the king ſent a writ dated at Hereford, Nov. 23, prohibiting them to treat of any thing prejudicial to his crown, ſtate and dignity.

In 1233, 17° H. 3. the king kept the feaſt of whitſuntide here, and girt with the ſword of knighthood Thomas earl of Warwick, Roger Bigod, earl of Norfolk, and Hugh de Vere, earl of Oxford; and alſo iſſued out his writs to all who held any lands of him by knight-ſervice, commanding them to repair to him at this town, on the morrow after all-ſaints day, then next enſuing.

In 1234, on the Sunday after aſcenſion-day, a colloquium was held at this place, when the diſinherited barons were reſtored to the king's favour. [Hody.] The ſame year the king held his court here at chriſtmas. M. Weſtm.

In 1241 the court was here, when David ap Llewelyn prince of North-Wales came and did the king homage for the principality of Wales. Dr. Fuller has obſerved that this place was more beloved by king Henry than London itſelf, becauſe it was ſtrong and loyal, and where he was crowned, and did afterwards often reſide.

In 1278 or 1279 king Edward the Firſt, in the octaves of St. John Baptiſt, held a parliament in the long work-houſe of the abbey, on which ſpot is built the houſe now extending from that belonging to the deanery, on the eaſt, to the gate leading to the miller's green on the weſt; and ſummoned to it all perſons, to ſhew by what authority and titles they held their lands or claimed their privileges, according to the ſtatute of Quo Warranto; and to prevent the great miſchiefs, damages and diſheriſons which the people had before ſuffered thro' the default of the laws, ſeveral laws were then enacted, which ever ſince have gone by the name of the ſtatutes of Glouceſter.

In 1301 there was another ſtatute of Quo Warranto dated from this place.

Wedneſday, October the 20th, 1378, Richard the Second held a parliament here, in which were great bickerings between the temporal lords and the biſhops, each complaining of the others incroachments. It continued twenty eight days, and much buſineſs was diſpatched therein. On the day of the riſing of this parliament, November 16, Simon de Sudbury, archbiſhop of Canterbury, held a provincial council in a chamber within the abbey, and made a decree concerning the ſtipends of prieſts.

On October 20, 1407, king Henry the Fourth held a parliament here, wherein ſeveral laws were made: it continued forty four or fifty four days, and Mr. Prynne affirms, that the members of it huſbanded well their time for the king and kingdom's advantage.

In 1420, February 15, king Henry the Fifth held a parliament here, which was adjourned to Weſtminſter in about a fortnight's time.

R. Cole affirms in his roll, now in the cuſtody of the city, "That kyng Harry iiij held a p'liament at Glouc. the ix yere of his regne, begynnyng the ſayde p'leament at alhalontyd and ſo contynued til midwynt' next ſuyng.

Of BATTLES and SIEGES.

ONE of king Edgar's battles againſt the Danes was fought here. After the king's death, Ethelwulph † his ſon ſucceeding in 836, the Danes returning to the kingdom with greater rage and cruelty than they had in the former reign, poſſeſſed themſelves of this place, and pitching their tents here, lorded it over this part of the country, and made themſelves maſters not only of the foreſt of Dean, but likewiſe of great part of Herefordſhire.

In 978 Ethelred was crowned king, and not long after the beginning of his reign, the Danes again entered the kingdom, and began afreſh their intermixt cruelties, burning and deſtroying moſt of the eminent cities and places in the kingdom. Amongſt the reſt, this city was the third time ravaged by them, and almoſt conſumed by fire, for they had no reſpect to places or perſons, ſacred or civil; but like a tempeſtuous hurricane, drove the whole kingdom before them, and in the end brought the country into ſervitude and ſlavery.

In 1172 ‡, Jorwerth lord of Caerleon upon Uſke gathered all his friends and forces together, and without mercy deſtroyed all the country with fire and ſword, even to the gates of Hereford and Glouceſter.

In 1263 ‖, Sir Maci de Beſile, (called alſo Matthias de Beſille) a French knight, was made ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire, and conſtable of Glouceſter-caſtle by the king. But the barons being greatly diſpleaſed at it, ſet up Sir William Tracy, a knight of this country, in oppoſition to him. Sir William, as he was holding a county court, was aſſaulted by a large body of the king's forces, with Maci at their head, who took him, and after uſing him with great barbarity, led him through the town to the caſtle, and there caſt him into priſon. When the barons heard of it, Sir Roger de Clifford and Sir John Giffard came to reſcue Sir William, and beſieged the caſtle for four days. Sir Maci, who is characteriſed to be a ſtout and bold knight, refuſed to yield it to them, and continued to defend it and the town, 'till the firſt gate leading to it was burnt, as was afterwards the wooden bridge belonging to the caſtle. Some priſoners were releaſed by the governor in expectation of their aſſiſtance, but they treacherouſly made another entrance or poſtern for the beſiegers, and thereupon Sir Maci and his men flying to the high and ſtrongeſt tower, defended themſelves as well as they could, 'till the three iron gates and locks were broken down, and he himſelf was taken; and even then with invincible courage he refuſed to ſurrender. Sir Roger de Clifford having taken the caſtle, ſent Sir Maci to the marches of Wales, where he was kept priſoner at Erdeſley-Caſtle.

Sir Roger de Clifford afterwards returned to his allegiance, and delivered the town and caſtle of Glouceſter into the king's hands; but Sir John Giffard retired to Brimpsfield, and having aſſembled many of the moſt valiant of his neighbours, there were frequent ſkirmiſhes between the garriſon of that caſtle and this of Glouceſter. The next year the town was taken* by ſome of the barons, and the following ſtratagem was uſed to accompliſh it: Sir John Giffard, who is called a knight of wonderful probity and courage, and Sir John de Balun, being cloathed with Welch cloaks, and riding upon two woolpacks, after the manner of chapmen or woolmongers, were let into the town at the weſt-gate. When it was unlock'd, they both leaped off their horſes, and caſting away their cloaks, appeared armed from head to foot. At this ſight the porters were ſo terrified as to deliver up the keys; and thereupon, the gates were thrown open to the forces which the two knights had procured, and were ready at hand. Prince Edward followed the barons cloſe at their heels, and having ſpeedily repaired the bridge over Severn, which they had burnt, came hither on Aſhwedneſday, and aſſaulted the town at the weſt-gate. But the barons within defended themſelves ſo well that he could not conquer them. Forces were ſent from the caſtle, which was ſtill in the king's hands, to aſſiſt the prince; but Grimbald Pauncefoot attacking them, turned them back with the loſs of ſome wounded. The prince ſeeing his condition, turned into the meadows, and was brought by a boat to the caſtle, where he ſet up his banner upon the high tower, which, when the barons ſaw, they were a little ſurprized. However on the town ſide they preſently beſieged the caſtle, which was ſtoutly defended by the garriſon. But Sir John Giffard coming from Brimpsfield, and burning the caſtle-bridge which cut off the communication with the country; and the prince ſeeing Robert Ferrers earl of Derby, coming againſt him with a great reinforcement, went unarmed and very privately to the barons, and upon oath granted them what they deſired, upon which they left the town. But the prince revenged himſelf on the burgeſſes, whom he put in priſon 'till they had paid 1000*l.* for their ranſom, and then, after very ill treatment, they were ſet at liberty; but the town was miſerably deſtroyed. A little after this, the prince fortified the town, and about 1264, the earl of Leiceſter got poſſeſſion of it; when the prince, the earl of Glouceſter, and others beſieged it on the north ſide, and entering at a breach which they had made in the wall leading to St. Oſwald's gate, took it from Leiceſter.

In 1265, Robert de Ros, William de Veſti, and other knights and gentlemen, to the number of three hundred, entered the town to defend themſelves in it againſt the prince, but they were obliged to ſurrender it, and were ſuffered to depart, ſwearing not to bear arms againſt him for a month.

As ſoon as the civil war broke out in 1641, this city joined in the parliament intereſt, and to put themſelves in a poſture of defence, added one company of voluntiers to the trained bands which aſſiſted them; procured ſome pieces of ordnance from London and Briſtol; provided materials, and at a great expence raiſed its fortifications. Thereupon, the king, by a letter from Oxford, dated February 12, 1642, ſent to the ſheriff and juſtices of Glouceſterſhire, prohibiting his ſubjects in that county from having any traffic or commerce with the city, 'till it ſhould return to its obedience; which letter was publickly read in the churches and chapels in the city, that all perſons might know his majeſty's pleaſure, and do their duty accordingly. Prince Rupert on the 3d of the ſame month, demanded the city for the king. Lieutenant colonel Maſſie and the principal officers returned him for anſwer, That they were reſolved with their lives and fortunes to defend the city for the uſe of the king and parliament, and would by no means ſurrender at the demand of a foreign prince: The mayor alſo ſent another meſſage, That according to his oath and allegiance, he was reſolved to keep the city on his majeſty's behalf, and would not deliver it up. Thereupon another ſummons to the ſame purpoſe was ſent by the prince, and it had a like effect.

About the middle of this month, lord Herbert, ſon of the marquis of Worceſter, general of South-Wales, with a body of about 1500 foot and 500 horſe, well armed, which he had raiſed with more expedition than was expected, came to reduce the garriſon. The horſe were put under the command of his brother lord John Somerſet, and the foot under Sir Jeremiah Bret, their major general. The laſt of theſe ſoon after demanded the city for the king's ſervice, but the ſummons from a Welch brigade was received with ſcorn; whereupon the Welch began to encamp at Highnam, within a mile and a half of the city. The garriſon deſerting Sudely-Caſtle and other out garriſons, made good the guard of the biſhop's palace on the Vineyard hill, and ſometimes made ſlender ſallies; for the governor had not 100 horſe, and the Welch forces were double the number of the garriſon, 'till 200 foot and dragoons from Briſtol, commanded by captain John Fiennes, came to their ſupply. However the Welch lay ſtill in their camp, and for five weeks together did not ſo much as attempt the out guards, or any conſiderable action, but expected that prince Maurice from Cirenceſter ſhould take equal care to diſtreſs the city on the other ſide, which he did to a great degree; and 'twas thought that prince Rupert would ſpeedily come to their aſſiſtance, which, on account of Briſtol, he could not poſſibly do. Mean time, colonel Maſſie (by order of Sir William Waller) immediately after the taking of Malmeſbury, drew out the garriſon forces to Highnam, and kept them to very cloſe play. But Sir William Waller, by the help of ſome flat bottom boats, croſſing the river at Frampton paſſage, and advancing towards the Welch with a light body of about 2000; the Welch, tho' their works were too ſtrong to be entered by horſe and dragoons; their avenues narrow, with cannon planted in all of them; and though their number was near, if not equal to their enemy; without ſtriking a ſtroke, ſounded a parley, and ſurrendered on condition that they might receive quarter, and that the officers might have reſpect according to their quality, which was granted: So on the 24th or 25th of March, near 1300 foot and three troops of horſe were led priſoners into the city, and ſeveral of them for ſome time, were kept under ſtrict confinement in the churches of St. Mary de Load and the Holy Trinity. But many of the parliament garriſons being before filled with ſuch perſons, moſt of the common ſoldiers were, within ten days, ſent back into their own country, having taken an oath never to ſerve againſt the parliament; others that offered themſelves were entertained in the parliament's ſervice: Several of the gentlemen and officers paid a ranſom, and took the ſame oath with the ſoldiers; and the reſt were ſent to Briſtol, but delivered at the taking of that city by prince Rupert.

This defeat, tho' it ſeem'd ſo inconſiderable, with the other preparations that were rendered uſeleſs by it, lord Herbert himſelf affirmed to coſt 60,000 l. tho' 'tis called a muſhroom army that had not courage to defend itſelf. About this time a great deal of proviſion was laid in, and a conſiderable quantity of money provided by the city, and the king's forces frequently hovered over the hills, and now and then ſkirted upon the town; but no cloſe ſiege was laid to it 'till the 10th of Auguſt following. This was then ſaid to be the only garriſon the parliament had between Briſtol and Lancaſter on the north of England, which, if the king could have taken, he would have been maſter of the Severn, and would have needed no forces in Wales.

The king did not himſelf approve the undertaking of the ſiege, but as it was a meaſure ſtrongly recommended by his friends, he came in perſon againſt the city, and about two in the afternoon ſent the following ſummons by two heralds, who would have read it openly in the ſtreet; but the mayor would not permit them to do it, ſo it was read in the Tolſey only, by Somerſet herald.

Charles Rex.

Out of our tender compaſſion to our city of Glouceſter, and that it may not receive prejudice by our army, which we cannot prevent if we be compelled to aſſault it; we are perſonally come before it to require the ſame, and are graciouſly pleaſed to let all the inhabitants of and all other perſons within that city, as well ſoldiers as others, know, that if they ſhall immediately ſubmit themſelves, and deliver this city to us, we are contented freely and abſolutely to pardon every one of them without exception; and do aſſure them in the word of a king, that they nor any of them ſhall receive the leaſt damage or prejudice by our army in their perſons or eſtates: But that we will appoint ſuch a governor and a moderate garriſon to abide there as ſhall be both for the eaſe and ſecurity of the city and the whole county. But if they ſhall neglect this offer of grace and favour, and compel us by the power of our army to reduce that place (which by the help of God we ſhall eaſily and ſhortly be able to doe) they muſt thank themſelves for all the calamities and miſeries that ſhall befall them. To this meſſage we expect a clear and poſitive anſwer within two hours after the publiſhing hereof. And by theſe preſents do give leave to any perſons eaſily to repair to and return from us whom that city ſhall deſire to employ unto us in that buſineſſe, and we do require all the officers and ſouldiers of our army quietly to ſuffer them to paſs accordingly.

The king immediately drew a part of his troops into Tredworth field, before the town, and being attended by prince Charles, the duke of York, prince Rupert, and general Ruthen, faced the city with about 6000 horſe and foot, not above a quarter of a mile from it, and 2000 horſe on the other ſide within cannon ſhot, the main of the army being not yet come up. The Governor, with the conſent of ſeveral others, within leſs than the time preſcribed, ſent the following anſwer to the king by ſerjeant major Pudſey and Mr. Tobias Jordan; who, it is ſaid, without any circumſtance of duty or good manners, told his majeſty, That they brought an anſwer from the godly city of Glouceſter, the mayor being firſt ſatisfied in ſome ſcruples touching the oath of his mayoralty.

The ANSWER.

Auguſt 10, 1643.

We the inhabitants, magiſtrates, officers and ſoldiers within the garriſon of Glouceſter, unto his majeſty's gracious meſſage return this humble anſwer; that we do keep this city, according to our oaths and allegiance, to and for the uſe of his majeſty and his royal royal poſterity; and do accordingly conceive ourſelves wholly bound to obey the commands of his majeſty, ſigned by both houſes of parliament; and are reſolved, by God's help, to keep this city accordingly.

His majeſty received this anſwer with great temper and mildneſs, only expreſſing a kind of wonder at their confidence, ſaying in the hearing of the meſſengers, Waller is extinct, and Eſſex cannot come. And indeed their reſolution was wonderful, for at that time there were not in the city more than fourteen or fifteen hundred ſoldiers, and forty or fifty barrels of powder; they had a ſlender artillery, and their works were low and unfiniſhed.

Upon the return of the meſſengers, the governor and council of war judged it abſolutely neceſſary to pull down a few houſes, and to ſet on fire all the reſt of the ſuburbs, in which were many large, handſome houſes, well inhabited. By burning of the ſuburbs, (ſays Mr. Dorney in his fourth ſpeech, made October 8, 1646) the city is a garment without ſkirts, which we were willing to part withall, leſt our enemies ſhould ſit upon them.

The earl of Brentford, the king's general, brought all the battering cannon that could be ſpared from Oxford; and all things were made ready for the ſiege. The Rev. Mr. Chillingworth had invented, after the manner of the Romans, teſtudines cum pluteis, which ran upon cart-wheels, with a blind of planks, muſket proof, (each having four holes for muſketteers to fire through) placed upon the axle tree, to defend the muſketteers and thoſe that thruſt forward the engine, the fore-part of which was to ſerve for a bridge. In uſing theſe engines the wheels were to fall into the ditch, and the bridge to reſt upon the town breaſt-works, and ſo each would become a compleat bridge by which to enter the city.

Sir William Vavaſor drew all his forces to the weſt ſide, broke down all bridges, and after leaving a ſtrong guard at the Vineyard, joined the Welch at Longford and Kingſholm, on the north-weſt ſide of the city, to the forces lately come from Worceſter. General Ruthen had placed his men in ſome grounds behind Lanthony, about a quarter of a mile from the town. And Sir Jacob Aſhley was quartered with a ſtrong body in ſome part of the ſuburbs on the eaſt ſide.

Many of the king's commanders were officers of the greateſt ſkill and experience, and his army was increaſed by the arrival of two regiments out of Ireland, commanded by colonel Myn and Sir William St. Leger.

The king, almoſt all the time of the ſiege, quartered at Matſon-houſe, on the eaſt.

The ſouth and ſouth-eaſt ſides of the city, tho' really they were the ſtrongeſt and beſt fortified, were repreſented to his majeſty as moſt proper to be attacked, becauſe there only the ſprings would not annoy the works of the beſiegers, and if his majeſty's troops could enter at a breach in theſe parts they would be inſtantly poſſeſſed of the higheſt ground in the city. Theſe things the garriſon were aware of, and to defend themſelves raiſed a ſconce, and ſtrengthened all their inward works with earth.

During the ſiege there were frequent aſſaults on both ſides. The king's troops endeavoured to fill up ſome part of the moat between the ſouth and weſt gates; and ſunk a mine under the eaſt-gate, but it was countermined. In ſhort, their efforts ſeem to have been very feeble and altogether unſucceſsful. They made about 150 great ſhot againſt the wall, which ſhattered the ſtone-work conſiderably; but the garriſon drew an inward work from the ſouth ſide all along the friers orchard, ſouthward, and ſtopt all the paſſages between that and the eaſt port. They alſo threw up a ſtrong work acroſs the eaſt-gate-ſtreet, which had a large trench before it filled with water. This work they intended to have raiſed to the height of the eaves of the houſes, and to have planted cannon thereon if the ſiege had continued. And ſo indefatigable were the citizens, that the very women and children were daily employed in fetching of turf, and placing of cannon-baſkets and earth, for repairing of the fortifications during the whole ſiege, which laſted twenty ſix days.

On Monday, the 4th of September, at night, the garriſon diſcovered two fires on Wainload-hill, which was the ſignal for approaching relief, and anſwered them by lights from the college-tower. On the 5th, which was appointed for a public faſt to be kept within the city, the ſiege was raiſed.

This great event was brought about by the earl of Eſſex, who determining to relieve Glouceſter, had obtained from the committee for the militia in the city of London, two regiments of trained bands, three regiments of auxiliaries, and a regiment of horſe, with eleven pieces of cannon and three drakes, by way of reinforcement to his army. On the 24th of Auguſt, the earl muſtered his forces upon Hounſlow-heath, when they were 10,000 compleat; after which he took up his quarters at Colebrook, and on the 26th marched to Beconsfield, and ſo forward to Beerton, where he cloathed his army. Upon intelligence of this advance, prince Rupert, with the greateſt part of the king's horſe, drew off from before Glouceſter to oppoſe their march, whilſt the king carried on the ſiege. About Biceſter 400 of the king's troops ſkirmiſhed with a part of the parliament-army, but were forced by numbers to retire; and ſcarce a day paſſed in the whole march without ſome ſmall engagement, which obliged Eſſex's army to proceed with the greateſt order and caution. The reinforcement from London, under colonel Manwaring, joined the earl of Eſſex on the firſt of September at the general randezvous on Brackley-heath; after which the whole proceeded on their route for Glouceſter, but were attacked on the 4th, at Stow on the Would, by the prince, with about 4000 horſe, in which action the loſs on either ſide was nearly equal. On the 5th, Eſſex advancing to Preſbury-hill, drew up his army in view of the city, and diſcovered the huts in the royal camp on fire, and the ſiege raiſed as already related. The general himſelf marched to Cheltenham, but the king's troops often ſkirmiſhed with him and beat up his quarters. On the 8th the whole army entered Glouceſter, and were joyfully received; and having furniſhed the city with ſome neceſſaries during their ſtay of two nights, moved to Tewkeſbury, and lay there five days, that in the mean time Glouceſter might take in more proviſions.

When the ſiege was raiſed, the city was reduced to two or three barrels of powder, and other proviſions were ſhort in proportion.

The king's army, which is ſaid to have been near 30,000, retreated in the night up Painſwick-hill. Their loſs before Glouceſter is computed to have been upwards of 1000 men, whilſt that of the garriſon did not amount to 50, of which two only were officers.

The raiſing of this ſiege gave a greater turn to the king's affairs than his enemies expected, who were then in the loweſt condition they had experienced during the war.

In an original letter wrote by biſhop Goodman, dated Chedſey, November 23, 1649, directed to the mayor and aldermen of Glouceſter, and now in the cuſtody of the corporation, 'tis ſaid, *You have better deſerved of the parliament than any city of England, not only for the enduring of a great ſiege, but indeed the turning * of the wheel, for ever after the parliament-forces prevailed, which before they did not.* And 'tis ſaid in Mr. Dorney's fourth ſpeech, That the ſtanding out of this place in the late ſiege, made it the vertical point in this civil war; for from that time the enemies [i. e. the king's forces] more and more declined; inſomuch as it pleaſed that reverend judge ſerjeant Wilde, in his late charge, ſitting upon the commiſſion of oyer and terminer here, to ſtile us of this place the conſervators of the parliament of England.

A letter of thanks, accompanied with a preſent of 1000*l.* was ſent to colonel Maſſie as a reward for his ſervices; proper largeſſes were alſo ſent to the inferior officers, and the private men of the garriſon had a month's pay over and above their arrears, by an order of both houſes of parliament made on the 15th of September, ten days after the raiſing of the ſiege. The 5th of September was ordered by the mayor and common council to be annually obſerved as a day of thankſgiving for raiſing the ſiege. It was called Glouceſter-holiday, and kept accordingly 'till the reſtoration.

Many attempts were afterwards made to recover the city, but none ſucceeded. After Newbury fight, Sir William Vavaſor was ſent to Hereford with a ſtrong party, to raiſe forces in thoſe parts, and was ordered by the king to diſtreſs Glouceſter on the Welch ſide. Sir John Wintour, at his entering upon his government of Newnham, plundered the villages near the city; and about the latter end of 1643, upon intelligence of the governor's abſence, advanced with a conſiderable body of men to ſurprize it; but the governor returning, he defeated and drove them back in great confuſion.

After this, a project was formed to get the city by corrupting captain Backhouſe, one of the officers of the garriſon, in order to which lieutenant-colonel Stanford wrote him a letter §, which was carried by one of Backhouſe's particular friends, who told him, that if he would undertake the buſineſs he might have 5000*l.* reward. Backhouſe ſhewed a ſeeming readineſs to engage in the affair, but imparted it to the governor, and by his advice returned a complying anſwer, deſiring that a cor-

* The unfortunate ſiege of this city, ſays Sir Robert Atkyns, gave a ſtand to the king's victorious army; which being raiſed as has been related, it turned the ſtate of the war, and the king could never after obtain ſucceſs; which confirms, that the greateſt of kings, and the beſt of men are not ſecured from the violence of the wicked. This royal family will always be honoured in the memory of good men, and muſt have been ſo throughout the Chriſtian world, had it been as proſperous as it was deſerving. King James the Firſt was the moſt learned king: King Charles the Firſt was the moſt religious king: King Charles the Second was the beſt natured king; and king James the Second was the beſt friend; which virtue was moſt eminent in his tender love to his children, and in his ſteady kindneſs to his ſervants. This ſucceſſion of kings has been oppoſed by their virtues; for peace, religion, good nature, and friendſhip ruined them. It is remarkable of this royal family, that the witty king was over reached by the Spaniſh ambaſſador: That the religious king was murdered by rebellious ſaints: The voluptuary was conſpired againſt by men of no religion; and the beſt friend was betrayed and forſaken by them whom he moſt intirely loved. It does not hence follow that this family will always be unfortunate. Ancient and Preſent State of Gloſterſhire. pp. 88, 89. —— The paſſages in this note being remarkable will ſerve as an apology for inſerting them, to thoſe who differ in ſentiment from the learned hiſtorian; to ſuch as agree with him, I am ſatisfied none will be thought neceſſary.

§ The letter is as follows: Good Robin, It is not unknown to you that once I loved you, and therefore I ſend this to adviſe you, whilſt it is in your power, to make uſe of it, and take my word I am confident as yet you may not only have your pardon, but raiſe yourſelf a greater fortune than the condition of thoſe you ſerve are able to afford you. This you may gain by the delivery—you may gueſs my meaning of what place, which is not hard for you to do. You know the old ſaying, fallere fallentem non eſt fraus. This is the advice of him that, when you ſhall deſiſt the cauſe, will ever be reſpondence might be ſettled, which was done, and many letters paſſed between them.

The deſign being thus far advanced, it was thought neceſſary that lord Digby ſhould write to captain Backhouſe †, to give him a ſtronger aſſurance of what had been promiſed him, and to name ſeveral of the king's officers, that Backhouſe might approve of one who ſhould aſſiſt in the execution of their project. Backhouſe choſe Sir William Vavaſor: Afterwards meeting lieutenant colonel Stanford on Corſe-lawn, he received 200*l.* of him, when it was agreed between them, that on the 15th of January the king's troops ſhould advance to the weſt-gate, and Backhouſe ſhould let them in, provided they came by nine o'clock or half an hour after; and early that evening he ſent them the word, which was Briſtol.

As ſoon as this meſſage was diſpatched, the governor called a council of war, acquainted them with the whole plot, and ordered both the ſoldiers and citizens under arms. Four men were placed under Over-bridge, which the king's troops were to paſs, with orders upon firing the firſt gun to cut a large cable, which done, the bridge would have fallen in, and cut off the retreat of the royaliſts, who, if they could not have conquered, muſt all have been cut to pieces or made priſoners. But the troops intended for this expedition moved ſo ſlowly, that when they came to Laſſington-hill, within a mile of the town, it was almoſt day break, whereupon they retreated to Newent, and Glouceſter expected them in vain.

Backhouſe endeavoured to draw them on again, but in a few days they had notice of his having diſcovered the plot, and ſo deſiſted from any further correſpondence with him.

This city was thought to be a place of ſuch conſequence to the king, that Sir William Vavaſor was afterwards reinforced to reduce it, who advanced to Painſwick with a very ſtrong brigade, which upon lord Hoptoun's defeat by Sir William Waller, was inſtantly ordered to march to Oxford; otherwiſe, it is probable that Glouceſter might have been blocked up and beſieged a ſecond time.

The city ſuffered greatly by the ſiege, as appears by the following petition:

To the ſupreme Authority, the Parliament of the Commonwealth of England.

The humble Petition of the Mayor, Burgeſſes, and divers Hundreds of Inhabitants of the City of Glouceſter, ſheweth,

THAT the city of Glouceſter being a garriſon for the parliament's ſervice, in 1643, and of vaſt importance to the commonwealth, upon the approach of the late king's army, to beſiege the ſaid city, it was reſolved by the governour and council of war there, That the ſaid city and garriſon could not be preſerved againſt the enemy, unleſs the whole ſuburbs of the ſaid city (which was a full third part thereof) were pulled down and demoliſhed.

That in purſuance of the ſaid reſolve, two hundred forty and one houſes (beſides barns, ſtables, outhouſes, gardens, orchards and goods) of the ſuburbs of the ſaid city, wherein ſo many families lived, were burned, pulled down, and utterly deſtroyed, the night before the leaguer was laid to the ſaid city, by the late king's forces; whereby moſt of your petitioners were reduced to moſt miſerable poverty, and the eſtates of moſt of them much impaired, and the ſaid city, in general, very much impoveriſhed.

That it was proved upon oath, to the grand inqueſt, at an aſſizes held for the county of the ſaid city, that your petitioners loſſes, by the burning and deſtroying their ſaid houſes, amounted to the ſum of twenty ſix thouſand pounds and upwards; as by the certificate of the grand inqueſt to the lord chief baron, a copy whereof is hereunto annexed, may appear.

That your petitioners willingly ſuffered the loſs of their houſes and goods, for their affections to the parliament ſervice; and it was a great means, under God, to preſerve the ſaid city and garriſon, and by conſequence the whole country, from the power of the enemy: And your petitioners have ever ſince continued conſtantly faithful to the commonwealth, and the preſent government thereof, in the times of greateſt danger and tryal unto this day; and have always hoped, that according to the parliament's declarations, their loſſes and ruins for the commonwealth's ſervice, ſhould be repaired out of the eſtates of the commonwealth's enemies, who occaſioned the ſame.

Your petitioners therefore humbly pray, That their loſſes and ruins may be re-

† His lordſhip's letter runs thus: Sir, You have ſo far declared your deſires to ſerve his majeſty, unto my very good friend Mr Stanford, that I think it fit you ſhould now receive ſome more authentic aſſurances of his majeſty's gracious acceptance thereof, than perhaps you will think his bare engagement to be; therefore I do hereby ſolemnly engage my word unto you, both as a miniſter of ſtate and as a gentleman, that if you ſhall perform faithfully what you promiſe there, you ſhall punctually receive, immediately after, ſuch a pardon as yourſelf ſhall deſire, and the ſum of 2000*l.* As for the 300*l.* which you deſire in preſent, ſuch a confidence I will have in your word, that as ſoon as ever I ſhall have received your anſwer to this, under your hand, it ſhall be forthwith paid into what place ſoever you ſhall appoint, and to what perſon. As for the particular way of effecting our deſign, thoſe you propoſe are very rational, but the choiſe and diſpoſition of that muſt be between you and thoſe who are to execute it; with whom, if it were poſſible, you ſhould procure a meeting at ſome unſuſpected place. I do propoſe to you your choiſe of ſeveral men, and whom of them you ſhall like beſt and think fitteſt, by reaſon of the place where his command is, to him alone and no other the buſineſs ſhall be imparted; and whether Sir William Vavaſour, commander in chief of the forces now in Glouceſterſhire; or colonel Mynne, commander of a brigade of Engliſh come out of Ireland; or colonel Waſhington, who is at Eveſham; or laſtly, whether the governor of Berkeley caſtle. As ſoon as you ſhall ſend me an anſwer, you ſhall receive ſatisfaction from him, who hopes you will ſo behave yourſelf as to make me paired, and their diſtreſſed families relieved, out of the eſtates of ſuch delinquents as ſhall be appointed to be ſold; or in ſuch other way as ſhall ſeem beſt to your wiſdom, Juſtice, and charity.

And they ſhall be bound to pray, &c.

In 1644, ſeveral ordinances were made for recruiting and paying the garriſon, by which the county of Glouceſter was rated to pay 1000*l.* and the city 100*l.* weekly; beſides, the third part of the cuſtoms payable upon currants was appropriated to that purpoſe *. Another ordinance was made about June, that colonel Maſſie ſhould have an eſtate of inheritance of 1000*l.* a year at leaſt, ſettled upon him by the committee of Glouceſter, out of ſome eſtates then eſteemed to be forfeited §.

Colonel Maſſie was appointed deputy-governor by the earl of Stanford, to whom the government of this garriſon was committed about 1641; but in 1643, Maſſie was made governor himſelf, and continued ſo 'till 1645, when the parliament appointed him lieutenant general of the weſt, to the great regret of the inhabitants of the place; the whole garriſon, city and county unanimouſly petitioning for his continuance among them.

On the 3d of June, the mayor, alderman Singleton, and colonel Blount had the command given to them, 'till another governor ſhould come down, or the parliament give further orders. Colonel Thomas Morgan occurs governor Auguſt 13, 1645, and December 28, 1647. As does Sir William Conſtable December 7, 1648, and December 27, 1650.

Major general Maſſie had ſignalized himſelf in ſeveral remarkable actions, and was therefore highly eſteemed by the parliament, the army, and the city of London; but things having been carried to greater extremities than he expected, or could approve of, he withdrew himſelf from their party, and went out of the kingdom in the year 1647; but returning, was made priſoner at St. James's, (being one of the ſecluded members) whence he eſcaped January 18, 1648, and went to the prince in Holland. He afterwards formed a deſign of ſurprizing Glouceſter, which was not then a garriſon, and conferred incog. with his friends in that city; but the deſign took air, and was fruſtrated. This was probably in 1659, when the keys of the city were ordered to be delivered out of the poſſeſſion of captain Hill, to the mayor, on account of ſome matters imparted to the corporation.

The general lay concealed ſome time in a little houſe near Simonſhall, belonging to Mr. Veal of that place, who was a friend to the royal cauſe, and Maſſie's relation; but at length he was diſcovered, and taken there by ſome troopers, who were made drunk before they left the place. However, they put him upon a horſe before one of the men, and carried him off; but going down Nimpsfield-hill, which is very ſteep and woody, Maſſie threw himſelf from the horſe, and being a ſtout man, and his guards a little intoxicated, he made his eſcape in a dark tempeſtuous night.

Of the GOVERNMENT and OFFICERS of the CITY.

WHO were the governors in the time of the Britons I cannot tell, nor can I learn who they were when the Romans divided Britain into Britannia Prima and Britannia Secunda, and made the town ſubject to a preſident reſiding at London: But I conjecture that in this and all other changes which they made, the town was always under the dominion of a conſul; for 'tis ſaid ‖, that in the time of the Romans, and ſome time after, it was governed by perſons who had that title: And in the time of the Saxons, and ſince, it was governed by a portgreve, præfect, or provoſt ‡.

Morvid was conſul in king Arthur's reign, and Wulpin le Rue 5° regis Canuti. Wihiſide is called præfect in 1022, and Oſmund was provoſt 16° and 22° H. 2: In the reign of king John, who made it a borough to be governed by two bailiffs, and in that of king H. 3. who made it a corporation, the head officers of the town who were afterwards termed bailiffs, were generally called præpoſiti or provoſti: And though the king appointed another perſon to be provoſt of Glouceſter, yet it is probable this perſon did nothing more than receive the king's rents, and other payments due to him; and that 'till Henry the Third's time, there was not a regular ſucceſſion of provoſts or bailiffs here. The firſt in king Henry the Third's reign, were Thomas Felde, and John Blound or Blounte. Thoſe which occur afterwards, in the writings which I have ſeen, will be found in a liſt at the end of this chapter.

* This Robert Burgenſis is often called by the title of Mayor, and particularly when William Pain and Richard de Cellario were in the office of provoſt. He has alſo this name when Walter Scriptor and Thomas Oye, Walter Pain and Hugh de Kingeſhall, and David Dunning had that office. But perhaps ſome of theſe were in the reign of king John; and that then it was when Hernaldus was Prætor or Mayor here, and Henry Calvus, his fellow. This Richard Burgeys was High Sheriff of the county of Glouceſter twice in the reign of king John. But perhaps by this mayor is meant no more than ſenior; for Richard Burgeys of Glouceſter, the ſon of Richard Burgeys, is mentioned in two charters in A. 5, fol. 108. And Richard Burgeys of Glouceſter is called Antiqui, or Old, A. 5, fol. 256.

RECORDERS.

Thomas Lane, gent. was recorder in the reign of king H. 8. He was ſteward of the priory of Stanley, and manor of Standiſh, belonging to the abbey of Glouceſter; and after the diſſolution thereof, was made ſteward to the dean and chapter. He died in the reign of king H. 8. and was buried in the north-croſs-iſle of the cathedral.

Richard Morgan, ſerjeant at law, occurs 1° E. 6. and 1552, and afterwards being a judge, uttered ſeveral opprobious words againſt biſhop Hooper.

John Pollard, eſq; occurs 1553, and 1555.

Richard Pate, eſq; occurs in 1556, and was confirmed by queen Elizabeth's charter, 1561. He was a commiſſioner to king H. 8. and E. 6. for taking a ſurvey of all religious foundations in Glouceſter, Briſtol, &c. then ſuppreſſed, and the lands belonging to them given to the crown; and he, with Thomas Chamberlayn, eſq; purchaſed of king E. 6. many of thoſe lands in Glouceſter and elſewhere. He is frequently termed of Minſterworth, where 'tis probable he ſometimes reſided; and was a good benefactor to St. Bartholomew's hoſpital, and this city. He was buried in 1588, near the ſouth wall of the ſouth-croſs-iſle of the cathedral, where there is a monument erected for him, which has been of late years repaired by Corpus Chriſti college in Oxford; to which he gave the nomination of a ſchool-maſter and uſher at Cheltenham, in this county; the hoſpital there, and ſome other benefactions. Upon the monument is the effigies of an old man in a lawyer's gown, and a boy kneeling behind him; and of a woman, with three girls behind her. Over them is this inſcription:

Richardus Pates, Arm. huic nuper Civitati a memoria, qui vixit Annos 73, et ob. 29 Oct. 1588, ſibi et conjugi, et natis ſuis, poſuit.

Quid ſtulti vitæ mortales ſtamina duci
Longa volunt miſeræ, non minus atq; malæ.
Dic quotus eſt, cujus non ſiccat cura medullas,
Cui mens non ſceleris conſcia, dic quotus eſt.
In cœlis expers curarum et criminis inſons
Vita eſt, hæc vera eſt, cætera vita necat.

Over the monument is a board or wainſcot to keep off the duſt, and upon it are theſe arms; Argent, a cheveron ſable, between three pellets: In chief, three croſſes patee fitchy of the firſt. Creſt, a lion vaire crowned, ſable and argent; and theſe words at top: Mihi vita Chriſtus, Chriſtus mea ſpes unica.

Nicholas Overbury, eſq; afterwards knight, was elected April 15, 1° Jac. 1. upon Oldiſworth's death, and confirmed in the charters of king James 1. and king Charles 1.

Sir John Bridgman, knight, chief juſtice of Cheſter, was elected March 21, 1626, upon Overbury's reſignation.

William Lenthal, eſq; maſter of the benchers of Lincoln's-inn, and reader there, was elected January 23, 13° C. 1. He was afterwards ſpeaker and one of the principal agents of the long parliament, and maſter of the rolls; and being amoved November 23, 1660, from this office, Evan Selis, ſerjeant at law, was elected on the ſame day.

Sir William Morton, knight, ſerjeant at law, upon Selis's reſignation, was elected April 1, 1662; and died one of the juſtices of the common pleas, in 1672, and was buried in the Temple church in London.

William Gregory, eſq; elected October 3, 1672, was afterwards knighted, and made one of the barons of the exchequer; but by a mandate from the king he was amoved, and by another royal mandate dated November 21, 1687,

Charles Trinder, eſq; was appointed to ſucceed him; and by virtue of this nomination was elected December 8, 1687; but he reſigned, and thereupon

Sir John Somers, knight, was elected, Aug. 29, 1690, and was afterwards lord high chancellor of England, and baron of Eveſham.

Nicholas Lechmere, eſq; upon lord Somers's death, was elected, May 18, 1716. He was afterwards chancellor of the dutchy of Lancaſter, and baron of Eveſham; and upon his death

Philip lord Hardwick, upon Mr. Windham's reſignation, was elected December 9, 1734. On February 21, 1736-7, his lordſhip was appointed lord high chancellor of Great Britain; and on April 2, 1754, his majeſty was pleaſed to advance him him to the titles of viſcount Royſton, and earl of Hardwick, in the county of Glouceſter *.

On his lordſhip's death, his ſecond ſon, the honourable Charles York, eſq; was elected to this office in the year 1764, and ſince his deceaſe, lord North has been choſen, who is the preſent recorder.

The recorder's ſalary is 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* yearly.

Altho' the title of recorder is not in any charter of the city before that of queen Elizabeth, yet it is certain that ſeveral perſons were ſo called, long before that charter, particularly Thomas Lane, in the time of king Henry the Eighth; Richard Morgan, 1 E. 6. and 6 E. 6. John Pollard, eſq; 1553; John Pollard, knight, 1555; Richard Pate, eſq; 4 & 5 Phil. & Mar. and 1 Eliz.

Thomas Atkins, eſq; upon Baker's death, elected October 17, 40 Eliz. He was probably the ſame with the before-mentioned Thomas Atkins.

Henry Robins, eſq; upon the reſignation of Atkins, who is ſaid to be then very old and weak, was elected January 18, 45 Eliz. This Robins was buried near alderman Machen's monument in the cathedral, and upon the grave ſtone was this inſcription:

Here lyeth the body

bins, eſq; who departed this life the 11 day of Nov. 1613.

And on a braſs plate on the ſame ſtone,

Cauſidicus fueram, dum me mea fata finebant;
Nunc mea ſtellifero cauſa peracta foro eſt.
Triſtis et indignor tu, (cui licet) argue cauſas:
O quanto mitior ſors mea, ſorte tua eſt.

William Lockſmith, eſq; upon Robins's death, was elected January 13, 1613.

William Guys, or Guiſe, eſq; upon Lockſmith's death, was elected Auguſt 26, 1615; and the ſame year gave to the corporation a great ſilver cup, or bowl, and cover, double gilt, to remain with the mayor for the time being, for ever; but they were ſold to contribute to the fortifications of the city, 18 C. 1.

John Dorney, eſq; upon Guiſe's death, elected January 11, 1640; but being amoved by the commiſſioners appointed for the regulation of corporations, he was ſucceeded by John Powell, eſq; was, upon Price's reſignation, re-elected July 5, 1687. Againſt the north wall in the lady's chapel, is a magnificent monument of white marble, with his effigies at length, in a judge's habit, and this inſcription for him underneath it:

It was uſually to aſſeſs the burgeſſes of the city for the wages of the burgeſſes in parliament, who were allowed two ſol. per diem each for every day that he ſat. Six days were appointed for their going to and returning from parliament every ſeſſions; and ſix ſhillings were then paid to the ſerjeant for his fee.

The election of members of parliament for this city is now very popular and tumultuous; but formerly it ſeems to have been otherwiſe, for in the indenture ‡ for this borough, fixed to the writ of 28° H. 6. and ſealed with the ſeals of the bailiffs, and of the high ſheriff of this county, 'tis ſaid as follows:

In 1623 the inhabitants of the county of the city endeavoured in parliament to have a knight for their in-ſhire, which the city oppoſed, and occaſioned a proper clauſe to be inſerted in the city charter.

IN the time of king Edward the Confeſſor, this place was an antient borough, whoſe inhabitants were ſtiled the burgeſſes of the town of Glouceſter, and ſo they continued to be, 'till king John, by his letters patents, incorporated them; and indeed they were ſo called in the charters of king Henry the Second and Richard the Firſt.

King Henry the Second granted to his burgeſſes of Glouceſter the ſame cuſtoms and liberties, through his whole land, of toll and all other things, as the better citizens of London, and they of Weſtminſter enjoyed, in the reign of king Henry the Firſt.

King Richard the Firſt, on the 5th of May, in the 5th year of his reign, granted them the borough with its appurtenances, already mentioned page 84.

And king John granted them, inter alia, That they ſhould be quit of toll, laſtage, pontage and ſtallage, in and out of fair, and thro' all the ſea-ports belonging to the king on this ſide and beyond the ſeas, the liberties of the city of London reſerved.—That the burgeſſes may elect two diſcreet burgeſſes to be bailiffs, who may not be amoved from their bailiwick, called alſo præpoſitura, as long as they behave well, but by the common council of the borough; and four coroners, to keep the pleas of the crown there.

King Henry the Third confirms his father's grants, [p. 84] and granted to them further, that they ſhould have for ever all their preſcribed liberties, and that if there were any particulars formerly granted to them which they did not then fully exerciſe, they might fully uſe the ſame.

The kings Edward the * Second and Third confirmed the former grants, and the latter added, That they ſhould be quit of murage, keyage, paviage, gildage, &c. thro' the kingdom.

King Richard the Second alſo confirmed them, and further granted them the chattels of outlaws, felons and fugitives, and deodands; all iſſues, fines, redemptions and amerciaments of all the burgeſſes; and all pleas real and perſonal within the vill, to be held in Gild-hall, with power and authority, as juſtices, to hear and determine all offences committed in the vill, except felony, which they were not to determine without ſpecial licence from the king,: That they might take recognizances according to the ſtatute of Acton Burnel, and attach the body and goods of all perſons within the vill, except thoſe of the abbat of St. Peter, his ſucceſſors, tenants and ſervants.

King Henry the Fourth, Dec. 4, regni 1°; king Henry the Fifth, Feb. 5, regni 2°; king Henry the Sixth, Oct. 26. regni 2°; and king Edward the Fourth, May 5, regni 2°, confirmed all former grants to them; as did alſo

King Richard the Third, Sept. 2, regni 1°; and added, That 45*l.* of the fee-farm rent ſhould be abated; that on Monday next after Michaelmas then enſuing, a mayor ſhould be elected, and that they be henceforth incorporated by the name of the mayor and burgeſſes of the town of Glouceſter, and by that name to plead or be impleaded; that they of the corporation might chooſe twelve aldermen to act as the aldermen of London do; that the hundreds of Dudſton and King's-Barton ſhould be diſtinct and ſeparate from the county of Glouceſter, and from the Monday aforeſaid to be called the county of the town of Glouceſter; and that from and after that time the bailiffs of the town ſhould alſo execute the office of ſheriffs, and be ſworn as ſuch before the mayor, who ſhould, under the ſeal of his office, certify their names in chancery when ſworn; that the ſheriffs ſhould hold a county-court, and all precepts within the town and hundreds aforeſaid ſhould be executed by them; and that the mayor ſhould be elected by the twelve aldermen, and twelve of the moſt diſcreet burgeſſes. That there ſhould be four ſerjeants at mace, two whereof to wait upon the mayor, and two upon the ſheriffs. The mayor to be clerk of the market, and ſteward and marſhal of the king's houſhold, and the king's eſcheator. But that the town of Tewkeſbury ſhould be exempted from tolls in Glouceſter.

King Henry the Seventh confirmed all former grants and privileges, except the abatement of 45*l.* out of the fee-farm rent; and the mayor and burgeſſes petitioning for the ſaid abatement, on account of 300 houſes being decayed and other great charges, he granted them an abatement of 5*l.* for ever.

King Henry the Eighth alſo confirmed them, and September 3, regni 33° erecting a biſhoprick here, by a particular clauſe in his charter, ordered that the whole town be thenceforth and for ever a city, to be called the § city of Glouceſter.

King Edward the Sixth, March 1, regni 5° confirmed the former grants as his father had done.

Queen Elizabeth, February 21, regni 3°, alſo confirmed them, and added, that Richard Pates, eſq; ſhould be recorder of the city during the pleaſure of the mayor and burgeſſes, to execute his office by himſelf, or by his deputy, to be called the town-clerk. That the mayor, recorder, and aldermen be juſtices of the peace within the city, and no other juſtice of the peace to intermeddle therein. That the mayor and burgeſſes, or the majority of them, might chooſe a recorder, and tax the inhabitants for the ſafety, neceſſity, or profit of the city; with ſeveral other particulars.

King James the Firſt granted, that they ſhould have a common ſeal; that the mayor and burgeſſes might elect ſheriffs, eſcheators, coroners, bailiffs, chamberlains, conſtables, ſerjeants at mace, and other inferior officers, as have been accuſtomed, with many other particulars.

King Charles the Firſt granted, among other things, that they might elect and increaſe the number of the common council as they thought proper; that on the Monday next after Michaelmas the twenty-four electors ſhall chooſe an alderman to be mayor, another to be coroner, two of the common council to be ſheriffs, and four of the common council to be ſtewards, all which ſhould take their perſonal oaths. The mayor and burgeſſes to elect a town-clerk, and other officers as formerly.

By an ordinance of parliament, which was made April 3, 1648, all former letters patents, and charters of liberties, tolls, &c. granted to the city, were confirmed under the great ſeal of England.

On Monday after Michaelmas 1671, in the morning, eight of the aldermen, the oldeſt ſheriffs, and others of the common council to make up the number twenty-four, aſſembled at Gild-hall, and there elected officers for the year enſuing. In the afternoon of the ſame day, the mayor, who was not at the election, came to the Gild-hall to elect, and being told that the election was made in the morning, he, one of the aldermen, and ſixteen of the council, proteſted againſt it, as being contrary to the charter of the city, upon which the charter was thought to be forfeited, and was ſurrendered.

It has been remarked, that of all the charters of corporations which the king took into his hands,

hands, that of this city, upon the pretence beforementioned, was the firſt.

Upon proper application, however, king Charles the Second, April 18, 24° regni, granted them another, dated at Weſtminſter, which is the preſent * one, wherein their former privileges are confirmed; but it coſt the corporation 679*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.* to procure it.

By this charter the corporation muſt conſiſt of thirty members at leaſt, but cannot exceed forty; of which the mayor and aldermen are twelve, and the reſt are the common council.

There are twelve companies in the corporation, who attend on the mayor, with their ſtreamers, upon ſolemn occaſions, viz.

1. Mercers, under which are alſo included apothecaries, grocers, and chandlers.

2. Weavers, who, 24° H. 7. were ſtiled the warden and ſtewards of the fraternity of St. Anne, and continued proctors of St. Anne's ſervice in St. Michael's church 'till its diſſolution; and were afterwards ſo very conſiderable, that when Thomas Machen was mayor, 44° Eliz. a writing or agreement, in behalf of their journeymen was then made, and approved by two juſtices of aſſize, at their being in this city.

3. Tanners.

4. Butchers.

5. Bakers.

6. Smiths and hammer-men, among which are alſo ironmongers, cutlers, ſadlers and glaziers.

7. Joiners and coopers.

8. Shoemakers.

9. Metalmen; to which belong goldſmiths, braziers, pewterers, and pin-makers.

10. Taylors.

11. Barbers.

12. Glovers.

Beſides theſe there were formerly the companies of cappers and furriers, ſhearmen and dyers, which became united 21° Eliz. and were quite decayed in 1634; of cooks and innholders, which became united 24° Eliz. and with their companies attended the mayor upon ſolemn occaſions in 1629; of clothiers, of haberdaſhers, and of brewers.

Borough Engliſh, whereby lands and eſtates deſcend to the youngeſt ſon, and are forfeited to the king for felony but for a year and a day, was an antient cuſtom and privilege, enjoyed by the town and ſome part of the county of Glouceſter, and confirmed by a ſtatute made 17° E. 2. And tho' 'tis now loſt through diſuſe, and not claimed, in any part of the county; the uſage, was preſerved in the city, as appears by an inquiſition taken before the mayor as eſcheator, and affirmed upon oath 28° Eliz.

Every ſon of a burgeſs is free-born, and as ſuch is intituled to his freedom.

Each burgeſs has free common all the year in the Town-ham, and in Portham after the hay is moved and carried away, which were purchaſed of the abbey of St Peter's 21° H. 3. Alſo in Oxleaſe, Meanham, and Little-meadow, after the firſt veſture is taken off. And about June or July yearly, ſome of the corporation are choſen to be officers of the commons.

On the 14th of February. 43° E. 3. the abbey of St. Peter's § granted, that the bailiffs and better ſort of the burgeſſes of Glouceſter, might fiſh in their ſmall fiſhery in the Severn at and near to Glouceſter, at all times at their pleaſure; but the common fiſhers, who catch fiſh to ſell, ſhould pay one penny a year to the kitchener of the abbey. The mayor has now this fiſhery, and a ſmall acknowledgement is paid for it.

A writ of Quo Warranto was brought againſt the city 1ſt and 2d Ph. and M. to prove their right to their ſeveral liberties; and upon their anſwer, all the former grants were confirmed. Another Quo Warranto was alſo brought againſt it 15° Jac. 1. and thereupon a Non Pros. was obtained.

The town had a kind of market as long ſince as the reign of king John, who commanded that all perſons coming hither with their wares might peaceably, and without moleſtation, come, ſtay, or depart hence. But the markets, as they now are, were granted by king Henry the Third, weekly on Wedneſday and Saturday, of which the mayor is clerk.

King Edward the Third, in 1356, granted a fair, yearly to be holden on the eve and feaſt of St. John Baptiſt, with five days immediately ſucceeding. King James the Firſt granted one upon the 25th of March, with two days ſucceeding; and another on the 17th of November, and two days after. Barton fair, which is on September 17, was obtained in or about 5° Edw. 4. by St. Peter's abbey, to whom the manor and farm of that name did formerly belong; but after the diſſolution, king Henry the Eighth, September 11, 34° regni, in conſideration of 493*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.* granted to the corporation ſome part of the lands of the manor, which they now enjoy, and ſeveral other particulars which were ſoon granted away.

The matters relating to tolls may be learnt from the various charters and other records ſtill remaining in the city treaſury, particularly that in the 32d year of Edward the Firſt, the bailiffs of the town paid to the king 100*l.* for the tolls of the borough. And that, 35° Edw. 1. an agreement was made between Worceſter and Glouceſter, that the burgeſſes ſhould each be toll-free to the other. And in the reigns of king Rich. 2. H. 4. H. 5. H. 6: Edw. 4. H. 8: and Edw. 6. certain fines were paid to the bailiffs in the earlier times, and afterwards to the ſheriffs of the town, by ſuch as were not free of it. In 1629, fines were paid for the ſame; and by a decree made in the ſtar-chamber, in the reign of Charles the Second, they were ratified and confirmed. In 1589, Mr. Pain and others had ſeveral diſputes with the corporation of the city, concerning the market-overt here, and the right of ſelling and taking toll at any time was determined in the queen's court of the marches, in behalf of the corporation of the city.

The chief employment of the town in and before the reign of king William the Conqueror, was making and forging of iron; and in the times of king Richard the Second and Henry the Fourth, 'twas eminent for its iron manufacture. The ore was brought from Robin-Hood's hill, at the diſtance of about two miles from the city, where it is ſaid to have been found in great abundance.

Here was a ſtreet antiently called Smith-ſtreet *, moſtly inhabited by perſons employ'd in the iron-works, on which account I preſume it had its name; but there were many furnaces and forges in other parts of the city. Theſe engines were then worked by hand, which, ſince the buſineſs has been carried on in a larger way, are moved by water; and the town then loſt that manufacture which could no longer be carried on there but under great diſadvantages.

Some have been of opinion that this city had formerly a greater ſhare of the foreign trade of the nation than it now enjoys, and urge, that ſeveral benefactions have been expreſſly given to the merchant inhabitants; but probably, at that time, every conſiderable ſhopkeeper was called merchant, as is the caſe at preſent in Scotland, and ſome other parts of the kingdom. However, without determining this matter, it is certain, that ſoon after the conqueſt many of the Jews, who ſubſiſted intirely on trade and uſury, and were a ſort of wandering merchants, reſided here; but what was the nature of their trade in this place I have not been able to diſcover any further with certainty. At preſent the foreign imports of the city are confined to the ſole article of wines, which are in good repute.

The cloathing buſineſs, was formerly very eminent here, and Brook-ſtreet, ſituate upon Full-brook, was the place of habitation for ſuch as were concerned in that manufacture. As lately as the year 1629, here was a company of clothiers, who with the other companies attended the mayor on ſolemn occaſions.

Cap-making was alſo a very conſiderable trade here, and employ'd a great many hands, but that, as well as the clothing, has long ſince deſerted the city.

In the year 1626, at the decline of the clothing trade, that the poor inhabitants might not be deſtitute of employment, John Tilſley, to his great honour, brought hither the art of pinmaking §, which was ſo properly encouraged and promoted, that it ſoon grew to be conſiderable, and has been gradually increaſing ever ſince. In 1712, this trade is ſaid to have returned 80*l.* a week; but in 1744 the wages in this branch amounted to about the ſame ſum, excluſive of materials, and together made a return of about 300*l.* a week. At preſent the manufacture returns about 20,000 l. per ann. from London, beſides a very extenſive trade with the country.

This place had very antiently its proper ſignature. On an old ſeal in the time of king Edward the Third, which is ſtill uſed for recognizances, on each ſide of that king's head is a horſe-ſhoe, one horſe-nail near it, and three below it, two and one; with the like number above it, placed in the ſame order. And it is affirmed, that king Richard the Third, when he made this a mayor town, gave it his ſword and cap of maintenance; accordingly we find the following arms on the ſouth ſide of the gate leading into Crypt-ſchool, which was built by alderman Cooke, who died 1529, viz. A ſword erect, with a cap of maintenance on the point, on each ſide an horſe-ſhoe and three horſe-nails at length in the baſe.

On another old ſeal, uſed in the reign of king Henry the Third, and in the 38th year of Edward the Third, is a caſtle, which appears to have had battlements from the turrets at each corner. And on another antient one in the middle is a caſtle, with a turret on each ſide, and round it this inſcription, SIGILLUM BURGENSIUM DE GILDA MERCATORUM GLOUC.

In the reign of queen Elizabeth, the city uſed a ſeal which had, in the middle, a ſword in bend, the pomel in baſe, between ſix horſeſhoes, and ten horſe-nails; and round it, SIGILLUM MAJORALITATIS GLOUC.

Chriſtopher Barker, eſq; garter principal king at arms, October 18, 1538, granted ‡ to the city of Glouceſter the following arms, viz. Vert, a pale or, a ſword azure beſanted, the hilt and pomel gules; upon the point a cap of maintenance purple, lined ermine; upon the field two horſe-ſhoes argent, pierced ſable, between ſix horſe-nails in triangle. On a chief, party per pale, or and purple, a boar's head coupee argent; in his mouth a quince apple gules between two roſes. Theſe arms were uſed on the city ſeal from the time they were granted 'till 1652; but part of the time, with this addition, viz. Over the arms, 1564, and on each ſide, two maces, the one ſurmounted of the other; which arms are upon ſeveral grave-ſtones, &c. in the churches within the city, over thoſe who had ſerved the office of mayor.

* In king Henry the Third's time there was a place in ſmith-ſtreet called Colſtall, M. S. Frouc. Perhaps the ſmiths put their coles here. It was generally afterwards called the Bareland; becauſe it was bare or waſte ground, not built upon, next to the bridge, and the way into the caſtle.

§ Pins were firſt made in England in the year 1543, before which the ladies uſed ſkewers, or rather, I ſuppoſe, the prickles of thorns, curiouſly ſcraped, trimmed and dried; which the poor women in Wales call pin draen, and have ſerved with them for the purpoſe of pins 'till lately, if they do not even at this time.

The preſent arms of the city aſſigned by Sir Edward Biſh, garter principal king at arms, Auguſt 14, 1652, are, Or, three cheverons gules, between ten torteauxes 3, 3, 3, and 1; which are now uſed upon the city-ſeal, and the ſeal of mayoralty. At the ſame time he adorned the coat with two ſupporters, viz. On both the dexter and ſiniſter ſides, A lion rampant gules, each holding in his dexter gamb a broad-ſword erect proper; and added this creſt, viz. Out of a mural coronet iſſuant a lion gardant gules, holding in his dexter gamb a broad-ſword erect proper; in the ſiniſter gamb a trowel, and ſtanding upon a ſcrole, with this motto, FIDES INVICTA TRIUMPHAT. Three cheveronels, were the arms of the Clares, earls of Glouceſter, and 'tis ſaid that Gilbert, one of thoſe earls, gave them to the town. The torteauxes are part of the arms of the ſee of Worceſter, out of which this dioceſe was taken.

Of the BIRTHS, DEATHS, and BURIALS of eminent PERSONS.

BENEDICT, who wrote the life of St. Dubricius, archbiſhop of Caerleon, printed by Mr. Wharton, was a monk of St. Peter's abbey, and lived about the year 1120.

Oſbern, commonly called Oſbernus Claudianus, Oſbern of Glouceſter, flouriſhed about the year 1140, and was alſo a monk of that abbey. He is ſaid to have been inſtructed, from his tender years, by the beſt maſters in eloquence, and in good arts; to have been a man more pure and elegant in the latin tongue than any perſon of his time. He was alſo ſkilled in philoſophy, and ſo excellent a divine, that he was worthy to be compared with the antients. The abbey obtained great honour on account of him, who was truly great and illuſtrious, and he inſtructed the monks in learning. He ſpent a great deal of time in writing books, which were eſteemed the chief ornament to the abbey; and 'twas apparent from his productions, that he uſed the moſt excellent philoſophers and divines, both greek and latin. He was very much eſteemed by abbat Hameline on account of his great learning, and was intimate with one Nicholas, who ſeems to have been afterwards abbat of St. Albans, whom he calls a man of ſound doctrine and excellent knowledge. Some of his works were wrote by way of dialogue, and ſome of them in a continued ſtile: of theſe he dedicated ſome to Gilbert, biſhop of Hereford, who was his laſt abbat; others to Hameline, who ſucceeded him. King Henry the Eighth took all his writings from the abbey library, and placed them in the royal one at London; among which was one dedicated to Hameline, called Panormia, being a kind of vocabulary or dictionary.

Robert of Glouceſter, who received his name from being a monk of this place, flouriſhed about 1263, and wrote a hiſtory of Britain from Brutus to ſome time in the reign of king Henry the Third, in the beſt verſe his times would afford. It is printed in black letter by Mr. Hearne, in two volumes octavo, 1724; and as his language, on account of the great diſtance between the time when he wrote and the preſent, is unintelligible to the readers of this age, without an interpreter; therefore the editor publiſhed a gloſſary to it.

John Raſtel, D.D. who died about 1600; Richard Caple, M.A. who was buried September 21, 1646; and John Corbet, B.D. who died 26th of December, 1680, were natives of this city, and very remarkable in the times in which they lived.

King Arviragus, (mentioned p. 82,) died about the year of Chriſt 74, in the 31ſt year of his reign, and was buried in a temple here, which he had dedicated in honour of the emperor Claudius, and wherein he ſacrificed every month.

Gildas Cambrius, in the ſame age with Martial, Horace, Silius, Statius, Stella, Juvenal, and ſeveral others, and but little inferior to any of them, ſeems to have been the ſon of ſome nobleman. Having been inſtructed in greek and latin by the beſt maſters, he became a great proficient in thoſe languages, and was the moſt excellent mathematician, rhetorician, hiſtorian, and poet of the age. He flouriſhed in the year 60, and died here with king Arviragus, to whom he was dear, and at whoſe intreaty he wrote ſeveral books.

King Lucius, who was truely a good man, and commended by his people, died and was buried here, on the 3d day of December, about the 12th year of his government. A monk of the abbey beſtowed theſe verſes on him inſtead of an epitaph:

Lucius in tenebris prius indola qui coluiſti,
Es merito celebris, ex quo baptiſma ſubiſti.
Cæleſtis medici merito curam meruiſti,
Omine fælici lotus baptiſmate Chriſti,

Concerning king Oſric, queen Kyneburg, queen Eadburg, and queen Eva, ſee an account of the abbey of St Peter's.

Prince Ethelred and his princeſs Alfled, ſometimes called Æthelfleda, and Elfleda, the founders of St. Oſwald's priory, are reported to have been buried in the eaſt porch of St. Peter's church; and afterwards, when the foundations were dug up, to make room for a new one, their bodies were found intire; and 'tis ſaid their looks were then as graceful as when alive. He died in 908; ſhe in 920. Huntingdon made the following verſes in praiſe of this warlike lady:

O Elfleda potens, ô terror virgo virorum,
Victrix naturæ, nomine digna viri.
Tu quoque ſplendidior fieres, natura puellam,
Te probitas fecit nomen habere viri,

Te mutare decet, ſed ſolam, nomina ſexus,
Tu regina potens, rexq; trophæa parans,
Jam nec Cæſarei tantum meruere triumphi.
Cæſare ſplendidior, virgo, virago, vale.

Which Peck *, in his Antiquities of Stanford, thus tranſlates:

O potent Elfleda! maid! men's terror!
You who did conquer nature's ſelf, worthy
The name of man! more beauteous nature form'd
A woman: But your valour ſhall ſecure
Man's higher name. For name you only need,
Not ſex, to change; unconquerable queen,
King rather, who ſuch trophies have obtain'd!
O virgin, and virago both, farewel!
No Cæſar yet ſuch triumphs hath deſerv'd
As you, than any of the Cæſars more renown'd.

King Athelſtan died here 6° Kal. Nov. 940 or 941; but was buried at Malmeſbury, Co. Wilts.

Matthias, brother of Jeffry Ridel, the king's chief juſtice, who was abbat of Peterborough, died and was buried here about the year 1104 or 1105. Perhaps the ſtone at the north-eaſt end of the body of the cathedral church, lying upon the ground, on the ſouth of Mr. Blackleech's monument, whereon was carved an abbat with his paſtoral ſtaff, and which was lately taken away, was deſigned for his memorial.

Duke Robert Curtois, or Shorthoſe, eldeſt ſon of king William the Firſt, after a long impriſonment of twenty ſeven years, at Cardiff caſtle, was honourably buried by the king's order, in the middle of the choir of the conventual church here, in the year 1134, and had a grave-ſtone over him, upon which was a croſs, now lately taken away. Over the grave-ſtone was his image in armour, carved in Iriſh oak, lying at length, croſs legged, to denote his having been in the holy war, with a ducal coronet on him, and a wire-latticé over the whole to preſerve it. This monument was made long ſince he was buried, and continued intire 'till 1641, when the ſoldiers broke it in pieces; but Sir Humphry Tracy, of Stanway, in this county, bought the pieces, and laid them up 'till the reſtoration, and then at his own charge cauſed the tomb to be repaired and beautified; a noble repreſentation of which is publiſhed in Sandford's Genealogical Hiſtory. This duke was a conſiderable benefactor to the abbey, and his brother king Henry the Firſt gave large poſſeſſions to it on his account.

Richard Fitz Giſlebert, a noble and amiable perſon, being killed by the Welch, was brought hither and buried 17° Kal. Maij, 1136.

Pain, a noble knight of great valour, being earneſtly in purſuit of the Welch, was mortally wounded, and brought hither to be buried.

Geofry Falebote, a ſtout and courageous knight, was killed by thoſe who lay in ambuſcade for the earl of Glouceſter, in his journey to Bath from this place; and being conveyed hither in September 1140, was here buried.

Aldred archbiſhop of York, concerning whom ſee St. Peter's abbey, is thought to have been buried in the cathedral, and the ſhelf-monument on the ſouth ſide of the choir, is generally ſuppoſed to have been erected for him.

Ralph de Maydeſton, biſhop of Hereford, reſigned that ſee in the year 1239, and retiring to St. Peter's abbey, took upon him the monaſtic habit, and was buried in the abbey church. Willis.

On the north ſide of the choir lies the unhappy king Edward the Second, who was very barbarouſly murdered at Berkeley caſtle, September 22, 1327, and brought hither by the abbat of St. Peter's. The common tradition is, that he was drawn by ſtags; for which reaſon there are ſeveral paintings of them round the pillars at each end of his tomb. After his body had been viewed by ſeveral perſons who were appointed for that purpoſe, tho' it was done by them only privately and ſuperficially, he was ſolemnly received by the town and monaſteries, and was decently, but privately, and without any funeral pomp , buried by the abbey, to which he had been a great benefactor §. His ſon king Edward the Third † erected a fine monument of alabaſter with his portraiture on it, a crown on his head, a ſceptre in his right hand, and a globe or mound in his left; and founded a chantry in the place where he was buried. There is a noble repreſentation of this monument in Sandford's Genealogical Hiſtory. 'Tis ſaid that miracles ‡ were wrought for him; and that therefore king Richard the Second propoſed to tranſlate him to ſome more honourable place: But of this ſtory every one may believe his proportion. Wolſtan, biſhop of Worceſter, kept the anniverſary || of this king's death, perſonally at Glouceſter, at the deſire of king Edward the Third.

The monument erected for the king was repaired in 1737 by Oriel college, who cauſed this inſcription [E. II. 1327] to be painted on the pillar at the eaſt end, ſeven ſtags on the eaſt pillar, and ſix ſtags on the pillar at the weſt end; incloſed it with iron rails, and put three plates on them. On that at the eaſt end is, Hoc fundatoris ſui monumentum, ſitu vetuſtatis deformatum, inſtaurari curaverunt Præpoſ. et Soc. Coll. Oriel, Oxon. A. D. 1737. On the next, The arms of king Edward the Second, with a crown over them.

* There are ſome variations in theſe verſes publiſhed by Peck, and alſo by Lloyd, in his Hiſtory of Wales. In the third line, inſtead of fieret, they have it fecit. For ſolam in the fifth line, they have ſolum; and in the ſeventh line, Lloyd has mirere triumphas, inſtead of meruere triumphi.

 It is affirmed in a MS. now in my cuſtody, that the expences of this king's funeral amounted to no more than nineteen ſhillings and ſome odd pence.

On the third, The arms of Oriel college. This repair coſt the college forty pounds.

The following perſons, according to Leland, were buried in the abbey chapter houſe, and moſt of them had inſcriptions for them written on the walls.

Roger de Lacy, earl of Hereford.

Walter de Lacy *.

Roger, earl of Hereford.

Roger the ſon of Milo, earl of Hereford, took upon him a religious habit in this abbey, and died in 1154.

Richard Strongbow, ſon of Gilbert earl of Pembroke, who was inſtrumental in ſubduing Ireland, died upon the nones of April, in 1176.

Paganus de Cadurcis, or Chaworth, in the reign of king Henry the Third, who married Gundred, the daughter of William Brewere, a great baron of that time.

Adam de Cadurcis, or Chaworth.

Bernard of New Market, or Newmarch.

Philip de Foye, knight.

Hugh de Portu.

Elias Giffard.

The lady Strongbow, counteſs of Pembroke, was buried in abbat Parker's chapel, where, in making a tomb for him, they found a croſs wrapped in a bull's hide.

Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford, Warwick, and Arundel, and one of the twelve who governed the realm in the time of king Henry the Third, lies on the ſouth-ſide of the cathedral, behind the choir, with his wife. Over them is now to be ſeen an antient ſtone mural monument, with their particulars on it.

As to what is ſaid of king Edmund Ironſide's dying and being buried here, by Knighton; of Richard, the youngeſt ſon of king William the Firſt, being buried here in 1080, by the Memorial of Glouceſter; of a tomb near the altar erected for Iſabel, queen to king Edward the Second, by Sir Robert Atkyns; much credit cannot be given to any of theſe relations.

Further accounts of burials and monumental inſcriptions may be ſeen under the following heads, Government and Officers, St. Peter's Abbey, Biſhops, Deans, &c. and in the hiſtory of the ſeveral pariſh-churches within the city, to which the reader is referred.

Of the PUBLIC SCHOOLS, CHARITIES, WORKHOUSE, &c.

THERE was a grammar-ſchool in old Smith-ſtreet, on this account called the School-houſe-lane, given, as appears by the Monaſticon, by king Henry the Second to the priory of Lanthony; the maſters whereof antiently received 40 den. per quarter, or 2 ſol. for each child. But 11° H. 4. only 12 den. In 1535, this houſe lay void. The priory had let it for 13*s.* 4*d.* a year, and it is ſaid in R. Cole's Roll to have been ſometime in the holding of Sir William Chaplain, the ſchoolmaſter, in the reign of Henry the Sixth. 'Tis very probable that one Haymo, a ſecular prieſt, whom Bale calls Haymo Gloceſtrius, was maſter of this ſchool about 1160, for he was a native of, and chief ſchoolmaſter at Glouceſter, and accounted the moſt learned man of his time. Roger occurs rector of the ſchools in Glouceſter, September 29, 1209. Andrew Horne, who was very ſtudious in the antiquities of this place, and compiled an excellent work intituled, The Chronicle of Gloſter, flouriſhed in the reign of king Edward the Firſt, and Bale expreſſly ſays he was a ſcholar of this place.

The free grammar-ſchool of St. Mary de Crypt, ſtanding upon the weſt part of St. Mary's churchyard, was, in purſuance of the laſt will of alderman John Cook, dated May 11, 1528, erected by his widow Joan Cook, who is ſaid in an old book in the cuſtody of the city, to have taken the ring and mantle after her huſband's death, and thereupon became a lady. She, on the 11th of January, 31° H. 8. by indenture of three parts, between herſelf, the mayor and burgeſſes of Glouceſter, and the bailiffs and citizens of Worceſter, veſted in the ſaid mayor and burgeſſes, her manor, meſſuages and lands, &c. in Poddeſmede, Hempſtead, Elmore, Bageworth and Bentley, with the county of the ſaid town of Glouceſter; lands and tenements in Brockworth, Stonehouſe, Ebley, Oxlinch, Standyſh, Weſtbury, and Claxhill, Com. Glouc. to provide, with the rents of Poddeſmede, Hempſtede, and Elmore, an honeſt and well learned ſchoolmaſter, for this ſchool, to be choſen by the mayor, recorder, and two ſenior aldermen; the maſter to receive a yearly ſtipend of ten pounds, if a prieſt, and nine pounds, if a layman. The mayor, recorder, the two ſenior aldermen, the two ſheriffs, the town-clerk, the four ſtewards, the ſword-bearer, the four ſerjeants at mace, and the five porters of the gates, covenant herein to ſurvey the ſchool once every year between Eaſter and Whitſuntide, and cauſe the neceſſary reparations to be made. For the trouble of doing which, the mayor is to have 4*s.* the recorder 3*s.* 4*d.* each alderman 2*s.* each ſheriff 20*d.* the town-clerk 16*d.* each of the ſtewards and the ſword-bearer 12*d.* every ſerjeant 8*d.* and each porter 4*d.*

The rents of the lands and tenements in Glouceſter, Badgeworth, Bentham, and Brockworth are to pay to the poor people of the hoſpital of

* He gave his lands at Dean to the monks of this abbey, and being founder of the church of St. Peter in Hereford, when that work was almoſt finiſhed, climbing up a ladder there, he fell down, and being killed by the fall, 6 Kal. Apr. 1084, was buried in the chapter-houſe at Glouceſter. And Emeline his wife gave to the church of Glouceſter for the health of his ſoul, five hides of land at Dunteſbourne. His ſon Walter was a monk of the abbey Dug. Bar. v. 1, p. 95.

The rents of the lands and tenements in Stonehouſe, Ebley, Oxlinch, Standiſh, Weſtbury, and Claxhill, to the yearly value of 5*l.* are to be laid out on the Weſt-bridge and cauſey, between Glouceſter and Over.

Alderman Lawrence Wilſhire, in 1611, gave 100*l.* for the eſtabliſhment of an uſher in the ſchool; and George Townſend, eſq; in 1683, gave two perpetual exhibitions for the maintenance of two ſcholars at Pembroke college, in Oxford, for eight years, to be elected by the mayor, ſix ſenior aldermen, and the chief ſchoolmaſter.

The rents of the eſtate given by lady Cook being greatly advanced, the maſter of the ſchool now receives 30*l.* a year, and the uſher 16*l.* The bailiff, aldermen, and chamberlain of the city of Worceſter are appointed by the founder as truſtees, to ſee that the mayor and burgeſſes of Glouceſter ſurvey the ſchool, for which they have a ſmall annuity; and if the latter at any time neneglect to perform the duties of their truſt, they forfeit 10*l.* to the corporation of Worceſter for every default.

The corporation of Worceſter have viſited the ſchool ſeveral times, particularly on the 12th of September, 1728, Mr. Weſton, (the mayor) with four aldermen, &c. after twenty years abſence, made their viſitation, and inſpected the accounts of what was given to this ſchool, and St. Bartholomew's hoſpital, by lady Cook.

Mr. William Maſſinger, to whom with ſeveral other perſons many feoffments had been made by alderman John Cook, for the purpoſes beforementioned, endeavoured to get all the lands and premiſſes for his own uſe; but by a decree in chancery, made February 12, 5° E. 6. and exemplified the 7th of May following, Maſſinger was obliged to deliver up to the corporation all the evidences, &c. belonging thereto.

Charity-ſchool and Work-houſe.

Timothy Nourſe, eſq; was the founder of this charity, towards which he gave 100*l. per ann.* for ever, which has been applied to the ſupport of it. In the firſt ſeſſion of parliament 1° Annæ, 1702, an act was paſſed for incorporating the mayor, three aldermen, and twenty-four others, to be called the governors, deputy-governors, and guardians of the poor of the city of Glouceſter, for the better providing for, and ſetting to work the poor of the ſaid city; which act was to take effect from the 7th day of April then next following.

Sometime after this, the corporation of the city granted to Mr. Francis Yate a leaſe of part of the eaſt-gate for the poor-ſchool, and alſo the old horſe-pool there, at a ſmall rent.

In the Account of Charity-ſchools in England, in the years 1707, and 1709, particular mention is made of this having been opened at Glouceſter, with ſubſcriptions ſufficient for the ſupport of ſixty children, with a fair allowance for the maſter and miſtreſs. And in that of 1711, 'tis ſaid, that eighty-five children were taught in this ſchool, and that ſeventy boys were cloathed the laſt chriſtmas.

Alderman John Hyett died Feb. 27, 1711, and gave 100*l.* to this ſchool, and ordered by his will, if his ſon Joſeph ſhould die before the age of twenty-one years, 1000*l.* more for building a new charity-ſchool and work-houſe, and 400*l.* for a ſtipend for the maſter. This Joſeph Hyett died in 1713, in the twenty-firſt year of his age, and left a further ſum of 1500*l.* for the ſupport and maintenance of this charity.

Sir John Powell alſo gave 20*l.* Mr. William Allen 20*l.* and Mrs. Dorothy Cocks 20*l. per ann.* which are all applied to this uſe. And the corporation of the city, deſirous of promoting a charity which promiſed ſo fair for the general good, granted a leaſe of the New-Bear Inn, which was large and commodious, for forty-one years, to the governor and guardians, reſerving a chief-rent of 40*s. per ann.* renewable every fourteen years at a fine certain of 37*l.* 10*s.* for the erecting of a work-houſe for all the pariſhes belonging to the city, the fitting up of which coſt about 600*l.*

In the year 1727, an act was obtained for repealing part of the former act, and appointing a governor, a deputy-governor, a treaſurer, and ſix ſpecial aſſiſtants, who were to continue in their office for two years. The mayor, five ſenior aldermen, the biſhop, the dean, the chancellor, the arch-deacon, the ſub-dean, and the treaſurer, all reſpectively for the time being; and thirty-one perſons to be choſen out of the ſeveral pariſhes in the city, and the precincts of the college, were to be, and to continue in their office for ſix years, and with thoſe before-mentioned, and ſome few others ſince dead, to be incorporated by the name of the Governor and Guardians of the poor of the city of Glouceſter.

But the powers of the governors and guardians were ſo circumſcribed by the fore-mentioned acts, that, together with the intereſt of the ſeveral ſums that had been given to the charity, they could not raiſe money ſufficient for the maintenance of the poor, on account of their great increaſe, and the dearneſs of proviſions; ſo that they not only ſpent ſome of the principal money, but contracted a debt of 830*l.* 8*s.* 8*d.* and were obliged, about May, 1757, to ſhut up the work-houſe, and ſend the poor to their reſpective pariſhes. But in the year 1764, another act of parliament was procured, by which the mayor, the five ſenior aldermen, the right reverend the biſhop, the reverend the dean, the worſhipful the chancellor, the reverend the archdeacon, and the reverend the ſub-dean and treaſurer of the cathedral church of Glouceſter for the time being; the ſurviving truſtees of Mr. Nourſe's will; and ſuch as have been, and ſhall be elected to ſucceed them; thirty-one perſons to be choſen out of the pariſhes in the city, and precincts of the cathedral, together with ſuch as ſhall be elected guardians on account of their donations to the poor, ſhall be one body politick and corporate, by the name aforeſaid, with power to make bye-laws. The laſt mentioned thirty one perſons to continue in their office only one year, unleſs re-elected.

Theſe guardians, or any nine or more of this corporation, ſhall meet annually on the ſecond Thurſday in June, or within ſeven days afterwards, and elect by vote out of themſelves, one governor, one deputy governor, one receiver or treaſurer, and ſix ſpecial aſſiſtants, who ſhall continue in their office for one whole year, and until ſuch time as others ſhall be choſen to ſucceed them.

The guardians are to aſcertain what money will be neceſſary for the maintenance of the poor, which muſt be certified to the mayor, and levied by the churchwardens and overſeers of the poor of the reſpective pariſhes, &c. which ſums may exceed by one third part what the reſpective pariſhes paid in any one year of the five laſt preceeding the paſſing of this act. They are alſo empowered to aſcertain what further ſums of money are neceſſary to be raiſed by each pariſh, to diſcharge the expences of this act, and to pay the ſaid debt of 830*l.* 8*s.* 8*d.* and for replacing the principal money ſpent as aforeſaid, and alſo for erecting of lamps to inlighten the city from the 29th of September to the 21ſt of March annually.

Benefactors and Benefactions.

John Fawkener, alderman, and thrice mayor of this city, by his will, dated September 18, 1545, beſides 50*l.* bequeathed by him for the repairing the highways and bridges near this city, gave to the mayor and burgeſſes all his lands and tenements, which were very conſiderable here, and at Wotton and other places in this neighbourhood.

Sir Thomas Bell, beſides the 10*l. per ann.* and other charities and gifts, (ſee bridges) gave to the poor and priſons about the city, 6*l.* 10*s. per ann.*

Rowland Atkinſon, ſometime ſheriff of this city, by his will dated November 20, 1600, gave to the mayor and burgeſſes all his poſſeſſions in the city, which were eight houſes.

William Holliday, a native of this city, and afterwards an alderman of London, by his will, dated December 16, 1623, gave 500*l.* wherewith, by the direction of his relict, afterwards counteſs of Warwick, lands were purchaſed of the clear yearly value of 30*l*; which money is now expended in apprenticing out ſix boys yearly, according to the direction of the lord keeper in 1628.

Leonard Tarne, alderman of this city, by his will, dated November 3, 1632, gave 4*l.* a year iſſuing out of Monk-leighton, near this city, to be diſtributed to 40 poor people, half yearly.

Sarah Browne, by her will dated October 8, 1643, gave ſeveral houſes in this city, worth 20*l.* a year, for apprenticing out three boys, who are to have 4*l.* a piece.

John Powel, alderman of this city, December 13, 1649, gave 100*l.* with the intereſt of which one boy is annually placed out apprentice.

John Morris gave 10*l.* that 13*s.* 4*d.* as the intereſt of it, ſhould be yearly beſtowed on the poor.

Joan Goldſtone, by her will, dated September 8, 1578, gave 20*l.* to remain as a perpetual ſtock for the proviſion of fewel for the poor.

Dame Eleanor Fettiplace, in 1625, gave 40*l.* for a ſtock for them; and now 70*l.* is allowed for a ſtock to provide them with coal, at 10*s.* a ton.

The following ſums of money were given to the city, to be diſpoſed of as the wills and deeds of the donors direct, viz.

Thomas Glouceſter, eſq; in 1446, gave 500 marks.

Sir Thomas White, Lord mayor of London, in 1554, gave to twenty three places *, whereof Glouceſter is one, 100*l. per ann.* clear, to be lent for ten years to poor clothiers, and to continue in the ſame order of ſucceſſion for ever. Glouceſter began to receive it in 1581, ſo that 900*l.* has already been paid to this city at nine payments.

John Haydon, alias Holden, alderman, and one of the ſheriffs of London, deceaſing in the year of his office, 1583, gave to this city 100*l.* to be lent to poor young tradeſmen, at the rate of 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d. per ann.* which was to be diſpoſed of for the relief of priſoners and poor people. Stow.

Mr. Giles Cox, in 1620, gave 100*l.*

Mr. Willis gave 10*l.*

Several donations were but for terms, and upon conditions, which have long ſince expired; particularly thoſe of Mr. Richard Pates, the recorder, Mr. Robert Pettifer, alderman Jaſper Clutterbuck, and alderman Thomas Pury.

Some are quite loſt, as Iſabel Wytherington's 2*l. per ann.* notwithſtanding ſeveral of the poſſeſſions did, for many generations before, belong to this corporation.

'Tis very probable that the city derived many of the poſſeſſions it now enjoys from the gifts of Robert Banks, and alderman William Jordan, in 1545; of Alice Barker, in 1562; of William Golſton, in 1569; of William Saunders, in 1570; of Agnes Nevowe, 37° Eliz. and ſome others. Theſe poſſeſſions, together with the rents of aſſize, langable or ground rents for purpreſtures or incroachments; what the corporation have purchaſed, and what have been granted to, and given them by the crown and other perſons, from time to time, with other accidental advantages and acquiſitions, have rendered them a very wealthy body; inſomuch that the revenues which are in the diſpoſal of the magiſtracy, including thoſe which ſupport the government of the city, and the charitable uſes, were eſtimated to be worth 60000*l.* more than half a century ago, and have, ſince that time, been very conſiderably improved.

* This donation of 100*l.* clear, and 4*l.* more to be paid on St. Bartholomew's day yearly, at Merchant-taylors hall in London, by the corporation of Briſtol, is to be diſpoſed of to the undermentioned places as they ſucceed each other in the following table:

Of

Of Saint PETER's ABBEY, and the ABBATS, &c. of that MONASTERY.

WULPHERE, the firſt chriſtian king of Mercia, is ſaid to have begun, and Ethelred his brother and ſucceſſor, who was afterwards monk and abbat of Bardney, to have carried on, and finiſhed, a monaſtery here, to the honour of St. Peter, about the year of Chriſt 680[a], 681[b], or 682[c], chiefly by the care of Oſric, ſometimes called[d] Oſhere, Oſtric, or Hoſtric, his nephew, and at that time his viceroy of the Wiccij, but afterwards king of Northumberland. Oſric having received from the king[e] the vill of Glouceſter, with ſeveral lands, and a large ſum of money, to [f]found and endow this monaſtery, faithfully diſcharged the truſt repoſed in him, and by the advice of Boſil, firſt biſhop of Worceſter, taking in nuns[g], made his own ſiſter Kyneburg, or Kenburg, the wife[h] of Alred, king of Northumberland, the firſt abbeſs. Juſt after her conſecration, he veſted all the lands which he had received, with very great addition to them, in the monaſtery, to which he alſo granted many conſiderable privileges. Kyneburg continued in her office twenty-nine years; and dying, was buried in St. Petronille's chapel, where her brother Oſric, who died 729, was firſt interred, but he was afterwards removed into that of Our Lady; and in abbat Parker's time, was laid under a fair monument of free-ſtone, upon which were his arms, on the north ſide of the high altar; at the foot of which againſt the wall the following inſcription is now remaining: Oſricus Rex, primus fundator hujus Monaſterii, 681.

Eadburg[i], or Eilburg, who had been wife of Wolphere, king of Mercia, was conſecrated to ſucceed Kyneburg; and governing the nunnery prudently and religiouſly for twenty-five years, was buried by Wilfrid, biſhop of Worceſter, next to her predeceſſor. After her came

Eva, ſometime wife of Ethelred, king of the Mercians; or of Wolphere, ſon of king Penda; who, after ſhe had increaſed the income of the monaſtery, and procured the confirmation of former donations in many ſynods, died in the thirty-third[k] year of her government, anno 768[l]; and was buried next her predeceſſor.. With her died the office of abbeſs; for afterwards, in the wars between king Egbert and the king of Mercia, the nuns were raviſhed and forced to depart, and the monaſtery became deſolate, and continued ſo 'till[m] 821; when Beornulph, or Bernulph, king of Mercia, repaired it, and beſtowed part of the poſſeſſions towards the maintenance of ſecular prieſts, whom he had here inſtituted.

King Burgred, in the year[n] 862, confirmed to theſe the lands which the kings Ethelred, Ethelbald, Offa, and Kenwolf, and other perſons had given: and by the conſent of his great council exempted the monaſtery, with its appurtenances and dependents, from all ſecular ſervice. But in the year[o] 1022, king Canute, at the inſtigation of Wolſtan, biſhop of Worceſter, having turned out the ſeculars, made them give place to monks of the order of Saint Benedict.

The governor and inhabitants of Glouceſter were ſo averſe to monks at firſt, that Wolphin or Ulfine le Rue[p], or Lehue, who was then conſul, or chief governor, and a lord of great puiſſance, ſlew ſeven of them, not far from the town, in 1033; but the pope ſoon afterwards obliged him to attone for his offence by giving Churcham and Highnam for the maintenance of ſeven monks in Saint Peter's abbey. 'tis ſaid king Ulpher or Wolpher, in 672, laid the foundation of the monaſtery, and dying, left the finiſhing thereof to his brother Æthelred, his ſucceſſor in the kingdom of Mercia, having appointed him to take care of that work. Leland in his Itinerary, V. 4, ſays, that Oſric built it with licence. And he is ever reputed to be the founder of this great nunnery, and was eſteemed as ſuch, as appears by the inſcription for him mentioned in this account. According to ſome, there was a monaſtery here before the nunnery erected by Oſric; for ſeveral ſcholars upon the interdict made againſt the Pelagians for their hereſy, fled to the monaſtery here; but 'tis likely the firſt that was endowed here was founded by him.

monks was not fully compleated 'till [q] Aldred, biſhop of Worceſter, afterwards archbiſhop of York, in 1058, pulling down the decayed old church, which ſtood near the infirmary, built a fine new one at ſome diſtance from it, nearer the walls of the town, dedicated it to St. Peter, and gave rules to the Benedictines. Aldred took from this church the manors of Lech, Odinton, Standiſh and Berton, and appropriated them to the church of York; but they were afterwards publickly reſtored to this monaſtery by archbiſhop Thomas, in the chapter-houſe at Glouceſter, in the year 1095, who then ſtriking his breaſt, blamed himſelf for having detained them ſo long.

ABBATS of SAINT PETER's.

Edric [r], who before was one of the ſecular prieſts, and upon the introduction of monks, took upon him their habit, was, by biſhop Wolſtan, appointed the firſt abbat in 1022. By his naming himſelf abbat in Eldenham, or Ealdanhame, which ſignifies old place, he ſeems to allude to that antient monaſtery pulled down by the biſhop; for the abbey was exceedingly decayed 'till Aldred erected a new one; and this of Aldred's was then expreſſly called Newminſter [or Monaſtery,] in order to diſtinguiſh it from the former building; or perhaps, when he ſo called himſelf, Aldred's foundation was not then fully eſtabliſhed. Edric preſiding over the abbey for thirty-ſeven years, died in 1058, when the church was endowed and fully eſtabliſhed by Aldred: and having [s] alienated ſeveral of the poſſeſſions of the abbey, and departing from it, was not buried [t] therein.

Wilſtan [u], a monk of Worceſter, kinſman [w] to biſhop Aldred, was the ſame year, by the king's leave, conſtituted abbat by biſhop [x] Aldred. He died in 1072, in his journey towards Jeruſalem, and was at length [y] buried under the yew-tree in the plot in the midſt of the cloiſters, becauſe he had waſted the goods and poſſeſſions of the monaſtery.

Serlo [z], or Serlus, a monk of Saint Michael's in Normandy, and chaplain to king William the Firſt, 4 kal. September, 1072, was, by the advice and mind of St. Oſmond, promoted by the king to the governance of this abbey, which at that time was in great decay, and was then reputed but of little eſteem. He was a perſon of a very eminent character, and by the indefatigable labours of himſelf and Odo, the cellarer, procured very great donations to the abbey. At his entrance into his office he found here not above three [a], ſome ſay two [b] monks of perfect age, and eight ſcholars, or youths; tho' at his death he left 100 monks in it. June 29, 1089, he began [c] the foundation of a new church, the firſt ſtone whereof was laid by Robert biſhop of Hereford; and being finiſhed, was dedicated with great ſolemnity on the ides of July, 1100, by Sampſon biſhop of Worceſter, Gundulf biſhop of Rocheſter, and Serenus, (called Henricus in the Monaſticon) biſhop of Bangor. In 1101 [d], or 1102 [e], the town with the abbey was burnt, and 'tis probable this church eſcaped better than that, which in 1088 [f], was burnt with the monaſtery. King William the Conqueror [g], in the twentieth year of his reign, keeping his chriſtmas at Glouceſter, royally repaired and increaſed this monaſtery, being very much decayed. And Serlo having obtained [h] from him and his two ſons, king William the Second, and Henry the Firſt, and other noblemen, freedoms, lands, liberties and confirmations of the grants to this abbey, made by their ſeveral patents, died [i] the 5th nones of March, 1104, in or about the 68th year of his age; and was buried under a fair marble tomb on the ſouth ſide of the preſbytery. His intimate friend, Godfrey, prior of Wincheſter, made the following verſes for him.

Eccleſiæ murus cecidit, Serlone cadente,
Virtutis gladius, buccina juſtitiæ;
Vera loquens, en non vanis ſermonibus utens,
Et quos corripuit; principibus placuit,
Judicium præceps; contrarius ordinis, error,
Et levitas morum, non placuere ſibi.
Tertius a Jano menſis, lux tertia menſis,
Cum nece ſuppreſſum, vita levavit eum.

A great deal is ſaid in praiſe of him by Malmeſbury, from whom Bale has taken his character. Cent. 13, p. 136.

Saint Arild the virgin, martyr'd at Kington, near Thornbury, at whoſe tomb 'tis ſaid many miracles were wrought, was tranſlated hither in his time. In 1100, Haraldus, lord of Ewyas, gave the church of S. Michael, and other poſſeſſions at Ewyas, for the eſtabliſhment of a priory there; but as the income thereof was inſufficient, and this abbey had, for ſome years, to their great charge, maintained a prior and one or two monks; in 1358 [k], the biſhop of St. David's, with the conſent of his chapter, of Roger de la Warre, lord of Ewias, and of Walter de Monmouth, diſſolved that priory, and united it to the abbey of Glouceſter.

Peter [l], the prior of the abbey, became abbat in the nones of Auguſt, 1104. He encompaſſed the [m] abbey with an excellent ſtone-wall, by the aſſent and aſſiſtance of king Henry the Firſt, and greatly enriched the convent with a collection of valuable books. King Stephen [n] confirmed by his charter the donations made to the abbey; and this abbat, after ſeven years and a half's governance, died on the 16th of the kal. of July, or Auguſt, 1113. Upon his death

William Godemon [o], or Godemor, the prior, was promoted to the abbey; and having obtained great donations to it, and a licence to appoint his ſucceſſor, reſigned in 1130. Retiring to St. Paternum, in Wales, he died on the 3d nones of March, ſays Willis; but according to Mr. Wharton, 3d ides of July, the year after his reſignation. On the [p] 8th ides of March, or May 8, 1122 [q], when the monks were ſinging maſs, and the deacon began the goſpel, the tower was ſet on fire by lightning, and the whole monaſtery was burnt, ſo that all the valuable things therein were deſtroyed, except a few books, and three prieſts veſtments.

Walter de Lacy [r], brother to the founder, or according to ſome, the principal benefactor to Lanthony in Wales, being of the blood-royal of England, was promoted by abbat Godemor, whoſe chaplain he was, and received the benediction from Simon biſhop of Worceſter, on the 3d nones of Auguſt, 1130. At the petition of himſelf and ſome of the nobles, in 1138, king Stephen, by his charter, confirmed the donations made to this abbey. He died on the [s] 6th of the ides of February, 1139, and was buried by Reinaldus, abbat of Eveſham, and Roger, abbat of Tewkeſbury. Hugh Fitz-William [t], the Norman, whoſe family afterwards aſſumed the ſirname of Kilpeck, in 1134, gave to the abbey the priory of Kilpeck, in Herefordſhire, dedicated to St. David. It ſtood from the caſtle [u] above a quarter of a mile.

Gilbert Foliot [w], or Folieth, or Folioth, ſometime a Cluniac monk of Burgundy, being prebendary of Newington, in the cathedral of St. Paul's, London, received the benediction [x] from Robert biſhop of Hereford, on Whitſunday the 3d of the ides of June, 1139, or, as 'tis ſaid, was inſtalled [y] on the 11th of the ides of June, 1139. Upon abbat Lacy's death, [z] two of the monks of this abbey were ſent to Gilbert, who was deſigned for abbat; and king Stephen having heard of his excellent probity, at the requeſt of Milo, earl of Hereford, whoſe kinſman Foliot was, granted the government of the abbey to Foliot. In 1148 [a], he was removed to the biſhoprick of Hereford; and thence he was tranſlated to that of London, being a very learned man and a great writer, as may be ſeen in Bale and Godwin [b]. Upon Foliot's removal to Hereford, Hameline; the ſub-prior was elected the [c] 6th of the calends of October, 1148, and received the benediction from Simon biſhop of Worceſter, on the nones of December. This abbat went to Rome to defend the rights of his monaſtery againſt the archbiſhop of York, who claimed the manors of Leck, Oddington, Standiſh, and Barton, as pertaining to the archbiſhoprick, tho' his predeceſſor Thomas had reſtored them to the abbey, after the time was expired for which they were mortgaged; and obtained ſuch ſucceſs in the affair, that the biſhops of Chicheſter and Lincoln [d], to whom this diſpute was referred by pope Eugenius, adjudged it on the behalf of the abbey, and king Stephen confirmed it; but in 1157, this abbey, for preventing any future controverſy, gave to the archbiſhoprick of York, Oddington, Condicote, and Shurdington, with certain lands; and the archbiſhop, with the aſſent of his chapter, and a general ſynod, renounced all claim to the other particulars. Pope Alexander III, by his bull dated 4th ides of July, in or about the year 1164, confirmed [e] this agreement, and ſays, The controverſy about this matter was agitated before his predeceſſor Adrian, who appointed the biſhops of Saliſbury and Bath to act as his delegates in this matter. He died on the [f] 6th of the ides of March, 1179; in whoſe time very conſiderable donations were made [g] to the abbey. On the 5th of the ides of May [h] the abbey was again burnt.

Thomas Carbonel [i], or Carbonach, prior of St. Cuthlack's, or Guthlac's, near Hereford, was inſtalled the 15th of the cal. of October, 1179, and died the 21ſt of July, 1205. The abbey and great part of the town was burnt in 1204. After him,

Henry Blont, or Blond, the prior, [k] received the benediction from Maugre biſhop of Worceſter, September 29, 1205; and was inſtalled the 6th of the ides, or nones, of October. In 1222, he began to rebuild [l] the tower of the church, which fell down, and committed the management thereof to Helias the ſacriſt. And the ſame year, with the abbat of St. Albans, was [m] appointed a preſident of the chapter of the benedictines at Berrmondſey. The abbey was twice deſtroyed [a] by lightning during his government, viz. in 1214, and in 1223. He died the 10th of the kalends of September, 1224, and was ſucceeded by Thomas de Bredone [o], or Breden, the prior, who received the benediction at Worceſter, October 7, 1224. This abbat [p] died in 1228.

Henry Foliot [q], or Foleth, or Folet, prior of the cell at Bromfield, ſucceeding, received the benediction from William de Blois, biſhop of Worceſter, in 1228. He was a great benefactor to the abbey, and built a handſome tower in 1237; two years after which he made an aqueduct to ſerve the convent with water; he likewiſe vaulted part of the church; and ſometime before his death began a new tower at the weſt end. In 1230 [r], or 1231 [s], he appointed twenty marks yearly out of the church of Newport, in Glamorganſhire, for the charity of the abbey, in French wine and waſtel. About 1236 [t], for 30 marks, he granted to the burgeſſes of the town, the free common for their cattle, between the bridge of Glouceſter and old Leden; and Common in Preſtham, and all the meadows of the abbat beyond Severn, on the weſt ſide, after the hay was carried off, except the meadows belonging to foreign manors. Ralph de Willington [u], and Olympias, his wife, having at their own charges built our lady's [v] chapel, in the church-yard of St. Peter's, for two foreign prieſts, and a clerk to attend them; and erected a houſe within the precincts of the abbey for their habitation, the abbey received lands to the yearly value of 8*l.* 7*s.* for their maintenance and ſupport, whereupon the abbat and convent, extolling their extraordinary liberality to the abbey, particularly in this gift, covenant with them to keep all the buildings in good repair, and allow the chaplains a ſufficient corrody; that every year on the day of Ralph's death this agreement ſhall be read before the brethren; and he, Olympias, and all their anceſtors and ſucceſſors, in a full chapter, ſhall be abſolved to be partakers of all the good works done in the abbey, and in the churches pertaining to them; that on the day of his death the ſervice ſhall be performed as fully as for a monk, and that yearly; and that this agreement might continue inviolable, the convent in full chapter pronounced the bleſſing of God to all thoſe that keep it; and his curſe, as far as they ſay lay in their power, to the violaters thereof. The abbey, under their common ſeal, confirmed and gave this agreement to Ralph; and Ralph ſealed and gave another part to the abbey, to be kept by them. Tho' this chapel [x], we are told, was finiſhed in 1227, yet the agreement concerning it was made by abbat Foliet and the convent. This abbat died on the ides of July, 1243, And Walter de St. John [y], the prior, received the benediction at Baſinger, on the 4th of the nones of October, and dying the ſame year, upon the day whereon he was to have been inſtalled,

John de Felda [z], or De la Felde, the precentor, received the benediction Dec. 6, 1243, and was inſtalled on the 12th following. He finiſhed the weſt tower on the ſouth part of the front, and in 1246, pulled down the old refectory, and began a new one. In 1251 [a], the abbey became indebted to the value of 3000 marks. The biſhop of Worceſter, to whom they had applied for relief, excluded and forbade the reception of ſtrangers, and retrenched the hoſpitality of the abbey. The abbat died the 6th of the kalends of April, 1263, and was ſucceeded by his chaplain,

Reginald de Homme [b], or Hamme, who was inſtalled the ſame year on the Sunday after the feaſt of St. Peter and St. Paul. At his entrance he [c] found the abbey in debt 1500 marks, by loſſes and misfortunes, which he could not repay, tho' he was in ſome meaſure relieved by king Edward the Firſt [d], who, in 1272, took the abbey into his protection, and appointed a commiſſioner that might take care for the obſervance of his grant, and keep all perſons from damaging or moleſting the abbey. And afterwards, the ſame king rebuilt a gate on the ſouth ſide of the abbey, which is now called by his name, but before was ſtiled Lich-gate. In 1264 [e], this abbat, together with the biſhop of Worceſter, procured a truce to be made between the barons that were in the town of Glouceſter, and prince Edward, the king's ſon, who had taken the caſtle from the barons. And in 1274, being proctor of the whole dioceſe of Worceſter, by ſpecial order from the pope, the biſhop of Worceſter being by infirmity detained at home, he was at the council of Lyons, and died on the ides of Sept. 1284. In 1283 [f], John Giffard, baron of Brimsfield, built Glouceſter college in Oxford for thirteen monks, whom he choſe out of this convent, to be improved in learning; and on the feaſt of St. John the evangeliſt, in the preſence, ſence, and agreeable to the will of Giffard, abbat Homme was introduced into it. Other monaſteries of Benedictines afterwards partook of the benefit of this houſe; and their lodgings were called agreeable to their names. That part called Glouceſter lodgings, as appears by the arms of the abbey at the entrance thereof, ſtill remains, and is the habitation of the provoſt of this houſe, which has lately changed its name of Glouceſter college, afterwards Glouceſter-hall, into Worceſter college. This abbey was obliged to maintain three or four of their monks here, and allowed each of them 15 marks per ann. The church of Chipping-Norton[g], co. Oxon, was appropriated for their ſuſtenance. This Reginald de Hamme appears to be the firſt abbat of this church, who was ſummoned to parliament, and that was, for the firſt time, according to Dugdale, 49° H. 3.

John Gamages[h], or de Gamages, or Gag, prior of St. Cuthlacks, a perſon very religious, and of an honourable family, upon de Homme's death, was inſtalled on St. Andrew's day, 1284, and confirmed Nov. the 20th following. In 1303[i], abbat Gamages pulled down the old dormitory, and began a new one, which was finiſhed by his ſucceſſor in 1313. On July 16, 34° Edw. 1.[k] in conſideration of a fine paid to the king, he obtained a charter for regulating the vacancies of the abbey, by which the abbey was granted to the prior and convent, to be the keepers of it 'till the abbat elected had received the temporalties. For every vacancy, whether it continued four months or not, they were to pay 200 marks; and if it continued longer than that time, to pay according to that rate. In 1298[l], on the morrow after St. Barnabas, William de Brok, a monk, afterwards prior of this abbey, was an inceptor in divinity, under the chancellor of Oxford, and was the firſt Benedictine monk in England who took the degree of doctor in it. At his veſpers Lawrence Honſum, S.T.B. a monk of this place, was reſpondent; and at his inception were the abbat, with his monks, priors, obedientiaries, clerks, eſquires, and ſeveral noblemen, to the number of 100 in all; the abbats of Weſtminſter, Redynge, Abendon, Eveſham, Malmeſbury, many priors and monks, with divers rewards and exerciſes. All other prelates almoſt of the whole province of Canterbury of this order, who were abſent, ſent exerciſes; and ſo this inception was finiſhed to the honour of this abbey, and of the whole order. About the feaſt of St. Hillary[m], 1305, this abbat made a ſumptuous feaſt in the great hall in the court of the abbey, when the king's juſtices ſat at Glouceſter upon the inquiſition of Traylbaſton. There were 30 knights, the priors of Lanthony and St. Oſwald, with other eccleſiaſticks, and many of the more honourable perſons of the whole county, at this entertainment, which was ſo well managed, that the juſtices and other barons preſent expreſſed their higheſt approbation of it. On Epiphany day[n], 1300, a ſudden fire ſurrounded the monaſtery, and conſumed the cloiſter, belfry, and the great chamber, with other buildings adjoining. This abbat having, by his frugal management[o], brought the abbey out of debt, and increaſed their ſtock of ſheep to 10,000, after he had lived[p] ſixty-two years a monk of the convent, over which he had preſided as abbat twenty-three, he died 15 kal. May, 1307, and was buried with great honour, by the biſhop of Worceſter, being attended by ſeveral abbats to his grave, without the choir near the door of the cloiſters, where his brother Sir Richard Gamages had been interred.

John Thokey[q], or Toky, or Chokey, the ſub-prior, was elected May 1, 1307, received the benediction at Hartlebury, 8 kal. July, ſays Willis, but ſome MS. papers in my cuſtody ſay June, and that he was inſtalled on the 29th of that month. In 1313[r], he was excommunicated for reſiſting the prior of Worceſter's viſitation in the vacancy of the ſee; but an award being made concerning it, the biſhop of Worceſter, September 2, 1314, abſolved the abbey, and required the official of the archdeacon of Worceſter to publiſh it. At or before 14° E. 2. as appears by the king's patent then granted, the abbey had licence to appropriate the church of Haitherope, to find chaplains in the charnel houſe built by Peter Fox, in the abbey church-yard. (Biſhop Tanner's Not. Monaſt.) During his government[s], king Edward the Second being barbarouſly murdered at Berkeley caſtle, this abbat fetched him in his chariot from the caſtle, the abbats of Kingſwood, Briſtol and Malmeſbury being afraid to do it, and with his convent, ſolemnly robed, accompanied with a proceſſion of the whole city, honourably received him; which afterwards proved ſo fortunate to Glouceſter, ſuch numbers flocking to ſee and pay their devotions to his relicks, that a great part of the church was built out of the offerings made on that occaſion. Our abbat, in 1318, rebuilt the ſouth aile, and did ſeveral other benefactions; but at length growing old and infirm, he reſigned in 1329, and died ſoon after. February 28, 2° E. 3.[t] the king, with the conſent of parliament, in conſideration of the expences which the abbey had been at in celebrating his father's funeral, granted, That upon every vacancy of the abbey, they ſhould compound with the king at the rate of 100 marks for the ſpace of a year; but that all knights fees holden of the abbey, eſcheats and preſentations to their churches, which ſhould fall in the time of the vacancy, ſhould belong to the king. The prior, as preſident, and the convent, ſhould keep the abbey in ſafe cuſtody, 'till another perſon was admitted thereto. The eſcheator, or the ſheriff, upon a vacancy, to make only ſimple ſeiſin within the abbey, and ſo to depart.

John Wigmore[u], or Wygmor, the prior, by the procurement of abbat Thokey, was promoted in 1329. He gave an exceeding rich, embroidered garment, to be worn on the feſtival of the pentecoſt. While he was prior, he rebuilt the great chamber of the abbat, near the garden of the infirmary. He alſo built [v] the great grange at Highnam from the foundation; the chamber of the abbat next the great hall, with a little hall adjoining to it, and a chapel. He was well ſkilled in mechanicks, and delighted in other arts. He began St. Andrew's aile, which in ſix years he finiſhed in a beautiful manner, out of the oblations made at the tomb of king Edward the Second, which was ſo frequented by perſons coming hither in devotion, that the city of Glouceſter was ſcarce ſufficient to receive them; and their offerings were ſo great, that 'tis thought they would have been enough to have built the whole church. This abbat obtained [x] of the king, Oct. 3, 10° E. 3. a grant to the abbey of the hundred of Dudſton, co. Glouceſter, with all its emoluments and appurtenances, at the fee farm rent of 12*l. per ann.* Dying, the 12th of the kalends of March, 1337, he was buried on the ſouth ſide, near the entrance of the choir, which he built, with a ſquare ſtone pulpit over the weſt door, and which in the year 1718, was demoliſhed to make room for the organ.

Adam de Staunton [y], the prior, ſucceeded the ſame year. He built the great vault of the choir, and the ſtalls on the prior's ſide of it, as alſo the vineyard-houſe, out of the oblations [z] made at the tomb of king Edward the Second, by his ſon king Edward the Third, queen Philippa, prince Edward, and ſeveral of the nobility and gentry. The king gave a ſhip of gold, and another ſhip, which, at the entreaty of the abbat and convent, was redeemed at the price of 100*l.* The prince offered a croſs of gold, having in its compoſition a part of the great croſs, and a ruby. Theſe oblations muſt have been of great value, for this abbat, notwithſtanding his great expences in building, left 1000 marks in the treaſury. In 1338 [a], he was one of the two preſidents of the chapter of the Benedictines at Northampton. June 25, 19° Edw. 3. by exchange, he [b] obtained for the abbey the manor of King's-Barton, adjoining to Glouceſter, with ſeveral other particulars. And dying, in 1351, was buried at the altar of St. Thomas, which his brother, John de Staunton, had [c] rebuilt. February 20, 17° Edw. 3. [d] the moveables and immoveables of the abbey were valued at 287*l.* 18*s.* 7*d.* and the members of the convent, July 28, 1348, were thirty-ſix.

Thomas Horton, the ſacriſt, ſucceeded, being choſen by way of compromiſe. He received the benediction at Cheltenham, from the biſhop of Hereford, by leave of the biſhop of Worceſter, Dec. 4, 1351; and had the temporalties granted to him the 12th of the ſame month. He adorned his church with abundance of veſtments, and cauſed the great altar, and the preſbbytery, to be made, together with St. Paul's aile, and the great hall wherein the parliament was holden in the year 1378, during the ſeſſion of which, the king, and his whole court, were lodged in the abbey. In the refectory [e] there was treating concerning the laws of arms. The common hall was deſigned for the lords in parliament, and there was a chamber, which for its elegance was antiently called the king's, appointed for the ſecret council of the nobles: and in the chapter-houſe was the common council of parliament. After this abbat had governed twenty-ſix years, being very aged and infirm, he reſigned November 8, 1377; and dying ſeventeen weeks and three days afterwards, was buried under a flat ſtone in the north part of the tranſept, or great croſs aile. Nov. 20, 1° R. 2. the king confirmed ſeveral charters of his progenitors to the abbey; and among the reſt, that of king Edward the Third, concerning the vacancy of the abbey. 'Tis probable this was done to preſerve good order in the proceedings before the enſuing election of the abbat; for the king, under his great ſeal, ſent a writ to the barons of the exchequer, in the diſpute about the ſum of money due for the vacancy, prohibiting them to give any moleſtation to the abbey, in any thing contrary to his charter.

John Boyfield [f], or de Boyfeld, the præcentor, was elected 6 kal. Dec. 1377, and received the benediction from the biſhop of Hereford, at Whytebourn, on Sunday before Chriſtmas; was inſtalled December 24, and had the temporalties reſtored to him on the 31ſt of the ſame month. Mr. Wharton ſays, he obtained from the pope the uſe of the pontificals for himſelf and ſucceſſors; but probably this was done by his ſucceſſor, Walter Froucester. Dying on the 3d of the kalends of January, 1381, in the fourth year of his government, he was buried in St. Paul's aile, near abbat Horton. In 1380 [h], there were fifty-four monks in this convent, with an abbat, and 200 officers or ſervants; the yearly income was then 1700 marks. The revenue [i] of the abbey being much leſſened by extraordinary inundations, peſtilences, and other calamities, and being continually frequented by gueſts, as well poor foreigners as thoſe of this kingdom, the expences were ſo very great as to require the appropriation of St. Mary de Lode to defray them.

Walter Frouceſter[k], or Frouceſtre, or Frouceſtor, or Fronceſter, the chamberlain, was elected in January, and inſtalled the 14th of February, 1381. The abbey was afterwards[l] ſued for not paying the 200 marks, according to the charter of king Edward the Firſt, but it was determined that they were no longer due on account of the vacancy. He procured from pope[m] Urban, by the intereſt of the duke of Glouceſter and others, a grant for himſelf and the abbats his ſucceſſors, of the mitre, ring, ſandals, and dalmatic: Alſo, that he might give the ſolemn benediction at veſpers, matins and at table, ſo that no biſhop or legate of the apoſtolic ſee were preſent. He alſo[n] obtained a diſpenſation for eating of fleſh in the abbey, from ſeptuageſima to quinquageſima Sunday inclusive. He made the[o] ſumptuous and beautiful great cloiſters, concerning which ſee the account of the cathedral church. He took great care and pains to collect and tranſcribe the records belonging to this abbey. And dying in 1412, was buried in a chapel at the ſouth-weſt part of the choir, under the arch of the tower, where his graveſtone now remains, which appears to have had his effigy, mitre, &c. on it in braſs, which are now torn off. There was an anniverſary kept[p] for him in the church of Chipping-Norton, co. Oxon, 'till the time of the diſſolution; and ſix cloth gowns were given to ſix poor men, and ſome other particulars were then yearly diſtributed there, as well as in the churches of St. Mary de Lode, and of the Holy Trinity in Glouceſter. In his time[q] the number of monks was forty-five, with an abbat and two hundred officers or ſervants, the income being the ſame as in the time of his predeceſſor.

Hugh de Morton[r], or Moreton, ſucceeding, had the temporalties reſtored to him May 27, 13° H. 4. on whoſe death, which happened ann. 1420,

John Morwent[s], Marewent, or Marlwent, called erroneouſly by Camden, in his Britannia, Nicholas Marwent, chamberlain of the abbey, had the temporalties reſtored to him July 14, 8° H. 5. He made the weſt front, and erected the ſtately porch and two pillars, one on each ſide of the body of the church at the weſt end; intending, if he had lived, to have made the whole body of like work.[t] Auguſt 2, 7° H. 6.[u] a compoſition was made between the abbey and the town, whereby the lane under the ſouth wall of the abbey was granted to the bailiffs and burgeſſes. Their ſerjeants were impowered to carry their maces before the bailiffs in the abbey; and the bailiffs or their ſerjeants might execute any of the king's writs, ſummonſes, &c. within the abbey, except upon the abbat, monks, their domeſtick ſervants, or counſellors. March 2, 9° H. 6.[w] the king, before he travelled beyond the ſeas, came to this abbey, and made an oblation. May 10, 1437[x], this abbat occurs as prolocutor for the religious, and exhibited for them a ſchedule with certain particulars at the convocation: And dying in 1437, had for his ſucceſſor

Richard Boulars[y], or Boulers, or Bolers, or Butler, who, November 12, 16° H. 6. had the temporalties reſtored to him. In 1440, he was offered the biſhoprick of Landaff, but refuſed it. In 1444[z], being appointed by the king to go to Rome, and other places, where his attendance might be required for a conſiderable time, the prior and convent granted him 400 l. per ann. out of the profits of the abbey, during his abſence. July 20, 25° H. 6, 1447[a], there was another compoſition made between the abbey and the bailiffs of the town, by which int. al. the bailiffs and burgeſſes were to have free common, and dig earth, in the Common Ham; and to have the uſe of the water of Fulbrook, at the upper north-gate; of the lane under the ſouth wall of the abbey, and of the two water-mills at the weſt-gate: And the abbey to enjoy the ſtone wall within fifteen foot of land in breadth within it, from St. John's Church-yard to the blind-gate. After Michaelmas[b], 1450, Richard duke of York, then at variance with king Henry the Sixth, took this abbat, and ſent him priſoner to the caſtle of Ludlow; but the ſame year[c] he was advanced to the ſee of Hereford, which he held 'till his removal to Litchfield. The motto which he uſed when abbat, was, MEMENTO, MEMENTO; by ſome thought prophetical, and interpreted, Remember, remember, this abbey muſt be diſſolved; but ſays Dr. Fuller[d], I like the text better than the comment, and there is more humility in the motto than ſolidity in the interpretation. Bowlers[e], when biſhop of Litchfield, by his laſt will, dated March 23, 1458, and proved on the 10th of April following, gave his books to the library of this abbey.

Thomas Sebroke[f], or Seabroke, being elected, after Boulars was advanced to the ſee of Hereford, had the temporalties reſtored to him February 16, 29° H. 6. 1450. He pulled down the old tower, and began the building of that ſtately one in the which is thus rendered in the laſt edition of Camden's Britannia:

This fabric which you ſee, exact and neat,
The abbat charged the monk to make compleat.

On the ſouth wall under the tower are his arms, viz. Ermine, a cinquefoil ſable. His motto, FIAT VOLUNTAS DOMINI, ſome perſons have interpreted to denote, If this abbey muſt be diſſolved, the will of the Lord be done. But the ſame may be ſaid of this [h] as was of his predeceſſor's. His name, motto and arms, which now remain on many bricks beyond the biſhop's throne, ſhew that he paved the choir. He died in 1457, and was buried in a chapel at the ſouth-weſt end of the choir, where his effigy is placed at length, in white alabaſter, in his pontificalibus. In or about abbat Seabroke's time, John Twynning, a monk of this abbey, built from the foundation the great inn, called the New Inn, in the upper north-gate ſtreet, to the great profit and advantage of the abbey. This inn, according to tradition, was intended for the reception of pilgrims.

Richard Hanley [i], or Hauley, or Haulaces, received the temporalties March 11, 36° H. 6. He [k] began the rebuilding of our Lady's chapel at the eaſt end of the church, and died in 1472.

William Ferley [l], or Farley, a monk of the abbey, was confirmed April 22, 1472, received the benediction April 23, and had the temporalties reſtored to him the 1ſt of May following. He finiſhed the rebuilding of the chapel, which his predeceſſor had begun; and 18° Edw. 4. [m] with the abbats of Malmeſbury and Winchcombe, as deputies of the king, received the fealty of Thomas Compton, abbat of Cirenceſter.

John Malverne [n], or Mulverne, had the temporalties reſtored to him December 17, 14° H. 7. and died about Auguſt [o] 13, 15° H. 7. In the time of the vacancy [p] after his death, the monks were at ſuch variance, and committed ſuch enormities, in making intereſt for the abbacy, that the king, with his privy council, directed a mandate to the prior, as preſident of the abbey, commanding him to puniſh all the offenders, and to keep the abbey in due order during the vacancy. The election to be examined according to law by the king's council. At length

Thomas Branche [q], or Braunche, a monk of the abbey, was elected Auguſt 31, 1500; confirmed by Dr. Wodyngton [r], vicar-general of the biſhop of Worceſter; received the benediction September 15, and had the temporalties reſtored to him October 19, following. He died July 1, 1510. After his death [s], as after his predeceſſors, a like mandate was ſent to the prior for the government of the monks, who, on the vacancy, had committed many diſorders. July 9, the abbey obtained a congé d' elire, and thereupon

John Newton [t], alias Browne, D.D. the king's chaplain, (who, about the year 1478, took upon him the order of St. Benedict in this abbey, and was at the time of his election prior of St. Cuthlack's near Hereford) was elected on the 30th of July, 1510, confirmed the 22d of November, had the temporalties reſtored to him on the 28th, and was inſtalled December 6, following, notwithſtanding the violent oppoſition made againſt his election, when there were forty-eight monks in the abbey and ſixteen in the cell, by John Huntley, the cellarer, with ſixteen monks of his ſide, and their appeal againſt it to the biſhop of Worceſter. In the year [u] 1512 and 1513, 5° H. 8. there were ſuch great diviſions and animoſities between the town and abbey, on account of common, which was ſaid to be witholden from the town by the abbey and its tenants, that the townſmen, to near the number of two hundred, aſſembled themſelves, and wounded ſome of the ſervants of the abbey; therefore a letter was ſent from the king's privy council on the behalf of the abbey, commanding the mayor, under the penalty of appearing at the ſtar-chamber, of paying 100*l.* and of forfeiting the liberties of the town, to ſuppreſs theſe diſturbers, and keep the town and abbey in quiet, 'till the diſpute ſhould be determined. October 27, 5° H. 8. [w] an agreement between the town and abbey having been firſt made, and the mayor firſt having ſent a letter of complaint to the abbey, an award was made by the abbat of Winchcombe, the prior of Lanthony, and ſeveral others concerning the matter; but, it ſeems, this was inſufficient, for in the time of his ſucceſſor, Feb. 6, 9° H. 8. a compoſition was made between the abbey and the town about this affair; and the 20th of March, 10° H. 8. another award was made, relating to the tenants of the abbey at Maiſmore. This abbat died January 15, 5° H. 8.

William Malvern [x], alias Parker, B.D. maſter of the work, called at his predeceſſor's election [y], Baccalaureus Opponens, and alſo Proponens, was elected on the 4th of May, 1514; confirmed at Glouceſter on the 1ſt of June following, and had the temporalties reſtored to him on the 6th of Auguſt, 1515. ſity of Oxford, he took the degree of Doctor in Divinity. In 1524[z], he compiled a compendious hiſtory of this abbey, printed in the 2d volume of Robert of Glouceſter's Chronicle. In March, 1525, cardinal Wolſey, by his commiſſary Dr. Allen, exerciſed a legantine viſitation in the abbey, when their yearly revenues, according to common account, amounted to 1022*l.* 15*s.* 1*d. ob.* and the abbey acknowledged themſelves indebted to the cardinal in 40*l.* 17*s.* 6*d. q.* The clergy of the kingdom having incurred a premunire for acknowledging and receiving the cardinal's authority from Rome, 22° H. 8. they compounded with the king for a fine of 200,000*l.* of which this abbey paid 500*l.* as its proportion. This abbat adorned the ſouth, or king Edward's gate, belonging to the abbey; enlarged the gate (demoliſhed ſince in the beginning of the year 1722) leading to the buildings which now conſtitute the epiſcopal palace; repaired, or rebuilt, great part of the palace, then the abbat's houſe; rebuilt, or repaired, the great houſe at Prinknerſh; built the tower at Barnwood, the neat veſtry at the north end of the croſs aile; and erected a handſome chapel on the north ſide of the choir, juſt below the tomb of king Edward the Second, wherein is a ſtately tomb erected for this abbat, and an altar monument, with his effigy in white marble, lying at full length on it, in his pontificalibus, with a mitre and paſtoral ſtaff, and his arms, which were, Sable, a bordure engrailed or, charged with eight pellets, a buck paſſant between three pheons of the ſecond; which arms were 'till lately remaining on the gates, &c. abovementioned. Some perſons have expounded this abbat's motto, MERSOS REATU SUSCITA, Raiſe up thoſe that are drowned in guiltineſs, as prophetical, in relation to king Henry the Eighth's raiſing the abbey into a biſhoprick; but Dr. Fuller gives the ſame anſwer to this, as he does to the mottos of his predeceſſors Boulars and Sebroke. In his time, [a] Oſberne, the cellarer, made a ſquare tower north-weſt of the churchyard, part of which is the gate leading to St. Mary de Lode's church; and repaired the old Ram oppoſite St. John's church, in the upper north-gate-ſtreet, over the door of which are the following lines, cut in wood, ſtill remaining:

En ruinoſa dom⁹ quōdā quā tūc renovavit
Monachus urban⁹ Oſburne John rite vocatus.

This abbat, Richard Skidmor, and other monks to the number of thirty-four, ſubſcribed to the king's ſupremacy, and he continued abbat 'till the diſſolution, ſoon after which he died. I have been told that he was a younger brother of the family of the Parkers, of Hasfield, in the county of Glouceſter; and that after the diſſolution, he retired to them, and there continued for the remainder of his life.

The whole number of abbats was thirty-two, and not thirty-three, as Sir Robert Atkyns makes them, by reckoning Malvern and Parker as two diſtinct perſons, whereas, according to Cl. Wharton, and Anthony Wood, they are only different names for the ſame man.

The abbey was ſurrendered the 2d of January[b], 31° H. 8. by Gabriel Moreton, the prior, and the monks, under the conventual ſeal, when 'twas valued at 1946*l.* 5*s.* 9*d. per ann.* according to Dugdale, but 1550*l.* 4*s.* 5*d. ob.* according to Speed. In another account[c] is the ſame value which Speed mentions, and the clear yearly ſum 1430*l.* 4*s.* 3*d.* excluſive of its cells, which are valued diſtinctly. Out of theſe revenues the king's commiſſioners aſſigned the following penſions: To *Gabriel Morton[d], the prior, 20*l.* which was alſo confirmed to him by patent, dated on the 10th of February following. To Edward Bennet, late receyvour, 20*l.* Thomas Kingſwood 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* William Morwent, Edmund Wotton, John Wigmore, chamberer, Walter Standley, 10*l.* each. *Thomas Hartland, hoſteler, *Humphry Barkeley, Richard Anſelm, kitchener, 8*l.* each. *William Newport, 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* *William Auguſteyn, 6*l.* Thomas Lee, profeſſed and no prieſt, *William Symes, alias Deane, 100 ſol. each. Thoſe before whoſe names the aſteriſm is prefixed, continued unpreferred, and received their penſions in 1553; and at the ſame time the following penſions were paid to others who were ſometime monks here. To Thomas Saybroke, 13*l.* 6*s* 8*d.* John Terris, alias Clyfford, 10*l.* William Burford, 8*l.* Chriſtopher Horton, 6*l.* There remained alſo 32*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.* in fees, and 69*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* in annuities, charged on the revenues of the late abbey.

The arms of the Abbey were Gules, two keys in ſaltire, ſurmounted by a ſword in pale argent.

Of the monks were, the abbat; the chief prior; the ſecond, or ſub-prior; the third prior; the cellarer; the ſub-cellarer; the almoner, frequently called the almoner of Standiſh; the ſub-almoner; the præcentor; the ſacriſt; the keeper of the hoſtiliary; the chamberlain; the keeper of the infirmary; the keeper of the refectory; the maſter of the churches; the maſter or keeper of St. Mary's chapel; the monk of the vill or town; the kitchener; the maſter of the work; certain monks called Scholares Oxon, reſiding in Glouceſter college there. All theſe had particular lands, rents, or profits given to, or aſſigned for, their ſeveral offices.

Of the monks were alſo, the chaplain of the abbey; the ſuccentor; the ſub-ſacriſt; the third ſacriſt; the chaplain of the abbat; the ſub-chaplain; the batchelor opponent.

Other officers were, the chief ſteward; the under ſteward; the receiver general; the phyſician;

Thus we ſee how many different offices there were in one of theſe great monaſteries, an account of whom and their reſpective duties may be ſeen in Fuller's Church Hiſtory.

Beſide the priory of Ewias, and the priory of Kilpeck, this abbey had four other cells, which were ſubordinate to it in ſeveral reſpects, viz.

1. The priory of St. Cuthlack[a], or Guthlac, formerly conſiſting of a provoſt and ſecular canons, without Biſhopgate-ſtreet, in the eaſt ſuburbs of the city of Hereford. It had a prior, præcentor[b], a ſub-prior, and three monks; the ordering, placing, or amoving of whom was at the will of the abbat of St. Peter's. In 1101, this priory, with all the revenues belonging to the collegiate church, was given to the abbey, by Hugh de Lacy. The priory, dedicated to St. Peter, St. Paul, and St. Guthlac, valued, according to Speed and Dugdale, at 121*l.* 3*s.* 3*d. ob.* or as in another account, 169*l.* 19*s.* 6*d. ob.* was granted 34° H. 8. to John ap Rice.

2. The priory of Ewenny[c], or Gwenny, or Wenny, in Glamorganſhire. In 1141, Maurice of London gave lands and poſſeſſions to the abbey, for the eſtabliſhment of a priory there. It conſiſted of a prior and two monks, who were alſo at the diſpoſal of the abbat. The donations to it were confirmed by William archbiſhop of Canterbury, in his metropolitical viſitation, November 3, 1384; and by king Henry the Eighth, May 5, in the 8th year of his reign. The abbey, in conſequence of a letter from the king, on the 28th of Feb. 28° H. 8. granted this cell, with its appurtenances, except the advowſons and preſentations to churches, to Edward Carne, L. L. D. for ninety-nine years, at the yearly rent of 20*l.* 10*s.* and to maintain three monks there, during the life of Edmund Wotton, the prior; afterwards only two monks, one of whom ſhould be prior. It was dedicated to St. Michael, and was valued at its diſſolution at 59*l.* 4*s. clare*, or according to other accounts, 71*l.* 6*s.* 8*d. ob.* or 78*l.* 0*s.* 8*d.* and granted, 37° H. 8. to Edward Carn.

3. Stanley St. Leonard's[d], in the county of Glouceſter, a ſmall monaſtery of prior and canons, founded in the church of St. Leonard, by Roger de Berkeley, who, with the conſent of Sabrith, or Sabrath, the prior, gave it to the abbey in 1146, as their cell for benedictines, wherein was a prior and two monks. king Henry the Eighth[e], in a letter to the abbey, dated on the 10th of June, in the 30th year of his reign, obſerving that the number of monks in the abbey was diminiſhed, deſired that ſuch as were in this cell might be recalled, and that the abbey would grant a leaſe of the cell, for ninety-nine years, to Sir William Kingſton, knight; which was accordingly done[f] the 18th of July, at the yearly rent of 36*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* with ſome few reſervations. 'Twas dedicated to St. Leonard; and at its diſſolution[g] was valued at 126*l.* 0*s.* 8*d.* but clear of all deductions at 106*l.* 17*s.* The ſcite, as parcel of Glouceſter abbey, was granted to Sir Anthony Kingſton.

4. Bromfield[h], in Shropſhire. In 1155, the canons hereof gave it to this abbey by the hands of Gilbert biſhop of Hereford; which donation was confirmed by Theobald, archbiſhop of Canterbury. There was formerly a little college of prebendaries, or ſecular canons, in the church of St. Mary, who were turned into Black, or Benedictine monks. It conſiſted of a prior and two monks. 'Twas valued at its diſſolution at 78*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.* but clear of deductions at 77*l.* 18*s.* 3*d.* or as 'tis in[i] another account, but 67*l.* 18*s.* 3*d.* It was granted to Charles Cox, 4° & 5° Ph. & M.

The

The abbats of this place had alſo eight ſumptuous houſes, viz.

1. The Vineyard[k], near the town, at the end of the weſt cauſey. 'Twas a large houſe, built by abbat Staunton, and moated round. It ſtood pleaſantly ſituated on a riſing ground, beyond Over's bridge, near the banks of the Severn, in the pariſh of St. Mary de Lode. The vineyard and park were given to the biſhoprick of Glouceſter at it's foundation, and again confirmed 6° E. 6. The biſhops of this ſee frequently reſided there before the great rebellion, when 'twas demoliſhed. It was very much plundered in the Chriſtmas holidays, 1641, by lord Stamford, as were all the neighbouring places thereabout, and all the writings taken thence.

2. Hartpury[l], four miles north-weſt. This manor belonged to the monaſtery 'till its diſſolution, and was given to it by Offa, king of Mercia, in the time of Eva the abbeſs. Walter Compton, eſq;[m] died on the 26th of July, 7° Eliz. ſeized of the manor or demean of Hartpury, and of and in the capital meſſuage there, called the abbat's place, and fifty yard lands belonging to the manor; all which he obtained from William Harbert, knight of the garter, by his deed, dated on the 20th of February, 4° E. 6.

3. Prinknerſh[n], called alſo Prinkeneſſe, or Prinknaſh, or Prynkenaſsh, three miles eaſt of Glouceſter. The abbey had a park here, and free warren in all their demean lands in this place, granted by king Edward the Third, on the 3d of December, regni 28° and confirmed by king Richard the Second, the 20th of November, regni primo. 'Tis reputed extraparochial, and adjoins to the pariſh of Upton St. Leonard's. The manor, which belonged to St. Peter's abbey at its diſſolution, was granted to Edward Bridges and Dorothy Praye, 36° H. 8. and the reverſion of the houſe and park, to Sir William Sandys and Thomas Spencer, 3° Jac. 1. It was ſoon after purchaſed by Sir John Bridgman, chief Juſtice of Cheſter, and was ſold out of that family, 1770.

4. Newnham[o], twelve miles ſouth-weſt. In this pariſh[p] is a hamlet called Ruddle, where the abbey had a manor, lands, tythes, meſſuages, a water-mill, a fiſhery, and a paſſage over Severn 'till its diſſolution. Ralph Bluet[q], ſoon after the conqueſt, gave Rodele to it. King William the Second,[r] at the petition of abbat Serlo, and of ſome of his nobles, confirmed this gift in 1096; and 'twas confirmed again by king Henry the Firſt, and others after him. That king expreſſly gave and confirmed to it the manor of Rudele, to find lights to burn continually before the high altar of St. Peter's, for the ſoul of duke Robert Curthoſe, his brother; and a fiſhery in Severn as far as their lands go; a grove or wood there, called Sudrug, to do as they pleaſe with it; and to the ſacriſt, common for all his cattle thro' the whole foreſt of Dean. Henry the Third, by his charter, dated at Newnham, confirmed this fiſhery to the abbey as fully as Henry the Firſt gave it.

5. Berkeley[s], about fifteen miles ſouth-weſt.

6. Thornbury[t], about twenty miles ſouth-weſt.

7. The Manor Place at Frouceſter[u], where the abbey then had a lordſhip of 100 marks a year, and where was once a college of prebendaries: And

8. Bromfield Manor Place[w], near Ludlow, in Shropſhire.

In a leaſe of the abbat's lands at Hyneham, is the following reſervation: 'And upon reaſonable ſummons[x] by the abbat made to the leſſee, when the plague ſhall be at Glouceſter or Over, the abbat reſerves a convenient part of the manſion-houſe at Hyneham, for the reſidence of himſelf and his men, during the continuance thereof, March 12, 7° H. 8.'

At Standiſh[y], five miles ſouth of this city, was a building called the Almery, erected for the uſe of the abbey, which continued poſſeſſed of it 'till the diſſolution. This place gave denomination to the chief almoner of the abbey, who was generally called the almoner of Standiſh. Beornulph[z], king of the Mercians, in 821, gave this manor to the monaſtery, which archbiſhop Aldred, to whom it was mortgaged, took away, and the archbiſhops of York claimed it, as belonging to that ſee; but archbiſhop Thomas, in 1095, about thirty-nine years after it was taken away, in the monks chapter-houſe, in the preſence of abbat Serlo and many others, reſtored it to the abbey, much blaming himſelf for having detained it ſo long. And king William the Second[a], at the petition of abbat Serlo, and ſome of his great men, confirmed it by charter to the abbey in 1096. However there were frequent diſputes about this affair 'till it was finally concluded by abbat Hameline, who ended it in the manner already mentioned.

After it was in the entire poſſeſſion of the abbey, it ſoon became applied to charitable purpoſes, at the admonition of Mauger, biſhop of Worceſter. Thomas Carbonel, the abbat, reſtored to the uſe of the poor all this manor, with its appurtenances, except to the cellarer, the antient rent paid at the anniverſaries of the abbats, and a few other things; and to the abbat two marks yearly at Chriſtmas, and two marks yearly at Eaſter, for the abbat's private alms. The manor to be converted by no perſon to any other uſe, unleſs in great neceſſity, and by common counſel of the whole convent. This agreement was made in the chapter, on St. Mary Magdalen's day, 1202. Witneſſes were Mauger the ſaid biſhop, the abbat of Winchcombe, William de Werdon, archdeacon of Glouceſter, and others. A decree [b] was made by the biſhop of Worceſter, 1346, that the almoner of the abbey, out of this manor, ſhould pay for the poor a certain proportion weekly for bread, and ninety yards of woollen cloth yearly, at Chriſtmas, for thirty poor people. And if it appears at the biſhop of Worceſter's viſitation, that the almoner has been negligent in delivering, or the ſub-almoner in diſpoſing thereof, the abbey ſhall forfeit 5 lib. A writ was directed to John de Hampton, the king's eſcheator, in the counties of Glouceſter, Worceſter, Hereford, &c. 17° Edw. commanding him to reſtore again to the abbey the manor of Standiſh, notwithſtanding it was ſeized into the king's hands, becauſe the abbey had appropriated it to a certain charitable uſe without the king's leave.

In the year 1516 [c], abbat Malvern, alias Parker, agreed with the members of his monaſtery, That whereas the manor of Standiſh, being of the value of 16*l. per ann.* at leaſt, with other ſmall alms, viz. thirteen frize coats to thirteen poor people, to be provided by the town monk; 2 ſol. which the abbey cellarer did yearly diſtribute to each of them; and a meſs called the abbat's diſh, worth 8*d.* every week, uſed heretofore to be paid at the manor of Standiſh in money, and ſince that in bread; and afterwards the ſame was diſtributed within the abbey in corn, which occaſioned great inconveniences, therefore there ſhould be thenceforth eſtabliſhed a fraternity of thirteen men, called Peter's men, to be appointed by the abbat, in honour of the Holy Croſs, one of which ſhould be prior, and wear a black mantle, for diſtinction. The town monk ſhould provide for them yearly thirteen black cloth gowns, which ſhould be made cloſe before, and with cloſe ſleeves, and a mantle, allowing three yards of cloth for each gown and hood, the cloth being not under 20 den. per yard, beſide what is for the mantle. And each of them ſhould have 8 den. a week, and the prior 9 den. They ſhould wear continually a large hood, a great pair of beads, the arms of the monaſtery embroidered on their right ſhoulders, and a croſs of red and blue on their breaſts; all to be provided by the town monk. They ſhould diligently attend divine ſervice, and perform the duties required of them devoutly and decently. The ſub-prior of the abbey ſhould have the overſight and government of them: and towards the charge of all this, the cellarer ſhould pay 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d. per ann.* for their bread, beer and money, to the almoner; and the almoner ſhould pay all other charges out of the manor of Standiſh. And all thoſe ſums ſhould be paid to the ſub-almoner, or pay-maſter, a month before hand.

The abbat was ſummoned [d] to ſeveral parliaments, or great councils, in the reigns of king Henry the Third, Edward the Firſt, Edward the Second, and Edward the Third. And [e] was appointed in this laſt king's reign to be one of the perſons who ſhall conſtantly attend at thoſe aſſemblies.

This was one of the twenty-ſeven mitred abbies which were in this kingdom. It was under the viſitation of the biſhop of Worceſter, until the time of its diſſolution, by the pope's grant, upon an unjuſt accuſation of abbat Boyfield, and his convent. The laſt [f] viſitation that occurs, was made in the chapter-houſe here, by Hugh Latimer, biſhop of Worceſter, the 28th of January, 1537.

The abbat [g] uſed to be ſummoned to the provincial chapters. He held ſome of his poſſeſſions by barony, and therefore attended at parliament as a peer of the realm.

This abbey, and ſome of their tenants enjoyed ſeveral particular privileges, beſides thoſe before-mentioned, among which were, 1. The tythe of all the hunting (totius venationis) in the foreſt of Dean, by the grants of king Henry the Firſt, and Henry the Second.—2. The having of all ſturgeons taken in their waters, by the grants of king William the Firſt, and Henry the Firſt.—3. That no perſon ſhall fiſh in their fiſheries, nor take any game in any of their manors without their leave, by the grants of king Henry the Firſt, king Steph. and king Henry the Second.—4. That whatſoever, or whereſoever, any thing neceſſary ſhould be bought, the monks might paſs free from toll, by the grants of the kings Henry the Firſt and Second.—5. The abbat had a power of making five publick notaries, and inveſting them in their office by a pen, pen or quill-caſe, and paper.—6. The free

[e] Fuller ſaith, that 49 Hen. 3. ſixty-four abbats and thirty-ſix priors were called to parliament; but this number being too great, king Edward the Third reduced it to twenty-five abbats and two priors, to whom were afterwards added two abbats, ſo that there were twenty-nine in all, and no more, that ſtatedly and conſtantly enjoyed this privilege, viz. The abbat of Tewkeſbury, the prior of Coventry, the abbats of Waltham, Cirenceſter, St. John's at Colcheſter, Croiland, Shrewſbury, Selby, Bardney, St. Bennets of Hulme, Thorney, Hide, Winchelcomb, Battle, Reading, St. Mary's in York, Ramſey, Peterburg, St. Peter's in Glouceſter, Glaſtonbury, St. Edmund's-bury, St. Auſtin's in Canterbury, St. Albans, Weſtminſter, Abingdon, Eveſham, Malmeſbury, and Taviſtock, and the prior of St. John's of Jeruſalem, who was ſtiled Primus Angilæ baro, but it was with reſpect to the lay barons only, for he was the laſt of the ſpiritual ones. I have here ſet down the firſt twenty-four of theſe in the order they went to parliament 3 H. 8. Mr. Hearne thinks that they took place in the houſe of lords according to the ſeniority of their creation; but John Anſtis, eſq; Garter king of arms, is of opinion that ſome of the abbats, like the biſhops, had by virtue of their abbies a certain fixed precedency, and that others of them took place according to the priority of their creation. Many have aſſigned the firſt place to the abbat of St. Albans, becauſe Saint Alban was the firſt martyr in this kingdom. Tanner's Not. Mon. fol. preface.

cuſtoms, liberties, and quietances, which the abbey freely, honourably, in peace, fully and clearly enjoyed, were granted or confirmed to them by the kings Henry the Firſt, Stephen, and Henry the Second.—7. All their lands and poſſeſſions were quit of carriage, tallage, ſummage, paſſage, pontage, conduct, and king's works; with ſoca, or ſocne, and ſaca, and toll, and theam, and infangetheof, and all the free cuſtoms thereof, as formerly granted, by the kings Henry the Firſt, Stephen, and Henry the Second.—All the goods and chattles (pecunia) were quit of all toll and cuſtom by the grants of the kings Stephen, and Henry the Second.

Upon every new election of an abbat, the abbey was obliged to maintain one of the king's clerks whom he thought fit to name; and accordingly corrodies for their lives were granted to them. In the reigns of king Henry the Seventh, and king Henry the Eighth, the value of thoſe corrodies or grants was 5*l.* a year.

When the abbat was confirmed, and received his benediction, he generally made the ſacriſt of the priory of Worceſter ſome valuable preſent, uſually of coſtly robes, or veſtments, or of materials to make them. In the annals of Worceſter, in Anglia Sacra, 'tis ſaid, that in the year 1241, the ſacriſt of Worceſter received the Alb and Cap, as well for Walter, which was not inſtalled, as for John, which was.

Tho' the chief of the lands and poſſeſſions of this abbey were in the town and county of Glouceſter, yet there were ſeveral belonging to it in Buckinghamſhire, the city of London, Devonſhire, Glamorganſhire, Hampſhire, Herefordſhire, Middleſex, Oxfordſhire, Shropſhire, Warwickſhire, Wiltſhire, and Worceſterſhire.

'Tis ſaid in the notes to biſhop Tanner's Not. Monaſt. preface, p. 15, That all the parliamentary abbats and priors had houſes in Weſtminſter, London, or Southwark, to live in, whilſt the parliament ſat: And 'tis probable, that the abbat of this place then inhabited a houſe near Saint Martyn's Vintry, London; for Radulph Peverell gave to this abbey the church there, and all the lands which belonged to the prieſt. King William the Second confirmed this grant in the time of abbat Serlo, and 'twas alſo confirmed by king Henry the Firſt.

In the reign of king William the Conqueror, the poſſeſſions of the church of St. Peter, which lay in Glouceſterſhire, are ſet down under the tenth head of the General Survey of that county, as may be ſeen in the copy of Domeſday, printed in this book, p. 66.

At that time the church of St. Peter of Glouceſter held the manor of Bertune, with the adjacent members, Berneuude, Tuffelege, and Mereuuent, in Dudeſtanes hundred; Froweceſtre, in Blacelawes hundred; Boxewelle, in Grimboldeſtowes hundred; Culne [Coln Rogers] in Brictwoldeſberg hundred; Aldeforde, in Begebriges hundred; Bochelande, in Wideles hundred; Hinetune, in Tetboldeſtanes hundred; Hamme [Highnam] and Preſtetune, in Tolangebriges hundred; Ledene, in Botelewes hundred; Hamme and Mortune, [ſuppoſed to be Churcham and Linton] in Weſtberies hundred; Omenie, in Gerſdunes hundred; and Dunteſborne in Cireceſtre hundred.

Several particular benefactions to this abbey are publiſhed in Sir William Dugdale's Monaſticon, and have been tranſlated by Sir Robert Atkyns, and inſerted in his Ancient and Preſent State of Gloſterſhire; whence, omitting ſome redundancies, and making a few neceſſary corrections, the following Account of Donations is taken. But there is a roll of Benefactions among the records of the dean and chapter of Glouceſter, placed in chronological order, down to the year 1263, in which many of the following particulars are omitted.

Of the BISHOPRICK and BISHOPS.

GLOUCESTER was antiently the ſeat of a Britiſh biſhop, whoſe title ſometimes occurs in the ſynodal acts by the name of Cluve, or Cluvienſis, derived from Clevum, or Glevum, or perhaps from Gloyw, the Britiſh name of the city.

We read in the Memorial of Glouceſter, that a biſhop and preachers were ſettled here in the year of Chriſt 189, by king Lucius, concerning whom it is agreed, that he was called Lever Mawr, or Great Light, tho' the learned differ as to the preciſe time when he lived, and to ſome particulars attributed to him. However we have the teſtimony of the learned biſhop Uſher, that this king built here eccleſiam primæ ſedis, a church of the firſt ſeat. Some antient writers alſo affirm, that this was one of the archbiſhopricks erected by him in the place or ſeat of one of the arch-flamens, or heathen chief-prieſts; and that afterwards, on account of the extraordinary ſanctity of St. David, this archbiſhoprick was tranſlated to Menevia, which, in honour of that ſaint, was afterwards called St. David's.

Biſhop Uſher, Sir William Dugdale, and other laborious ſearchers into matters of antiquity, affirm, that Eldad, Eldadym, or Eldall, was biſhop here about the year 489. This is the ſame perſon whom Rous calls Sanctus Aldatus, a prelate of remarkable courage, wiſdom and virtue, whoſe name appears in an inſcription now over the biſhop's ſeat in the cathedral, thus written:

EDEL DVX
ELDADVS EPS GLOVC:
ELDO MAJOR
A: 490.

It is ſaid that Theonus, called alſo Cernus, ſucceeded Eldad, and that he was tranſlated to London in the year 553.

There is no further account to be found of the antient biſhops and their ſucceſſion, becauſe the biſhoprick probably ended, according to the opinion of biſhop Tanner, when the heathen Saxons overran this country, about the year 570. In ſucceeding ages, when the Saxon kings were converted to chriſtianity, Oſwy, king of Northumberland, having ſubdued Mercia, erected the biſhoprick of Litchfield in the year 657, when Glouceſterſhire was made ſubject to Dwina, firſt biſhop of that dioceſe. But in the year 679, this vaſt biſhoprick was divided into five ſmaller ones, by the decree of Theodore, archbiſhop of Canterbury, and out of it ſprung the biſhopricks of Litchfield, field, Dorcheſter, Leiceſter, Hereford, and Worceſter, of which laſt Boſil was the firſt biſhop, and then Glouceſterſhire was a part of his dioceſe.

A ſuffragan biſhop was fixed at Glouceſter by act of parliament, in the year 1534; but even as early as 1273, Reginald occurs by that name, who was ſubſtituted by the biſhop of Lincoln to viſit the churches in Oxfordſhire; and probably other appointments to that office may have taken place ſince that time.

After the diſſolution of St. Peter's abbey, king Henry the Eighth obtained an act of parliament, under which he erected the city of Glouceſter, and the county of that city, and all the county of Glouceſter into a biſhoprick[a], with a dean and chapter, by the name of the dioceſe of Glouceſter; and ordained that ſuch part of the then vill and county of Briſtol, as formerly was in the dioceſe of Worceſter, ſhould be from thenceforward in the dioceſe of Glouceſter for ever.

The king's letters patents, dated the 3d of September, 1541, are printed in the Appendix, No. 7; and thoſe for the endowment of the biſhoprick are alſo inſerted in the Appendix, No. 8, where the particulars may be ſeen at large, of which the following is a ſummary account.

In the letters of endowment it is ordered, that the abbat's lodgings, with the buildings, chapels, grounds and other premiſſes; his ſtable, and the garden at the end of the church-yard, all within the precincts of the abbey; the houſe called the wood-barton, two ſtables, two ſlaughter-houſes, and a dog-kennel, in the pariſh of St. Mary de Lode, are to be called the palace of the biſhop of Glouceſter.

The biſhoprick is endowed with the following manors, lands, rectories, tythes, advowſons, &c.

The manors of Maiſmore, Brokethorp, Harſcomb, Preſton, Longford, Droiſcourt, Rudge and Farley, and part of the manor of Laſſington, in the county of Glouceſter; and thoſe of Hope Maleſhal, Dewchurch and Kilpeck, in the county of Hereford; and all the lands, profits, &c. in the fields of Brokethorp, Hareſcomb, Preſton, and Brockworth.—The vineyard-houſe and park, containing fifteen acres and three roods; Portham-meadow, containing ſixty-ſeven acres, and the firſt ſhoot of it; a moiety of the wood at Woolridge, and a moiety of the wood called Le Perch, containing ſixteen acres, all in the pariſh of St. Mary de Lode.

The rectories of Hartpury, Maiſmore, Upton St. Leonard, Cam, Northleach, Kempsford, Welford, South Cerney, and Standiſh, in Glouceſterſhire; and thoſe of Dewchurch, Kilpeck, Glaſbury, Devennock, Cowern and Ewias Harold, in the county of Hereford; and of Newport, in the county of Wenlock in Wales, [now Monmouthſhire.]

The tithes or portions of tithes in Standiſh, Caldrop, Hardwick, Over-Oxlinch, Nether-Oxlinch, Little Runwike, Harſefield, Sall, Putley, Farley, Holyrood-Ampney, Aldeſworth, Linton, and Shipton-Solers, in Glouceſterſhire; and in Devennock, Wentworth, Talgarth, Aſh-Leomyſter, Ferm or Venne, Barn or Verne, Bunches or Burch, Strood and Lake, in the county of Hereford.

The following penſions, viz. 2*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* out of Kempsford rectory; 1*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* from Teynton; 9*s.* from Rendcombe; 1*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* from Nympſfield; and 1*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* from Newport.

The advowſon, preſentation, and right of patronage of the vicarages of Hartpury, Maiſemore, Upton St. Leonard, Cam, Northleach, Kempsford, Whelford or Welford, South Cerney, and Standiſh, in the county of Glouceſter; of Dewchurch, Kilpeck, Glaſbury, Devennock, Cowern, and Ewias Harold, in the county of Hereford; of Newport, in the county of Wenlock [Monmouthſhire]; of the chapels of Maiſmore, Cam, and Stinchcomb, in Glouceſterſhire; and Piperton, in Herefordſhire. All which manors, lands, rectories, tithes, penſions, and right of preſentation belonged to the abbey of St. Peter at Glouceſter.

[a] He had, ſays Sir Robert Atkyns, at the ſame time an intention of erecting eighteen biſhopricks, tho' he actually founded but five, beſides Weſtminſter, which laſt continued but few years. A greater number might very well have been expected, and the extent and populouſneſs of the nation requires it, and king Henry the Eighth might well have afforded it; for the conſtant yearly revenues of the diſſolved monaſteries which came to the crown, were 140,000l. and the true yearly value muſt be eſtimated at ten times as much. p. 43, 44.

The biſhoprick has not ſuffered much by alienations; but in the years 1647, 1648, and 1649, the following particulars were ſold, viz. the manor of Reculver, and other lands in Kent and elſewhere, belonging to the ſees of Canterbury, Norwich, and Glouceſter, to John Blackwell, for 3382*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*—Glouceſter palace and other lands, to Thomas Hodges, for 913*l.*—Meſſuages in the manor of Longford, to W. The value of the endowment, as it is now rated for firſt fruits, is 315*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.* but the real value is eſtimated at about 900*l.* a year.

The following churches are Peculiars, the juriſdiction of which is particularly laid down under the heads of the reſpective pariſhes, viz.

Bibury, with Aldeſworth, Barnſley and Winſon.

Cleeve, with Stoke-Archer.

Deerhurſt, with Boddington, Corſe, Forthampton, Hasfield, Leigh, Staverton and Tirley.

Wickham, or Wickwane, or Child's-Wickham.

Withington, with Dowdeſwell.

Before this biſhoprick was erected, the following places were in the dioceſe of York, viz. Churchdown, Laſſington, Norton, Compton-Abdale, Sainthurſt, Saint Catherine, in Glouceſter; and to theſe, perhaps, may be added Oddington and Witcombe-Magna.

The deanery of the Foreſt belonged to the biſhop of Hereford 'till this ſee was erected; but being part of the county of Glouceſter, the biſhop of Glouceſter, ſoon after the foundation, inſtituted, viſited, and performed many other epiſcopal functions therein; however the archdeacon of Hereford ſtill retains his juriſdiction in it, and under the biſhop of Glouceſter, viſits there in the ſummer every year, and receives the procurations; but the biſhop of Glouceſter's chancellor viſits the the other half year. All the other deaneries in this dioceſe are under the juriſdiction of the archdeacon of Glouceſter, together with the deanery of Briſtol, and a few churches within the dioceſe of Worceſter.

Biſhop Cheiney certified to queen Elizabeth, in 1562, 'That at the foundation of the biſhoprick of Briſtol, the city and deanery of Briſtol were appointed and limitted to the biſhop of Briſtol, and his ſucceſſors, as they heretofore have alledged.' But yet no mention is made, in the charter of erection of the ſee of Briſtol, that it ſhall have any part or parcel of the county of Glouceſter.

The following churches are within the archdeaconry of Glouceſter, tho' in the dioceſe of Worceſter, viz. Blockley vicarage, and the rectories of Dailsford, Ditchfield, Evenlode, Iccombe, and Stratton upon the Foſs.

This archdeaconry is valued at about 120*l. per annum.* In the twenty-ſixth year of Henry the Eighth, the full value of it, diſtinct from the rectory of Durſley, was 64*l.* 10*s.*

The account of the archdeacons follows that of the deans and chancellors.

BISHOPS of GLOUCESTER.

John Wakeman[a], (alias Wich) B.D. the laſt abbat of Tewkeſbury, being the king's chaplain, was appointed September 3, 1541, to be the firſt biſhop of this foundation, who accordingly was conſecrated September the 25th, or according to Le Neve, the 20th, by the archbiſhop of Canterbury, aſſiſted by the biſhops of London and Weſtminſter; and thereupon the penſion of 266*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* allowed him at the diſſolution of his abbey, ceaſed. He was appointed to inſpect the Engliſh tranſlation of part of the New Teſtament; and dying at [b]Forthampton, in the co. of Glouceſter, where he had an houſe and little chapel, in the beginning of November, 1549, was there buried. There is an effigy in memory of him, lying on a tomb behind the high altar at Tewkeſbury, which he had provided while he was abbat. Upon biſhop Wakeman's death, archbiſhop Cranmer ſent a commiſſion to prebendary Williams to be his commiſſary, to viſit this church, and to be the keeper of the ſpiritualities of the city and dioceſe.

John Hooper, or Hoper, D.D.[c] an exemplary, zealous, pious and learned man, who in his younger years had been a monk of Cleeve, in Somerſetſhire, was nominated on the 15th of May, appointed biſhop on the 3d of July, 1550, conſecrated on the 8th of March following; and inſtalled by proxy by archbiſhop Cranmer, aſſiſted by the biſhops of London and Rocheſter, the 22d of the ſame month. He was very active in the viſitation of the dioceſe, then remarkably abounding with popery, and greatly promoted the reformation. With the conſent of the dean and chapter, he ſurrendered the biſhoprick of Glouceſter to the king, the 26th of April, 1552, and, on the 12th of May, made a deed of gift of all the lands and annuities which he enjoyed by means of his biſhoprick. Upon Dr. Heath's being deprived of the ſee of Worceſter, by virtue of an act of parliament, by the king's letters patents, dated May the 20th, in the ſame year, the biſhoprick of Glouceſter was diſſolved, and converted into an archdeaconry, dependent on Worceſter, as it had been formerly; but the dignities of the dean and chapter thereof continued. The king then gave Dr. Hooper the biſhoprick of Worceſter, with power and authority to appoint all the prebendaries of both cathedrals. In September, another patent was granted him for the diſcharge of his firſt fruits. This year a letter was ſent him for the ſurrender of the biſhoprick of Worceſter, in order that there might be a new collation, or preſentation thereto: and on the 8th of December following, the biſhopricks of Worceſter and Glouceſter were united into one, and thenceforth to be one dioceſe, as Bath and Wells, Litchfield and Coventry: the biſhop to be called the biſhop of Glouceſter and Worceſter, and was to live one year in Worceſterſhire, and the next in Glouceſterſhire; and to have the power of appointing archdeacons and prebendaries as before. To this biſhop and his ſucceſſors likewiſe were given a few manors, belonging to the biſhoprick of Worceſter, and all the lands, &c. granted to the biſhoprick of Glouceſter at its foundation, as fully as he had ſurrendered them to the king; which then extended to the clear yearly value of 100 marks, beſides tenths and yearly rents. The tenths of the biſhoprick formerly came to 136*l.* 10*s.* 5*d. ob.* but he was to pay only 66*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* in lieu of them, and to be diſcharged of firſt fruits; and he and his ſucceſſors to be for ever diſcharged of 26*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* to be paid to Mr. John Taylor for keeping the regiſter of the biſhop of Glouceſter. Some time after he was diſcharged of all his firſt fruits, and all perſons were forbidden to demand a fee of him. But this union continued no longer than the life of king Edward the Sixth, by whom it was granted. As biſhop Hooper had ſtrenuouſly oppoſed Gardiner and Bonner, they had a peculiar enmity againſt him, and when the king died, it was reſolved to make him the firſt ſacrifice. Accordingly, on the 1ſt of September, ſoon after queen Mary's acceſſion to the crown, he was ſent to priſon, by an order from the queen, [d] dated March 15, 1553-4, and on the 18th, his biſhoprick was declared void. January the 28th, 1554-5, [e] he was brought before Gardiner, biſhop of Winchester, and ſeveral others, at St. Mary Overy's church, in Southwark, and there condemned as an heretick. In February, he was degraded of his prieſthood [f] by biſhop Bonner, in Newgate, where he had been ſeverely uſed for ſeveral months; and afterwards ſent from London to Glouceſter, where he had been moſt active, to be burnt. After a journey of three days, attended by ſix of the queen's guards, he was brought to this city, and lodged in the houſe of Robert Ingram, oppoſite St. Nicholas church. Jenkins and Bond, the ſheriffs, would have put him into the north-gate priſon, but were diſſuaded from it by the queen's guards. He had one day's interval, and on Saturday, the 9th of February, being market-day, was led by the ſheriffs, attended by the mayor, lord Chandois, Sir Edmund Bridges, Sir Anthony Kingſton, and others, from Ingram's houſe, to a place near the elm tree, without the gate, on the north-weſt ſide of the lower church-yard; where, not being permitted to ſpeak to the people, who were about 7000, as he was going, nor at the place of execution; and refuſing all offers of pardon, they chained him to a ſtake, and burnt him with three ſucceſſive fires, made of green wood. The good man ſupported himſelf, it is ſaid, with all imaginable firmneſs for above three quarters of an hour, and then expired, about the 60th year of his age. The queen ſent an order, that perſons of reputation in the county ſhould be called to aſſiſt the mayor and ſheriffs on this occaſion; and after the execution, a dinner was provided [g], at the expence of the corporation, for thoſe who were ordered by the queen to attend at it.—Thus bigots in power have practiſed every ſpecies of cruelty, under pretence of ſerving that religion, the ſpirit of which is meekneſs and charity; and many men, otherwiſe thought of ſound judgment and integrity, have promoted thoſe perſecuting meaſures, which in ſucceeding times have been condemned by the concurrent judgments of all.

James Brookes [h], D.D. ſometime fellow of Corpus Chriſti College, and afterwards maſter of Baliol College, in Oxford, upon biſhop Hooper's deprivation, was elected March 26, 1554; had reſtitution of the temporalties May the 8th; and was conſecrated in the church of Saint Saviour, Southwark, the 1ſt of April following. The commiſſions he exerciſed as delegate, or ſub-delegate, againſt archbiſhop Cranmer, biſhop Ridley, biſhop Latimer; and in viſiting the univerſity of Oxford, prove him to have been a very zealous man in thoſe times, who is obſerved by Dr. Fuller to have ſpent his fury moſtly out of his dioceſe. He died September the 7th, 1558, according to Le Neve, and was buried in a ſtrong coffin, under abbat Parker's monument, without any inſcription over him. It ſeems that he collated at firſt to the prebends of this church, a privilege granted to his predeceſſors. Upon his death, queen Mary iſſued out a writ [i], dated the 25th day of October, for the keeping of the temporalties, to John Bowrſher, B.D. who was nominated to the biſhoprick; but the queen's death prevented his having it.

A vacancy for above three years.

Richard Cheiney, B.D. ſometime of Pembroke-hall, in the univerſity of Cambridge; the archdeacon of Hereford, who oppoſed tranſubſtantiation in the year 1555, in convocation, and was deprived in the reign of queen Mary; but was afterwards rector of Maydeſnorton, in the dioceſe of Lincoln; of Biſhop's-Hampton, in that of Worceſter; prebendary of Weſtminſter, and alſo of this church; was elected biſhop, March the 9th, 1561; the temporalties were reſtored to him on the 15th of April, in the ſame year; he was conſecrated in the archbiſhop's chapel at Lambeth, on the 19th; and in ten days after, had the biſhoprick of Briſtol given to him to hold in commendam with it. He died April 25, 1579, according to Le Neve, and was buried near his predeceſſor, under abbat Parker's monument, without any inſcription.

A vacancy for above two years, the reaſon of which, according to Mr. Strype, was that the queen might ſatisfy her debt of 500*l.* owing to her for the tenths of the clergy out of the revenues of the ſee.

John Bullingham, D.D. prebendary of Worceſter and Lincoln; ſometime rector of Boxwell, and of Withington, in Glouceſterſhire, was elected on the 15th of Auguſt, confirmed the 1ſt of September, and conſecrated on the 3d, 1581, by the archbiſhop of Canterbury, aſſiſted by the biſhops of London and Rocheſter, in the chapel of Croydon. April 21, 1585, he was inſtituted to the vicarage of Painſwick, in this county, which he held in commendam with his biſhoprick for ſome time; as he did the biſhoprick of Briſtol, from the time of his conſecration 'till 1589, when Dr.

[f] Biſhop Hooper was degraded only of prieſthood, and not of his epiſcopal office; for it ſeems that the biſhop of London, and others of his perſuaſion, did not think it neceſſary to degrade him of any higher order; for they reputed him, and the other biſhops made in the reign of king Edward the Sixth, as nothing more than prieſts.

Fletcher was conſecrated thereto; and that biſhoprick being taken from him, the rectory of Kilmington, aliàs Culmington, in the deanery of Carey, and dioceſe of Wells, was conferred on him, in July, 1596. He died at Kenſington, May 20, 1598, and was buried in this cathedral, without any memorial; and, the ſame year, he was ſucceeded by

Godfrey Goldſborough, D.D. formerly fellow of Trinity college in Cambridge, archdeacon of Worceſter, ſometime rector of Stockton, archdeacon of Salop, in the church of Litchfield, prebendary of London, Hereford, and Worceſter; who was elected the 2d of Auguſt, and conſecrated November the 12th, 1598, by the archbiſhop of Caterbury, aſſiſted by the biſhops of London, Litchfield and Coventry, and of Chicheſter, at the archbiſhop's palace at Lambeth; inſtalled the 20th of December, and had licenſe to hold the prebend of Worceſter in commendam with it. He died on the 26th of May, 1604, at his palace at the Vineyard, and was buried in this cathedral, in a little chapel on the north ſide of the lady's. Over his grave, according to his deſire, there is an handſome altar monument erected for him by his executors, with his effigy in his epiſcopal habit, and at the head of it this inſcription in capitals:

Thomas Ravis, D.D. rector of Bredon in Worceſterſhire, dean of Chriſt-church in Oxford, a man of eminent learning, gravity, and approved prudence, was elected on the 17th of December, 1604, and conſecrated the 19th of March following, at Lambeth, by the archbiſhop of Canterbury, aſſiſted by the biſhops of Durham and Chicheſter. Whilſt he was biſhop here[c] he was at a very conſiderable expence in repairing his palace at Glouceſter, made ſeveral water-courſes there, and repaired the vineyard houſe. In 1607, he was tranſlated to London, and ſucceeded by Henry Parry, D.D. dean of Cheſter, who was conſecrated by the archbiſhop of Canterbury, aſſiſted by the biſhops of London, Rocheſter, and Chicheſter, at Lambeth, July 12, 1607; and whilſt he preſided here, made the pulpit in the body of the cathedral, at his own charge, and gave very liberally to the poor of this city. He was tranſlated to Worceſter in the end of September, 1610.

Gyles Thompſon, D.D. ſometime rector of Pembridge, in the county of Hereford, dean of Windſor, and canon of Hereford, was elected on the 15th of March, 1611, confirmed on the 9th of June, had reſtitution of the temporalties on the 27th of the ſame month, and was conſecrated at Lambeth, by the archbiſhop of Canterbury, aſſiſted by the biſhops of Oxford, Ely, Bath and Wells, and Litchfield and Coventry; having liberty to hold his deanery in commendam only for one year. He never came into his dioceſe, but died June 14, 1612, to the great grief of all that knew his piety or learning, after he had taken great pains, by the command of king James the Firſt, in tranſlating part of the New Teſtament; and lies buried in a chapel on the north ſide of Windſor collegiate church, where is on his monument the buſt of a biſhop, and this inſcription:

Individuæ Trinitati per omnia ſecula gloria, per quam fui, ero. Hic ſitus eſt Ægidius Tomſon, hujus capellæ quondam decanus, cujus mens ſincera, lingua docta, manus munda. Fuit Londini natus, educatus Oxoniæ, in collegio omnium bonorum indigentium eruditiſſimorum amantiſſimus ſemper vixit, cujus corpus quamvis mortalitas terræ ſubjecit, illius tamen animam pietas cœlis inſeruit. His will was dated Feburary the 12th, 1605, and proved July the 7th, 1612.

Miles Smith, D.D. ſucceeded, being elected July 15, 1612, and conſecrated at Croydon, by the archbiſhop of Canterbury, aſſiſted by the biſhops of London, Litchfield and Coventry, and of Rocheſter, on the 19th or 20th of September following. He was rector of Hartlebury and Upton-upon-Severn, in the county of Worceſter, prebendary of Exeter, and canon reſidentiary of Hereford; was appointed by king James the Firſt, May the 8th, 1610, one of the firſt fellows of Chelſea-college, being a man of ſuch eminent learning, as to occaſion him to be called a walking library. He is ſaid to have diſliked the hot proceedings of ſome very zealous perſons, eſpecially after doctor Laud was made dean: and having compoſed the preface [d] that is now before our church bibles, and tranſlated the four major and the twelve minor prophets, he died at his palace at Glouceſter on the 19th of October, 1624, much lamented by the poor of the city, to whom he had been very charitable, and was buried November the 9th, in the lady's chapel. Over his grave was laid a white ſtone, without any inſcription, and only his arms impaled with thoſe of the ſee.—Upon his death, Dr. John Preſton was offered the biſhoprick, but waved it on account of his lecture, which he preferred to it.

Godfrey Goodman, D.D. prebendary of Weſtminſter, rector of Weſt-Ildeſley, in Berkſhire, and of Kemmerton in this dioceſe, (the advowſon of which he gave to the corporation of Glouceſter) and dean of Rocheſter, was elected on the 26th of November, confirmed March the 5th, conſecrated the next day at Lambeth, by the archbiſhop of Canterbury, aſſiſted by the biſhops of Lincoln, London, Rocheſter, and Landaff, and inſtalled April the 4th following. He held in commendam with his biſhoprick his canonry of Windſor, and rectory of Weſt-Ildeſley. In 1640, he was ſequeſtrated [e] from the biſhoprick, firſt committed to a purſuivant, and afterwards to a gate-houſe, on account of ſome notions favouring the church of Rome, to which he was reconciled [f] before his death, which happened January the 19th, 1655, in St. Margaret's pariſh, Weſtminſter; in which pariſh church he was [g] buried, near the font in the weſt part, without any memorial.

A vacancy 'till after the reſtoration.—John Hacket, D.D. [h] in 1660, was offered this biſhoprick, but refuſed it, and the next year accepted that of Litchfield; whereupon

William Nicholſon, D.D. archdeacon of Brecknock, canon reſidentiary of St. David's, vicar of Llandilovawr, in the county of Carmarthen; and afterwards rector of Biſhop's-Cleeve, in the county of Glouceſter, was elected on the 26th of November, 1660; conſecrated in king Henry the Seventh's chapel at Weſtminſter, by the archbiſhop of York, aſſiſted by the biſhops of Durham, Chicheſter, Lincoln, and Peterborough, by commiſſion from the archbiſhop of Canterbury, January 6, 1660; inſtalled the 11th of January, and had the temporalties reſtored to him on the 5th of Feburary following. He, ſays Mr. Wood, being a man of great erudition, prudent, modeſt, and of a moderate mind, died Feburary the 5th, 1671; and was buried in a little chapel on the ſouth ſide of the lady's, where is a monument againſt the eaſt wall erected for him, with this inſcription on it, compoſed by his great friend Mr. Bull, afterwards the very learned and pious biſhop of St. David's:

John Prichard, or Prichet, D.D. vicar of St. Gyles's Cripplegate, London; rector of Harlington, in the county of Middleſex, and prebendary of Mora, in the church of St. Paul's; was elected on the 10th of October, 1672; conſecrated at Lambeth by the archbiſhop of Canterbury, aſſiſted by the biſhops of London, Ely, Rocheſter, and Cheſter, November the 3d; and had the temporalties reſtored to him the 29th of January following. He held the three preferments before-mentioned in commendam with his biſhoprick, and died January the 1ſt, 1680; and was buried at Harlington, with this inſcription on a copartment affixed to a pillar on the north ſide near his grave, which was under the pulpit:

In 1684, he reſigned Fontmill for Avening, in the county of Glouceſter; in 1685, he reſigned Avening for Standiſh vicarage in the ſame county. And Feburary the 1ſt, 1690, was deprived,

He is buried in the chancel of that church, within the communion rails, and had a black marble grave-ſtone laid over him with this inſcription on it:

Robertus Frampton Epiſcopus Glouceſtrenſis. Cætera quis neſcit. Obiit 8 Cal. Junii An. Ætatis ſuæ 86, Conſecrationis 28, Æræ Chriſtianæ 1708.

His will was dated in Feburary, 1702, and proved in November, 1708, by which he bequeathed, amongſt other things, 100*l.* for each of the following purpoſes, to promote the goſpel in foreign parts; to deprived miniſters; to poor ſervitors in CCC. Oxford.

Edward Fowler, D.D. born at Weſterleigh, in Glouceſterſhire, prebendary of this church, rector of Northill, in the county of Bedford, and All-hallows, Breadſtreet, London; upon biſhop Frampton's deprivation, was nominated, April the 23d, 1691; elected the 8th of June, confirmed the 2d, and conſecrated the 5th of July, by the archbiſhop of Canterbury, aſſiſted by the biſhops of Wincheſter, Saliſbury, Worceſter, Briſtol and Ely, in the church of St. Mary le Bow, London; holding his vicarage in commendam with his biſhoprick. He died at Chelſea, Auguſt 26, 1714, and was buried in a vault, on the north ſide of Hendon church-yard, near Hampſtead, in Middleſex. Within the chancel is ſet up a handſome marble copartment, with colums and arms at top, which bears this inſcription:

To the pious memory of the Right Reverend Edward Fowler, late Lord Biſhop of Glouceſter; to which ſtation he was advanced by king William, in the year 1691, for his known ſteadineſs to the true intereſt of the church of England, and of his country, in times of danger. He approved himſelf worthy of that dignity, by a faithful and diligent diſcharge of his paſtoral office; 'till diſabled by age and bodily infirmities, he reſted from his labours in the 82d year of his age, admitted to partake of his reward. He departed this life Auguſt 26, 1714, and was interred in the grave of his firſt wife, in this church; leaving behind him, in the excellent Treatiſes, publiſhed by himſelf, laſting monuments of learning, judgment, piety and chriſtian temper of mind. He was twice married, firſt to Ann, daughter of Arthur Bernardiſton, of the Inner Temple, eſq; one of the maſters of chancery. She departed this life December 19, 1696. He had by her three ſons, Nathaniel, Edward, and Richard; and five daughters, Anne, Anne, Suſannah, Elizabeth, and Mary, ſurvived him. His ſecond wife Elizabeth, who likewiſe ſurvived him, was Elizabeth, widow of the Reverend Dr. Ezekiah Burton, and daughter of Ralph Trevor, of London, merchant.

Underneath is as follows:

This monument was erected at the coſt of Richard Fowler, LLB. the younger ſon above-mentioned, who married Suſannah, daughter of John Pyke, of Downſey, in the Iſle of Purbeck, gent: by whom he had one daughter Anne, both which dying many years before him, were buried in this church, near his mother, and his father's youngeſt ſiſter Suſanna, the firſt wife of Meſhack Smith, A.M. then vicar of this church. The ſaid Richard Fowler died November 9, 1716, and did by his laſt will direct his executors, viz. his brother Edward, and his ſiſter Suſanna, to cauſe a vault to be made, which for want of rome in the church was made in the church-yard, at the weſt corner of this wall, wherein is depoſited his body, and into which are removed the remains of his wife and daughter, with thoſe of his father and mother; all reſt there together. An. Dom. 1717, in hope of a joyful reſurrection.

His ſucceſſor was

Richard Willis, D.D. born at Bewdley, in Worceſterſhire, ſometime fellow of All-Souls college, the king's chaplain, chaplain-general of the army; ſub-preceptor to the duke of Glouceſter, prebendary of Weſtminſter, and dean of Lincoln. He was elected December the 10th, 1714, confirmed January the 15th, conſecrated January the 16th, in Lambeth chapel, by the biſhops of Saliſbury, Litchfield and Coventry, and of Bangor, by commiſſion from the archbiſhop of Caterbury, and inſtalled the 13th of April following; and had licence to hold his deanery in commendam with it: But was tranſlated to the ſee of Saliſbury in 1721, and thence, in 1725, to Wincheſter; where he was buried towards the ſouth ſide of the body of the church, and has a fine monument in marble erected for him againſt the ſouth wall, being at length, in a recumbent poſture, attired in his epiſcopal habit, with the George hanging on his breaſt, as prelate of the order of Saint George, and this inſcription and character, which he very juſtly deſerved:

In Memoriam Reverendi admodum in Chriſto Patris RICHARDI WILLIS, Epiſcopi Wintonienſis; viri ea morum ſimplicitate, ea animi integritate, et verborum fide, ut qui illum optimè noverint, ſi maximè æſtimaverint, propenſiſſimè dilexerint. Patriam, principem, et libertatem publicam, unicè amavit. Religionem interea vere chriſtianam ſanctiſſime coluit, acerrime vindicavit. Nulla temporum varietate debilitari, aut frangi, potuit. In republica, in eccleſia, fidelis; conſtans, et ſui ſimilis. Egregiis hiſce virtutibus inſtructus, in mediis, quos abundè meruit, honoribus feliciſſimè conſenuit; donec annorum plenus, obiit 10 die Auguſti, Anno Domini 1734, Ætatis 71. JOHANNES WILLIS, armiger, filius ejus et Heres, pie memor poſuit.

John Wilcocks, D.D. born at Briſtol, ſometime fellow of Magdalen college in Oxford, upon biſhop Willis's tranſlation to Saliſbury, was elected November 25, 1721, conſecrated December the 2d, inſtalled the 22d of the ſame month, and held a prebend of Weſtminſter in commendam with his biſhoprick; but being tranſlated to the ſee of Rocheſter, and having the deanery of Weſtminſter along with it, he was ſucceeded by Elias Sydall, D.D. ſometime fellow of Bennet, alias Corpus Chriſti college in Cambridge, and afterwards prebendary of Canterbury, who was tranſlated hither from the biſhoprick of Saint David's November the 4th, 1731; being then alſo dean of Canterbury, which office, together with this biſhoprick, he held 'till his death, on December the 24th, 1737.

Martin Benſon, D.D, ſucceeded, whoſe character is admirably drawn in the following inſcription, on a fine marble monument, erected for him in the cathedral at Glouceſter:

Reader be admoniſhed by this marble, to imitate Martin Benſon, late biſhop of this dioceſe. A rational piety raiſed the views of this excellent man above the world, and formed his whole temper into a truly chriſtian ſpirit of reſignation. An uncommon warmth of benevolence made it the buſineſs and pleaſure of his life to go about doing good, by inſtruction in righteouſneſs, and by works of charity. He watched the flock of Chriſt as a faithful ſhepherd, from a ſenſe of his own duty, and a diſintereſted concern for their common welfare: And he maintained the dignity of his authority, by the meekneſs with which he exerciſed it. He felt a deep compaſſion for the vicious; and ſhewed it, even whilſt he was expoſing the folly and wickedneſs of vice, with a ſtrength and turn of language peculiar to himſelf. His reproofs being dictated by friendſhip, qualified by candour, and delivered delivered with a natural delicacy of manners, were ſincere without roughneſs, and endearing without diſſimulation. He was by conſtitution liable to a depreſſion of ſpirits, but innocence of heart enlivened his mind, and his converſation, with a chearfulneſs that created a more affectionate regard for his ſuperior worth, by rendering it more familiar and amiable. Under the moſt acute pains of his laſt illneſs he poſſeſſed his ſoul in patience, and with a firm truſt in his redeemer, calmnly reſigned his ſpirit to the father of mercies.

That ſuch an example might be perpetuated, Gabriel Hanger erected this monument in memory of his ever honoured friend.

Another decent monument is fixed by his executor againſt the weſt wall of the nave of this church, near the place of his interment; which, at the requeſt of this amiable and good prelate, is as near the door as conveniently might be.

William Johnſon, D.D. ſucceeded biſhop Benſon, and was tranſlated from this ſee to that of Worceſter, November the 9th, 1759, upon which William Warburton, D. D. was elected. His writings ſhew him to be a perſon of great learning, and he is the preſent biſhop of this dioceſe.

Of the DEANERY, DEANS, CHAPTER, &c.

IN the charter of foundation of the biſhoprick of Glouceſter, the king eſtabliſhed a dean and ſix prebendaries in the place of the abbats and monks, and endowed them by his letters patents, with

A fee-farm rent of 4*l.* a year out of the manor of Wallop, in the county of Southampton; and all the houſes, market, fairs, toll, and all profits whatſoever, lying or being in the city of Glouceſter, or ſuburbs thereof, which belonged to the late monaſtery of Saint Peter there.

The rectories of Barnwood, Brokethrop, Churcham, Colne-Alwyn, Fairford, and Eaſtlech-Martyn, in the county of Glouceſter; of Saint Mary de Lode, and the rectory and church, or chapel of Gracelane, in the city of Glouceſter; the rectories and churches of Sherſton and Aldrington, in the county of Wilts; Great-Marlow, in the county of Bucks; Chippingnorton, in the county of Oxford; Lancarnan, Lantwit, Lamblethian, Lantriſſam, Senmarke and Cardiffe, with the chapel of Saint Donats, in the county of Glamorgan.

Penſions yearly to be taken out of the following rectories, &c. viz. 20*s.* out of St. John Baptiſt, and 13*s.* 4*d.* out of St. Nicholas, both in the city of Glouceſter; 10*s.* out of Mattiſden, in the county of Glouceſter; 53*s.* 4*d.* out of Alcannynge, and 20*s.* out of Lydyard Tregoz, both in the county of Wilts; 4*l.* out of St. Peter de Mancroft, in the city of Norwich; 40*s.* out of St. Martin in Vintry, in the city of London; and 10*s.* to be paid by the guardians of Braze-noſe college, Oxon.

Advowſons, and rights of patronage, to the rectories of Mattiſdon, Rudford, Coln-Rogers, Ablington and Taynton, in the county of Glouceſter; and Lynkynholte, in the county of Southampton;—And to the vicarages of Fairford, Brookthrop, Churcham, Lyncham and Colne-Alwyns, in the county of Glouceſter; of the Holy Trinity, in the city of Glouceſter; of Sherſton, and Aldrington, in the county of Wilts; of Great Marlow, in the county of Bucks: of Lantwitt, Lamblethian, Lantriſſam, Penmarke, and Cardiffe, with the chapel of St. Donats, in the county of Glamorgan. The chapter preſent alſo to Chipping-Norton, in Oxfordſhire.

The dean and chapter are ſubject to a rent-charge, at firſt reſerved to the crown of 90*l.* 14*s.* ob. but which was granted away from it by king Charles the the Second, and is now, or at leaſt was lately, paid to a perſon of the name of Da Coſta. They are alſo ſubject to other annual payments to the amount of 44*l.* 16*s.* 7*d.* q. which may be ſeen more particularly in the Charter of Endowment printed in the Appendix No. 9.

The manors of Linkynholt and Littleton, were given by the dean and chapter, under their common ſeal, to king Henry the Eighth, the 20th of May, 37° regni; and probably Wallop was granted to him about the ſame time, ſince which there have been but few alienations from the firſt endowment.

It was affirmed in parliament, June the 15th, 1641, that upon a ſurvey of the lands, &c. of this deanery, 'it then appeared to have above twelve rectories of great value; about thirty vicarages; penſions, and portions of tythes; almoſt the third part of the houſes of the city of Glouceſter, of which the old rent was about 175*l.* beſides the yearly revenues of eighteen goodly manors, divers other lands, tenements and hereditaments, manor-houſes, and premiſſes; the old rent of aſſize of one of the eight manors, being 80*l.* a year.'

The dean's houſe ſeems to have belonged to the prior of the abbey; and it is ſaid in an old book in the cuſtody of the corporation, that on the 8th of July, 1648, a leaſe for ſeven years was granted of the deanery, by the mayor and burgeſſes, to Thomas Pury, jun. at 40*s.* per ann. in conſideration of his having laid out 80*l.* to repair it.

The letters patent for the foundation of the deanery are printed in the Appendix No. 7; and the ſtatutes of the cathedral, which are the ſame with thoſe of Briſtol, and other new foundations, are printed in the Appendix No. 28. They were compiled by Dr. Heath, then biſhop of Worceſter, in whoſe dioceſe Glouceſterſhire was, 'till erected into a diſtinct biſhoprick; he was afterwards archbiſhop of York and lord chancellor of England; by Dr. Day, then biſhop of Chicheſter; and archdeacon Cox, who was afterwards preceptor and almoner to king Edward the Sixth, chancellor of the univerſity of Oxford, and dean of Chriſt-church, from whence he was removed to the deanery of Weſtminſter. He was a great maintainer of the Engliſh liturgy and rights, at Frankfort, againſt Knox and the Puritans, when he was exiled in the reign of queen Mary; and was preferr'd by queen Elizabeth to the biſhoprick of Ely.

The arms of the dean and chapter, appointed by Chriſtoper Barker, eſq; principal king at arms, March 28, 1542, are, Azure, a feſs Or, charged with three croſſes formy, fitchy, of the firſt. In chief a canton gules charged with a demy roſe with beams of the third, between two demy fleurs de lis of the firſt.

DEANS of GLOUCESTER.

William Jenings, B.D. (the laſt prior of St. Oſwald's, a monk of St. Peter's abbey) being the king's chaplain, was appointed the firſt dean by the charter of foundation, dated September 3, 1541. Whilſt he was dean, he was incumbent of St. John's, in Glouceſter, and of Swindon, Beverſtone, and Cromhall, in this dioceſe. He died November the 4th, 1565, and was buried in the middle of the choir, oppoſite the choriſters ſeat; and had a large ſtone laid over him, which was removed, in the year 1718, to the eaſt cloiſter, before the old chapter-houſe door; at each corner of which ſtone his arms are engraved on a braſs plate; viz. 1. On a feſs three roundels. 2. A bull's head caboſhed. 3. On two bars ſix martlets. 4. as the firſt. On another plate is the following inſcription:

Hic Gulielme jaces Jeninges, quem ſex quater annos
Edes decanum viderat iſta ſuum.
Milleni, a Chriſto, quinginti biſque triceni
Et quinti, quarta luce Novembris, obis.
Clarus avo fueras, clarus patre, clarus et ipſe;
Doctrina clarus, clarus et ingenio.
Non tam pane tuo, quam Chriſti pane repleſti
Chriſticolas, ergo vivis et aſtra tenes.

John Man, A.M. maſter, or keeper, of St. Bartholomew's hoſpital in this city, warden of Merton college in Oxford, and prebendary of Bigleſwade in Lincoln cathedral, being preſented by queen Elizabeth on the 10th of December, was inſtituted by proxy, in the perſon of Mr. Walter Jones, February 2, 1565. It appears by the books in the cuſtody of the regiſter, that the queen granted him a diſpenſation that he might keep all his preferments, and receive all the profits of them, without being obliged to take any other degree, which is ſaid to have been done, to enable him to perform an embaſſy the more honourably, on which the queen intended to ſend him. He died March the 18th, 1568, and was buried in the church of St. Anne, Alderſgate, London, without any memorial; and was ſucceeded by Thomas Cooper, or Cowper, D.D. who was inſtituted on the 5th of July, 1569. He was removed to the biſhoprick of Lincoln in 1570, and thence to Wincheſter in 1584.

Lawrence Humfry, or Humphrey, D.D. regius profeſſor of divinity, and preſident of Magdalen college, in Oxford, was inſtituted on the 13th of March, 1570. In 1574, he occurs one of the eccleſiaſtical commiſſioners for the queen; as he does in 1576, to the archbiſhop of Canterbury, for metropolitical viſitation. Being afterwards preferred to the deanery of Wincheſter, he was ſucceeded by Anthony Rud, D.D. who was inſtituted the 10th of January, 1584; and on the 9th of June, 1594, was preferred to the biſhoprick of St. David.

Griffith, or Jeffry, or Griffin, Lewis, D.D. rector of Kingſland, was inſtalled the ſame year. In his will, dated February 5, 1606, and proved July the 16th, he deſires to be buried in one of the cathedrals of Glouceſter, Worceſter, or Hereford, or Weſtminſter abbey, in all which he was a dignitary; and accordingly was interred in the cathedral church of Hereford, June the 6th, 1607; but there is no memorial of him.

Thomas Moreton, D. D. ſucceed him on the 22d of June, 1607. In 1609, he was removed hence to the deanery of Wincheſter; and thence, in 1616, to the biſhoprick of Cheſter; thence alſo, in 1618, to the biſhoprick of Litchfield and Coventry; and laſtly, was promoted to that of Durham in 1632.

Richard Field, D. D. chaplain to queen Elizabeth and king James the Firſt, canon of Windſor, rector of Burg (or Borough) Clere, in Hampſhire, was promoted to this deanery in 1609. In the year 1610, the king appointed him one of the fellows of Chelſea college, who were a body of very eminent divines. He died on the 21ſt of November, 1616, and was buried at Windſor, with this inſcription on his grave-ſtone:

Richardus Field hujus olim coll. canonicus, et eccleſiæ Glouceſt. Decanus, vere Doctor Theologiæ, et author librorum V. De eccleſia; una cum Elizabetha Hariſſia, ſanctiſſima et chariſſima conjuge, ex qua ſex reliquit filios, et filiam unicam; hic, ſub communi marmore, expectant Chriſti reditum, qui felicitatem quam ingreſſi ſunt adventu ſuo perficiat ac conſummet. Obierunt in Domino, hic, anno ſalutis 1616, Ætatis ſuæ 55: hæc, anno ſalutis 1614, Ætatis ſuæ 41.

Mr. A. Wood, in his Athenæ, tells us, that he was a principal maintainer of proteſtancy, a powerful preacher, a profound ſchool-man, and an exact diſputant.

William Laud, D. D. ſucceeded, and was inſtalled December the 20th, 1616; promoted to the ſee of St. David in 1621; thence removed to Bath and Wells, afterwards to London, thence to Canterbury, and was beheaded on the 10th of January, 1644.

Richard Senhouſe, D. D. fellow of St. John's college, in Cambridge, and chaplain to prince Charles, was inſtalled the 13th of December, 1621, and, in 1624, was made biſhop of Carliſle; whereupon Thomas Winniff, D. D. chaplain to the king, and ſome time to prince Henry, and prince Charles, was inſtalled November the 10th, 1624, and afterwards made dean of St. Paul's; and thence removed to the ſee of London.

George Warburton, M. A. the king's chaplain, was inſtalled on the 11th of June, 1631; but in Auguſt following was removed to the deanery of Wells.

Accepted Frewen, D. D. the king's chaplain, preſident of Magdalen college, and vice-chancellor of Oxford, was inſtalled September the 13th, 1631. In 1644, he was advanced to the biſhoprick of Litchfield and Coventry; and in 1660, was tranſlated to the archbiſhoprick of York.

William Brough, D. D. was nominated by the king Auguſt the 17th, 1643, and inſtalled the 20th of November, 1644. He died July the 5th, 1671, and was buried at Windſor, of which he had been one of the canons, with this ſhort inſcription on his grave-ſtone:

Dr. William Brough, dean of Glouceſter, and prebendary of Windſor, was buried here.

Thomas Viner, D. D. prebendary of this cathedral, and canon of Windſor, was inſtalled the 23d of July, 1671. He died April 11, 1673, and was buried in the lady's chapel in this cathedral, on the 18th, with the following inſcription on his graveſtone:

Thomas Viner, D. D. hujus eccleſiæ decanus, et Winſorianæ prebendarius; illuſtris genere, pietate in Deum, venuſtate, ingenio, comitate, morum integritate vitæ illibatæ longe illuſtrior, qui ſummo amicorum luctu & mœrore deceſſit, April. 11, A. D. 1673, Ætatis 44.

Robert Frampton, M. A. prebendary of this cathedral, was inſtalled on the 6th of May, 1673, and promoted to the biſhoprick in 1680-1.

Thomas Marſhal, D. D. rector of Lincoln college in Oxford, a noted critic, and, according to Mr. Wood, every way worthy of his ſtation in the church, was inſtalled April the 30th, 1681; and dying, April 19, 1685, was buried in All-Saints church, in Oxford, with this epitaph:

P. M. S. Tho. Marſhal, S. T. D. quem in agro Leiceſt. Barkbega genuit; Oxonium educavit; ex paſtore mercator, Dordrect. Lincoln Collegium primo ſocium, deinde rectorem, fecit. Glouceſtriæ decanus impiger, concionibus potens, & creber pietate, inſignis doctrina linguarum orientalium & occidentalium, aquila perſpicax, Ægyptiæ phœnix unicus. Ex muſæo inſtructiſſimo academiæ libros in B. P. deſideratos, collegio reliquos, et pecunias amplas, legavit: ſui depoſitum heic reliquit 18 Aprilis, 1685.

William Jane, D. D. regius profeſſor of divinity in Oxford, prebendary of Exeter, was inſtalled June the 6th, 1685; and dying at Chriſt's-church college, in Oxford, where he was one of the canons, was buried in the cathedral there, without any memorial.

Knightley Chetwood, or Chetwode, D. D. archdeacon of York, rector of Riſington Magna, and Riſington Parva, in this dioceſe, was inſtalled the 6th of April, 1707. And dying about March, 1719, was buried at Tempsford, co. Bedford, (where he had an eſtate) with this inſcription:

Knightly Chetwoode, egregius ſane et ſingularis vir, ingenio adeò ſublimi et venuſto, adeo divinis et humanis literis exculto, ut nihil ſupra. Eccleſiæ et patriæ amiciſſimus, catholicæ fidei rigidus ſervator. Immortalitatem adivit, annum exigens ſexageſimum octavum, tertio nonas Aprilis, MDCCXX.

Τὸ θνητὸν τοῦτο ἐνδύσονται ἀθανασίαν.

John Waugh, D. D. rector of St. Peter's, Cornhill, London, and prebendary of Lincoln, was inſtituted Auguſt the 4th, 1720, and inſtalled on the morrow. In Auguſt, 1723, he was made biſhop of Carliſle, and had his deanery in commendam 'till chriſtmas following. In his time the common ſeal of the dean and chapter, which had been uſed all along from the foundation thereof, was altered, being the old picture of the Trinity, and a new one appointed to be uſed inſtead of it. On the old one was repreſented an old man ſitting under an arch, with a long beard and a great beam of light over his head, intended for God the Father: he had between his knees a croſs, with our Saviour on it, held by his hands at each of the croſs ends, deſigned for God the Son; and a dove at the upper end of the croſs, intended for God the Holy Ghoſt. Below were the arms of dean Jeninges, and on the ſides the initial letters of his his name, W. J.—Round it was SIGILLV̄ COMVNE DECANI ET CAPITVLI ECCLESIÆ CATHEDRAL. SCTE ET INDIVIDVÆ TRINITAT. GLOU. The ſeal now made uſe of by the dean and chapter has the arms of the dean and chapter, and under them the arms of dean Waugh, viz. On a chevron three roundlets; and on the ſides of his arms the initial letters of his name, I. W.

John Frankland, D.D. rector of St. Stephen's, Briſtol, upon dean Waugh's promotion, was appointed to ſucceed him; and left this deanery for that of Ely, and the maſterſhip of Sidney college, in Cambridge.

Peter Alix, D.D. rector of Caſtle-Camps, in the county of Cambridge, upon Dr. Frankland's exchange, was promoted in the year 1729, and exchanged it for the deanery of Ely.

Daniel Newcombe, D.D. rector of Whimple in the county of Devon, upon Dr. Alix's exchange, was admitted in 1730.

Joſiah Tucker, D.D. ſucceeded July 13, 1758, who was one of the prebendaries of Briſtol, and rector of St. Stephen's in that city. He reſigned his prebend, but holds the rectory, and is the preſent dean. Beſide the great learning and abilities which diſtinguiſh him in his profeſſion, he is eminent for his extenſive charity, and for his great knowledge in the true principles of trade and commerce, and other matters reſpecting the police of a country.

CHANCELLORS, or VICARS GENERAL.

John Williams, LL.B. (afterwards LL.D.) and Richard Brown, LL.B. took upon them jointly the office of chancellor, on the 28th of November, 1541. How long they enjoyed it together does not appear; but probably it might be 'till about the year 1545, when a commiſſion was granted to Hugh Whittington, LL.B. for exerciſing a part of the vicar-general's office in ſome deaneries of this dioceſe, only during the biſhop's pleaſure. This Williams, in king Henry the Eighth's reign, appears very zealous in the execution of the ſix articles. In the next reign, he was a ſudden convert to proteſtantiſm; and he began queen Mary's with depriving ſeveral clergymen of their livings for their marriage. In 1555, he condemned Henry Hicks, a carpenter or joiner of this city, to carry a faggot in Berkeley church, and in this cathedral; and delivered over to the ſecular power Thomas Croker, a bricklayer, and Thomas Drowry, a blind boy, who were both burnt in May, 1556. It is affirmed, that in 1558, when the eccleſiaſtical commiſſioners appointed by queen Elizabeth were coming to Glouceſter, and dean Jeninges (with whom he dined that day) intreating him to meet the commiſſioners, he declared he never would ſee them, and was as good as his word, for he died on the ſame day. He was ſometime incumbent of the Holy Trinity in Glouceſter, of Rockhampton, Beverſtone, Painſwick, Siddington St. Mary, Coln St. Dennis, and Welford, in this county; and a prebendary in Glouceſter cathedral.

After Dr. Williams's death, during the vacancy of this ſee, Dr. Powel is mentioned as dean, who was then vicar-general to the archbiſhop of Canterbury for this dioceſe, and keeper of its ſpiritualties, and was afterwards chancellor.

John Louth, LL.B. was advanced on the 4th of November, 1562, to continue during the biſhop's pleaſure. And, November the 26th, 1565, was removed to give place to

Thomas Powel, LL.D. who was ſoon after promoted; but, January the 12th, 1570, the biſhop recalling his letters commiſſional for this office, granted them to

Richard Green, LL.B. auditor, or commiſſioner, to the biſhop in his court. He occurs a commiſſioner for eccleſiaſtical cauſes, appointed by queen Elizabeth in 1574, 1575, and 1577. But about the beginning of the year 1576, was amoved in order to reſtore

Dr. Powel, who occurs in this office April the 10th, 1576, as alſo a commiſſioner for eccleſiaſtical cauſes, appointed by the queen. He ſeems to have been ſometime vicar of Barrington Magna, and rector of Kemmerton. In 1579, he was ſuſpended by the queen's commiſſioners from this office during his life, and excommunicated.

William Blackleach, LL.B. was promoted in 1581. In 1588, the biſhop recalled his commiſſion; and on the 13th of March, in the ſame year, granted it to Gilbert Borne, LL.B. yet Blackleach notwithſtanding continued by force the exerciſe of this office. And refuſing to withdraw from the conſiſtory court, the biſhop excommunicated him on the 8th of July. From this ſentence he appealed to the archbiſhop of Canterbury, and at length, by an injunction from the lord high chancellor, was reſtored to his office by the biſhop on the 6th of October, 1590. After this, great animoſities and contradictions continued between the biſhop and Blackleach, concerning their ſeveral juriſdictions, but nothing more material enſued.

John Seaman, LL.D. was promoted about the 2d of October, 1600; and Thomas Edwards, LL.D. occurs with him in this office Auguſt the 10th, 1608; but upon what account it does not appear. He died in 1623, and was buried in the chancel of Painſwick, where there was a handſome monument of alabaſter and black marble erected for him, with the following inſcription:

Hic iacent Cineres Domini (ſumme venerabilis) Johannis Seaman LL Do^ris Dioceſeos Glouc^r Cancell: tum Virtutis, tum Fortunæ dotibus ſpectatiſſimi.

William Sutton, M. A. (afterwards D. D.) was confirmed by the chapter July the 16th, 1623. In 1627, this office was granted by patent to him and Dr. Baber jointly and ſeverally; but ſoon after, articles were exhibited againſt Sutton in the high commiſſion court, and tho' he moved for a prohibition to ſtop the proceedings, it was not granted, and he was deprived. *See Godolphin's Repert. Of the Archdeaconry and Archdeacons.

Archdeacons were antiently inferior to rural deans, and were originally appointed to inſpect the diligence of deacons in the collecting and diſtributing of alms; but by their perſonal attendance on biſhops, engroſſed their favour, and gradually grew to be more conſiderable than rural deans.

The places ſubject to the archdeacon of this dioceſe, are ſet down in pp. 153, 154, 155. It remains only to obſerve, that John Carpenter, biſhop of Worceſter, appropriated the rectory of Durſley to the archdeaconry of Glouceſter, in the year 1475, which rectory belonged to St. Peter's abbey, and was given in exchange for the archdeacon's houſe in Glouceſter.

Nicholas Wotton, LL. D. the king's chaplain, who was the laſt archdeacon of Glouceſter in the church of Worceſter, was appointed archdeacon by the charter of foundation, September the 3d, 1541. About the ſame time he was made dean of Canterbury, and in the year 1544, was alſo made dean of York, and then he reſigned this archdeaconry.

Prebends and Prebendaries.

When the Norman monarchy was firſt ſettled, prebendaries and prieſts in England were not obliged to celebacy; and it was grown into a cuſtom, for eccleſiaſtical benefices to deſcend hereditarily to the next of blood, which occaſioned a great conteſt between the heirs of the prebends of the monaſtery of St. Peter and St. Paul at Shrewſbury, and the monks of the ſame place, who claimed the prebends after the death of the firſt prebendaries. Camden, col. 656.

Formerly lay-men might have been prebendaries of our cathedrals, except of thoſe erected by king Henry the Eighth. It is ſaid, that the duke of Somerſet, in the reign of king Edward the Sixth, had engroſſed to himſelf fifty prebends. But the laity are now excluded by the act of uniformity, made after the reſtoration of king Charles the Second, which requires the reading of the whole divine ſervice within two months after being admitted.

There are ſix prebends in this church, five of which are in the gift of the king, and one is annexed to the maſterſhip of Pembroke college in Oxford, by 12° Annæ, ſt. 2. c. 6. ſ. 7. None of the prebends are charged with the payment of firſt fruits or tenths. Though there are no fixed ſtalls kept here ſince the reſtoration, and the cuſtom is to inſtall the junior prebendary always in the ſixth, or loweſt ſtall, the ſeries ſeems to ſtand in the following order.

Of the CATHEDRAL CHURCH.

AN account has been already given of the original building, and gradual increaſe of this noble edifice, which was the antient abbey-church of Saint Peter; but it will be convenient to recapitulate ſome of the particulars.

Aldred, biſhop of Worceſter, pulled down the old church, which was decay'd, and building a fine new one, dedicated it to St. Peter in the year 1058, which was intirely burnt down in 1088. The next year abbat Serlo rebuilt it from the foundation. Several times afterwards it ſuffered from fire, but perhaps was never totally deſtroyed. Henry Foliot, the twelfth abbat, built a handſome tower in 1237, and vaulted part of the church; and ſometime before his death, began a new tower at the weſt end, on the ſouth part of the front, which John de Felda, one of his ſucceſſors, finiſhed.

But we muſt date the origin of this noble edifice, in the form we now ſee it, from the death of king Edward the Second, who was buried here, at whoſe tomb ſuch vaſt offerings were made, as enabled the ſucceeding abbats to raiſe a more magnificent pile. This they did at ſeveral times with the contribution and aſſiſtance of the gentlemen in the neighbouring country, as the Cliffords, Throckmortons, Deſpencers, Pauncefoots, Botelers of Sudely, and others, whoſe arms, together with thoſe who had formerly been friends to the abbey, were painted on the glaſs windows for a memorial of their benefactions.

This great work was begun by abbat Thokey, who rebuilt the ſouth aile in 1318, and his ſucceſſor John Wigmore rebuilt St. Andrew's, ſuppoſed to be the north tranſept or croſs aile. Adam de Staunton new vaulted the choir, and built the ſtalls on the prior's ſide, and his brother John rebuilt St. Thomas's altar. Thomas Horton ſucceeding, made the high altar, and preſbytery, above the choir; and Walter Frowceſter, a ſucceeding abbat, abbat, built the cloiſter, which is reputed the fineſt in England. John Morwent made the fine porch, and weſt end; Thomas Seabroke built the ſtately tower, and the abbats Richard Hanley and William Farley built the Lady's chapel.

Moſt of theſe abbats, with ſome others, lie under grave-ſtones in the church, which I ſhall take occaſion to ſpeak of hereafter.

The length of the cathedral from eaſt to weſt is 420 feet, and from north to ſouth 144 feet. The breadth of the body and ſide ailes 84 feet, which is the height of the vaulting of the choir; but that of the croſs aile is only 66 feet. The tower, which ſtands in the middle, is 222 feet.

At the diſſolution of the abbey, when this church was converted into a cathedral, it had the good fortune to be ſo intirely preſerved, that no conventual church in the kingdom, except that of Weſtminſter, eſcaped ſo well. But by the books and papers in the cuſtody of the biſhop's regiſter, it appears, that in the year 1576, it greatly wanted reparation, which being neglected from time to time, 'till the year 1616, when doctor Laud was appointed dean of it, there was ſcarcely a church in England ſo much in decay; therefore the doctor procured an act of the chapter, by which ſixty pounds a year were allowed for repairing it.

During the ſiege and civil wars, it ſuſtained leſs damage than could have been expected; but it was afterwards in danger of total deſtruction, from the plots and contrivances of ſome perſons, who are ſaid to have agreed amongſt themſelves for their ſeveral proportions of the plunder expected out of it.

In the year 1657, this church was granted to the mayor and burgeſſes of the city, at their own requeſt; and Oliver Cromwel, under his broad ſeal, gave them an exemplification of it; but it is probable that before this time they had intereſted themſelves in its preſervation; for Mr. Dorney, in his 10th ſpeech, about the year 1653, commends to the officers of the city then elected, that they would, together with others, join their ſhoulders to hold up the ſtately fabrick of the college church, the great ornament of this city, which ſome do ſay is now in danger of falling.

The Lady's Chapel has been uſed for early morning prayers, ever ſince the ſeats were brought hither from the choir, when that was beautified. At the eaſt end of it was a very fine lofty altar, to which there was an aſcent by three ſteps, whence the weſt end of the church might be ſeen without any thing to interrupt the view. Here is a large eaſt window, the glaſs of which was curiouſly painted, but the figures are now defaced. This chapel, on the ſouth ſide of which were three confeſſionals, as it is now certainly one of the largeſt in the kingdom, ſo at the diſſolution is ſaid to have been one of the richeſt, and a tradition goes that a great part of it was then gilt, and gloriouſly ornamented. There were battlements upon it 'till they were pulled down in the civil wars.

Several eminent perſons have been buried in it, viz. Biſhop Goldeſborough in a little chapel on the north ſide. The inſcription for him is to be found in p. 157.

On a grave-ſtone alſo is the following epitaph:

Hic conditur quod reliquum eſt Heſteræ Goldſborough
Diſce viator verum ſi ſupra fidem
Hic jacet lectiſſima virgo mater matrona
Tribus expedita viris potita tribus

Dom. 1648. repair and amend this antient ſmall Monument to the farther Continuance of the laudable Memory of the ſaid Thomas Fitzwilliams his Grandfather; and the rather, for that the Monument of the ſaid Robert Wiſe and the ſaid Elenor his Wife, being defac'd and ruinated by the diſſolving and taking down of the Pariſh Church of St. Ewens, without the South Gate of this City, in the late unhappy Wars and Diviſions of this Kingdom, in which Pariſh Church both the ſaid Robert and Elenor, with many more of their Children and Children's Children lieth buried.

In a chapel on the north ſide of the Lady's, upon the upper part of the altar, were the following arms in two rows, viz. Azure, a croſs Or. —Ermine, a croſs azure.—Checky, gules and Or, a cheveron vert within a bordure of the latter.—France and England quarterly.—The Trinity repreſented by a triangle, with lines drawn from each angle to a point in the middle.—A cheveron gules.—Vert, on a canton a roſe.—Or, a feſs azure, in chief three roundlets of the ſecond.—Azure, a croſs Or.—Vert, a buck's head caboſhed gules.—Gules, a feſs compony Or and azure.—Throckmorton.—Checky gules and argent, a cheveron ermine.—Gules, a feſs between ſix mullets Or.—Deſpencer.—Edward the Confeſſor.—The ſee of London.—Quarterly 1ſt and 4th England, 2d and 3d Checky Or and azure.—Montacute, earl of Sarum.—Argent, a fleur de luce between three bulls heads caboſhed ſable. —Azure, a cheveron gules, between three griffins heads eraſed Or.—Parted per feſs indented Or and azure. —Veel.—Argent, on a croſs ſable a leopard's head caboſhed.—Sable, a bordure and two bars argent.—Azure, a croſs Or.—On the bricks in this chapel, a fret.—A feſs between ſix croſs croſſlets, 3, 2, 1.

King James, during the time he was at Glouceſter, reſided at the deanery, and in the afternoon of the next day after his arrival, touched one hundred and three perſons in the Lady's chapel for the king's evil. I mention this as an hiſtorical fact, and not from any perſuaſion of the efficacy of the royal touch, of which I leave every perſon to judge as may ſeem moſt reaſonable.

This chapel is thirty yards long, and about ten broad.

The Choir is one hundred and forty feet long. The high altar, to which there is an aſcent of three ſteps, has been lately very much repaired. On the north ſide are four confeſſionals, and on many of the bricks are the arms of king Edward the Confeſſor, of the abbey, and of Bridges, quartered with others.

On the biſhop's ſeat it is thus written:

EDEL DVX
ELDADVS EP̄S GLOVC.
ELDO MAIOR
A : 490.

Over againſt the biſhop's is the archdeacon's ſeat, where the mayor now ſits on Sundays, which has no inſcription over it. There are thirty-one ſtalls on each ſide, built in the time of the monaſtery, very regular and lofty, with Allelujah written in gold letters on each of them.

The great Eaſt Window, which is the largeſt in England, was finely painted, but at this time the figures are not to be diſtinguiſhed. However now, or not long ſince, the following arms remained in it; Gules, a cheveron ermine between ten croſſes croſſes patee argent.—Gules, a lion rampant, Or.—Berkley.—Quarterly, 1ſt and 4th, Gules, a bend Or, and argent. 2d and 3d, Azure, five diamonds Or.—Gules, a cheveron between ten croſs croſſlets Or.—Gules, a feſs between ſix croſs croſſlets, Or.—Deſpencer.—Azure, on a chief two mullets Or.—Montacute.—Earl of Clare.—Earl of Oxford.—Argent, ſix croſſes fitchee on a chief between two mullets Or.—Mortimer.—Vairy gules and Or.—Fretty, impaled with England.

In a little chapel on the ſouth ſide, on the bricks are theſe arms, A cheveron charged with a roſe flower and two lillies, between five trees, 2 and 3.—A fret.—Clare, earl of Glouceſter.—Within a bordure charged with ten roundlets, a lion rampant.—A feſs between ſix croſs croſſlets, 3, 2 and 1.

On the north ſide, even with the rails of the altar, is the effigy in free-ſtone of Oſric king of Northumberland, with a crown on his head, and againſt the wall is written, Oſricus Rex primus fundator hujus Monaſterii. 681.

Robert, the eldeſt ſon of William the Conqueror, and Richard, his youngeſt ſon, were both buried in this church. Richard died in the year 1080, Robert in 1134, who having been deprived of his lands and liberty by Henry the Firſt, a cruel and tyrannical brother, and ſhut up in a cloſe priſon at Cardiff, after a confinement of twenty-ſix years, being broke with grief and age, he reſigned a miſerable life for a long expected death; and his body being brought to this church, to which in his life time he had been a munificent benefactor, it was buried in the middle of the choir, where a monument was erected for him, which was lately moved into one of the little chapels on the north ſide of the choir, where it ſtill continues. See p. 126.

On the ſouth ſide is a ſhelf monument for Aldred biſhop of Worceſter, who built the old church. His effigy is carved in free-ſtone on the tomb; but whether, ſays Mr. Willis, this was a cœnotaph I cannot ſay.

On the north ſide oppoſite to biſhop Aldred's, between two pillars, is a monument for abbat Parker, in the time of whoſe government the abbey was diſſolved. His effigy, in his Pontificalibus, curiouſly carved in white marble, is lying along on the tomb, which was provided for him in his life time, but he was not buried in this church. See p. 139.

Above the abbat's, between two other pillars, is the tomb of king Edward the Second, who having incurred the hatred of the nation, by his blind attachment to Piers Gaveſton and the two Spencers, his favourites, was taken priſoner by an army which the queen, the prince, and the nobles raiſed againſt him, and confined in Berkely caſtle, where he was murdered, whence his body was brought to Glouceſter, and buried in the choir of the abbey church. His effigy curiouſly cut in alabaſter lies under a very elegant canopy of free-ſtone. Further particulars are related in p. 126.

In a window oppoſite to king Edward's tomb, the letters W. P. A. are painted on the glaſs in many places; where alſo are to be ſeen the remains of the pictures of two biſhops, or mitred abbats, and two monks; and over one of the latter is written S. T. Cant. [Sanctus Thomas Cantuar.] and E. R. [Edwardus Rex.]

Abbat Staunton was buried under a grave-ſtone before St. Thomas's altar.

Abbat Frowceſter was buried on the ſouth ſide of the choir, in a chapel at the lower end. See abbats.

On the ſouth ſide of the entrance to the choir, between two pillars, is the fine tomb of abbat Seabroke, on which is his effigy in white alabaſter, in his Pontificalibus; but his tomb has been moved, and the part which at firſt ſtood to the eaſt is now placed to the north.

A little to the ſouth of the above, under an arch, are two effigies in free-ſtone of Humphry Bohun, earl of Hereford, and his lady. He died 1367. and lies in armour.

Juſt below the aſcent into the choir, on each ſide of it, was a fine ſtone ſkreen-work, erected by one of the abbats; and directly oppoſite to the entrance of the choir was a large door and an arch over it, which had a chapel with a fine altar upon it, ſupported by two pillars. Theſe were taken down in the year 1741, and there is now in the room a handſome ſkreen of carved ſtone-work, ſupported by three arches, which ſtand on fluted pillars four at each abutment. On a table in the middle of the ſkreen is this inſcription: MARTINUS EPISCOPUS FECIT AN. DOM. MDCCXLI. ET CONSECRAT^{S}. SVE VII^{mo}.

When the workmen were making the above alteration they found in the paſſage three abbats, buried near the ſurface of the ground, in ſtone coffins, in their Pontificalibus, part of their gloves and apparel remaining. And another ſtone coffin, with a ſword, a little pewter chalice, a ſtaff and two ſkulls in it, which, I ſuppoſe, belonged to Sir Nicholas Gamage and his wife, who were buried near their brother abbat Gamage, who was laid near the door opening to the cloiſters; and probably this abbat was one of the three above mentioned, who were all of them buried again where they were found.

Before this alteration there were five other large grave-ſtones found, to which braſs plates were fixed, long ſince torn off, three of which belonged to ſome of the abbats.

On the ſouth ſide of the choir, in the chapel belonging to the Boteler family, the letters I. B. are written on the north and ſouth walls, the I paſſing thro' the B, with a crown over them; and not many years ſince here was a large eſcutcheon in wood, on which were three golden cups, the family arms.

The

The altar is much defaced, on the upper part of which was the following inſcription:

Hoc BAPTISTA TYROU GLOUCESTRE fecit honore
Fac hunc ergo frui Celi ſine fine decore;
Hic etiam cultor precibus memorare tuorum
Et Rex Celorum ſemper ſit tutor eorum
Hoc Pater et flamen concordat jugiter Amen.

On a ſtone at the weſt end of the chapel it is written:

Kurie Eleiſon Aie
Fratris Johis Tyrou.

On a ſtone on the outſide wall, in black letter,

✚ Hic jacet Willhelmus Pippardus vicecomes Glouceſtr.

On a braſs plate near the pulpit, in black letter,

Here lyeth under this Stone in the Mercy of God, the body of Henry Machen, late Alderman of the City of Gloſtre, which died March 5, 1568,

Whoſe Body and Soul we wiſh as Love doth bynd
In Heaven with Chriſt a Place to find.

Near it round a free-ſtone,

Here lyeth ——— Daughter to Henry Machen, and firſt married to Peter Romney, and laſt Wife to Thomas Beſt, who died May 7, 1587.

On another,

Gloriæ fundamentum Labor.

Here lyeth buried the body of Peter Gouch, Gent. firſt Cuſtomer in the Queen's Majeſty's Port of Glouceſter; who deceaſed Auguſt 25, 1585. And Jane his Wife deceaſed February 4, following.

In the great Croſs Aile, in St. Anthony's chapel, under the tower, is St. Anthony with his pig, and the bell painted on it. On the north ſide of this aile is a handſome veſtry, which ſeems to have been built by abbat Parker, ſince his arms were placed on it, but now deſtroyed.

Hic jacet Robertus Stanford quondam ſerviens hujus Monaſterii, ac ſpecialis ac munificus Benefactor ejuſdem Monaſterii, qui obiit viceſſimo ſecundo ———

Upon Stanford's grave-ſtone is a little braſs plate with the following memorial for Mr. William Liſle, who has a monument erected for him.

Near this place lieth the body of William Liſle, Gent. who by his will gave fifty pounds a year for ever, in lands at Epney, in charity, to the pariſhes of St. Nicholas in Glouc. and St. Werburgh in Briſtol. He died Dec. 2, 1723, aged 25.

Next to Stanford's is a grave-ſtone, round the verge of which it appears there have been ſeveral capital letters, long ſince worn out. Perhaps this ſtone belonged to one of the abbats Horton or Boyfield, who are ſaid to have been buried under a flat ſtone in the north part of the tranſept, or croſs aile. Abbat Wigmore alſo was buried in that part called St. Andrew's aile, on the ſouth ſide next the choir.

At the eaſt end of the north tranſept, near the door leading to the choir, was ſome time ſince a pedeſtal, with a large image on it, and the following inſcription, lately deſtroy'd.—Orate pro Anima Magiſtri Johannis Schelton.

In this aile were buried, Thomas Lane eſq; ſometime recorder of this city.—Charles Hyett, eſq; ſometime member of parliament for it.—Richard Corſley, ſometime mayor, buried Sept. 2, 1742, Ætat. 77.

Againſt the weſt wall is a tomb, with this inſcription,

Memento mori.

John Boyer had nine ſons and ſeven daughters by his wife Ann Boyer. John Boyer departed this life the 28 day of January, A. D. 1615. Ann Boyer departed this life upon the firſt day of December, An. 1613.

On a grave-ſtone it is thus written in black letter,

Cum Fex cum Limus cum rés viliſſima ſimus
Unde ſuperbimus ad Terram Terra redimus.

Here lieth buried the body of John Smith, Alderman, and once mayor of this city, whoſe ſoul doth reſt in the Lord, and was ſeparated from the body July 18, 1586.

Here lieth buried Alice Woodward, widow, daughter to Thomas Winſore. She lived eighty odd years, departed this life June 5, and was buried the ninth of the ſame month, 1593.

Here lyeth the body of John Long, Millard and Milwright, who departed this life April 16, 1596.

Here lyeth buried under this ſtone Thomas Snead of the city of Glouceſter, Mercer, who deceaſed October 10, Anno Dom. 1597.

On a braſs plate is the following,

Here lyeth interred the body of Lawrence Wilſire, Gent. ſometime mayor of this city; by his vocation a clothier, wherein he did much good to the poor, and employed many poor people at work. He departed this life in the true faith of Chriſt A. D. 1612.

Here lyeth the body of William Blackleach, Batchelor of the civil laws, Chancellor of this Dioceſe, for the ſpace of 25 years, Eſq; who departed this life March 24, 1617. p. 343.

Alſo here lyeth the Body of Ellen, the Wife of William Lane, Eſq; and afterwards Wife of Chriſtopher Capell, and William Price, both Aldermen of this city; who departed this Life Dec. 16, An. 1652.

In the ſouth great croſs aile is Mr. Richard Pates's monument, and inſcription, which ſee in p. 118.

Over the door leading into the chapel near the preſent chapter-houſe is T. C. [Thomas Cantuarienſis] and near this door was an oratory, not long ſince demoliſhed.

On a little chapel behind the confeſſionals, are T. O. T. O. but the ragged ſtaff which was alſo upon it is much defaced.

The nave or body of the church, in length 171 feet, in breadth 84, conſiſts of a middle aile, and two ſide ailes, ſeparated from the middle by two rows of pillars, eight on each ſide, ſeven of which, about ſeven yards in circumference each, are round, with four pillaſters over them; the eighth was was handſomely fluted by abbat Morwent, who built the weſt part of the church where theſe ſtand.

There were places for lamps in the third and fourth pillars on the north ſide; a handſome wooden chapel, or burying place, between the ſecond and third pillars from the eaſt end, on the ſame ſide; and a handſome pulpit with the letters H. G. 1609, erected by biſhop Parry; but theſe are lately demoliſhed.

Againſt the eaſt wall, behind the wainſcot, adjoining to which the dean and prebendaries had a ſeat, when the ſermons were preached in the body of the church, was found in the year 1718 a fine old painting on oak, repreſenting the general judgment. This picture is ſuppoſed to have lain there ever ſince the year 1541, and is now kept in the ſouth croſs aile. Oppoſite to the above mentioned ſeat were others erected for the mayor and corporation; but they are now all taken down. The little chapel, commonly called the mayor's, which was incloſed with a wall or ſkreen, is now alſo laid open. In this chapel was a grave-ſtone with an abbat carved on it, but the ſtone is removed.

In the ſouth aile is the conſiſtory court, railed in, on which are the arms of biſhop Fowler, and chancellor Penrice.

Between the court and the great porch, againſt the ſouth wall, is a neat little marble monument for doctor Ellys, (ſee p. 168) on which is the following inſcription:

Near this place lies the body of Anthony Ellys, D.D. miniſter of the united pariſhes of St. Olaves Old Jury, and St. Martin's, Ironmonger-lane, in the city of London; 38 years prebendary in this church, 37 years conſecrated biſhop of St. David's, 28 Feb. 1753, who departed this life 17 Jan. 1761, aged 68 years. A perſon truly excellent, learned, juſt, benevolent, pious: To whoſe rare virtues and abilities adulation cannot add, envy cannot deſervedly take from. He married Ann the eldeſt daughter of Sir Stephen Anderſon, of Eyworth in the county of Bedford, Bar. whom he left with only one daughter, to lament the common loſs of one of the beſt of mankind.

In a chapel at the upper end of the ſouth aile, on a white marble table ſupported by two Ionic pillars, this inſcription:

Siſte viator & a me diſcito quam vanæ ſpes ſint, quam fluxa hominum gaudia: Jacet heu Catherina mea uxorum ſcilicet lectiſſima, optima; tam venuſta, tam caſta, tam pia, ut nihil ſupra; ſi ætas, ſi forma deflenda ſit, ſi corporis animique dotes, Luctui hic nullus erit modus; marmor hoc dicavit Gulielmus Pembruge, Gen. Memoriæ ſuaviſſimæ Conjugis, quæ fato defuncta eſt 15 Junii, An. Ætatis 24, ſalutis 1690.

Againſt the weſt wall of the body of the church, is the figure of a man to the waiſt, with a book in his hand, and round him, I heard a voice from Heaven, ſaying unto me, Write, Bleſſed are the dead that die in the Lord.

Underneath him on a tablet of black marble,

John Jones, Alderman, thrice Mayor of this City, Burgeſs of the Parliament at the Time of the Gunpowder-Treaſon; Regiſter to eight ſeveral Biſhops of this Dioceſe.

On a graveſtone beneath,

Here lieth the Body of John Jones, Alderman, Eſq; thrice Mayor of this City; who departed this Life June 1. in the ſixth Year of the Reign of King Charles, 1630.

This monument which was originally incloſed in a ſkreen of wood, now taken down, was finiſhed in the alderman's life time, who made ſome alteration in it.

Againſt the ſame wall is a marble monument for biſhop Benſon. But there is another elegant monument and inſcription for him, as in p. 159.

On the north ſide of the nave, near the croſs aile, incloſed with iron paliſadoes, an elegant monument of white marble, with the effigies of a man and his wife lying at length; and at their feet this inſcription:

To the happy Memory of Abraham Blackleach, Gent. Son of William Blackleach, Eſq; a Man not only generally beloved in his Life, but deſervedly endeared to Poſterity by rare Examples of ſeldom pattern'd Piety, exerciſed in his Bounty to St. Paul's in London, to this Church, to the High-Ways about, and to the Poor of this City; who laying aſide the vileneſs of Mortality, was admitted to the Glory of Eternity Nov. 30. 1639.——Gertrude his Wife, Daughter of Ambroſe Elton Eſq; and Anne, Siſter to Walter Lord Aſton, hath erected this Monument as a Teſtimony of his fame, and her Obſervance.

On a ſcroll, All fleſh is graſs, and all the goodlineſs thereof is as the flower of the field; Iſ. xl. 6.

Over all, theſe arms, Barry of ſix, ſable and Or.

Near the above was a raiſed monument of ſtone, and the effigies of a man and woman kneeling before a deſk, with their ſeven ſons and ſix daughters, and this inſcription:

Here lieth the Bodie of Thomas Machen Eſq; late Alderman of the City of Glouceſter, and thrice Mayor of the ſame; who departed this Life Oct. 18. 1614. in the 74th Year of his Age; and of Chriſtian his Wife, with whom he liv'd in the State of Marriage 50 Years, and had Iſſue ſeven Sons and ſix Daughters; ſhe departed this Life June 29. 1615. in the 70th Year of her Age.

Res redit, huc morimur, mors ultima linea Rerum.

Near this alſo on a copartment, againſt the wall,

In Chariſſimam memoriam Samuelis Browning, è Famil. de Cowley, Gen. qui obiit 3. Feb. 1676. Ætatis ſuæ 57. Juxta etiam defuncti jacent Liberi ejus tres per dilectiſſimam Uxorem Margaretam, filiam Gulielmi Selwyn de Matſon, arm. viz. Margaret, Sam. Ann. Browning. In tenerrimâ Ætate mortui omnes.

Near the door leading into the cloiſters, on a marble copartment affixed to the wall,

To the virtuous Memory of Anne, the moſt entirely beloving and beloved Wife of John Hilton, Clerk, Uſher of the College School; who died Feb. 26. 1691-2. Ætatis An. 30.

Meek was her Temper, Modeſt was her Life;
A Chaſt and Humble Virgin, Loyal Wife:
Her Manners graceful, pregnant was her Wit,
Her Nature amiable, her Behaviour ſweet:
Her Soul adorn'd with Dove-like Innocence,
To gain a heavenly Manſion haſted hence;
And bids ſurviving Walkers o'er her Grave,
Love the World leſs, and ſtrive their Souls to ſave.

Eccleſ. vii. 36. Remember thy End and thou ſhalt never do amiſs.

On the ſame wall, a monument of marble on a tablet, between two black twiſted pillars this inſcription:

M. S. Juxta obdormiſcit in Chriſto Edwardus Wright, Medicinæ Doctor, vere chriſtianus; quippe qui naturam inveſtigans, naturæ Deum & agnovit & veneratus eſt: Vir doctus, pius, ſevere juſtus; qui ægris non funerandis ſed ſanandis nomen et famam conciliavit. Nec tam ægrotantium crumenis, quam bonæ inhiavit valetudini. Unde nulli inimicus, inimicum non habuit præter ignorantem. In egenos uſque adeo fuit beneficus, ut concilium, opem, medicamina, liberaliter et gratis ſuppeditavit. Dum autem aliorum ſedulo curavit ſalutem, propriam amiſit; immatura nimirum morte præreptus triſtiſſimum hic reliquit deſiderium Julii 24, A. D. 1701, ætatis 36.

Conjux ſuperſtes Memoriæ viri optimi meriti hoc qualecunque Monumentum, amoris ergo, lugens mœrenſque poni curavit.

In the north aile, not far from the weſt end, was a painting of the twelve apoſtles, but this is deſtroyed. Underneath is an eſcutcheon containing the following rebus: The capital letter T, on the right of which a ſword pendant, piercing a heart, conjoined with the wing of a dove in the baſe of the ſhield; on the left ſide of the letter, a palm-branch joined to another wing. This rebus is in another part of the church, with ſeveral figures not now underſtood.

Againſt the north wall is a monument for Mrs. Lucy Stokes, (only daughter of doctor Harwood, a prebendary of this cathedral) ob. Jan. 11, 1732, ætat. 73.

Thomas Browne, eſq; ſometime mayor, was buried Nov. 15, 1730. ætat. 84.

A memorial for Edmund Gregory, ſometime mayor, ob. Sept. 23, 1720, ætat. 80.—Edward Machen, ſometime mayor, ob. 20 Sept. 1740, ætat. 61.

Againſt a pillar in the middle of the nave, on a copartment,

To the happy Memory of Thomas Batherne, the only Son of Richard Batherne of Penhow, in the County of Monmouth, Gentleman; he departed this Life Sept. 25. 1652, aged 22. leaving behind him his ſorrowful Mother, who out of her dear Affection to him, erected this Monument.

On a grave-ſtone beneath,

Here lieth the Body of Mary Batherne, the Wife of Richard Batherne of Penhow, in the County of Monmouth, Gent. who departed this Life March 29, 1665, aged 74.

Near abbat Seabroke's monument, againſt a pillar is an inſcription for Francis Baber, eſq; as in p. 164. but to that I ſhall add the following, Elizabetha conjux, filia Johannis Adderley, in com. Middleſex, arm. obiit 14 Januarii, Ætatis 63, A. D. 1673.

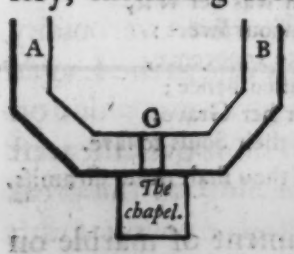
On their grave-ſtones, on which are the family arms, viz. On a feſs gules, three falcons heads eraſed, are the following inſcriptions:

Corpus Franciſci Baber, Legum Doctoris, ſub hoc ſaxo eſt conditum Junii 21, 1669.

Hic jacet Elizabetha Baber, Januarii 14, A. D. 1673.

The renowned Whiſpering Place is a long gallery, extending from one ſide of the choir to the other, built in the form of an octagon, with three ſides taken off, as in the margin; and contrived ſo as not to darken the great eaſt window of the choir, behind which it ſtands. Between the two lines, repreſented in the figure, is the paſſage. If a perſon whiſper at A, every ſyllable may be heard diſtinctly at B, which is twenty-five yards diſtant, tho' the paſſage is open in the middle, and there are large openings in the wall for a door and window. C denotes a door into a chapel, which is in the outward wall.



Some impute this wonderful effect to the cloſe cement of the wall, which, as one intire ſtone, conveys the voice like a tube; others attribute it to the repercuſſion of the voice on the ſeveral angles; whilſt a third opinion is, that the chapel and open places contribute to the ſound; but lord Bacon gives his ſentiments of this matter as follows: "I ſuppoſe there is ſome vault or hallow, "or iſle behind the wall, and ſome paſſage to it "towards the farther end of that wall againſt "which you ſpeak, ſo as the voice of him that "ſpeaketh ſlideth along the wall, and then enter-"eth at ſome paſſage, and communicateth with "the air of the hollow; for it is preſerved ſome-"what by the plain wall; but that it is too weak "to give a ſound audible, 'till it has communi-"cated with the back air."

Moſt people are of opinion that this effect was not produced by the art and deſign of the builder, but was merely accidental, eſpecially as on ſurveying the outſide of the church, it may be ſeen, that two parts of the gallery were tacked on, merely as paſſages into a chapel erected there. In this chapel are the following arms upon bricks;—England.—A Fret.—A feſs between ſix croſs croſſlets, 3, 2, 1.—A lion rampant. In the window over the weſt end, Argent, a bend between two bendlets dancette gules. At the eaſt end are the remains of an altar of unhewn ſtone, on each ſide of which the lord abbat and others were uſed, it is ſaid, to ſtand to ſee divine ſervice performed in the Lady's chapel, into which it looks.

In the middle of the whiſpering place are theſe verſes:

Doubt not but God, who ſits on high,
Thy ſecret Prayers can hear;
When a dead wall thus cunningly
Conveys ſoft whiſpers to the ear.

The great Cloiſters lie on the north ſide of the church, between the tranſept or croſs aile and weſt end. They were built by abbat Walter Frowceſter in the ſtile of King's college, Cambridge, and are ſo curious and beautiful as to be eſteemed the fineſt in England. They make a ſquare, one ſide of which is 150 feet long. The idea of the roof is taken from a walk of trees whoſe branching heads are curiouſly imitated in the arching.

In one of the windows was a draught of the old church, and ſeveral verſes intimating the original of the convent; but theſe were all deſtroyed in the civil wars.

In the eaſt cloiſter, in the wall at the ſouth end, is an old mural monument, without any inſcription, or arms, only a croſs cut on it; and near it is an old door, which led into a long room, perhaps the abbey workhouſe.

Not far from that, is a little door and ſtair-caſe leading to the abbey library, now uſed for the college-ſchool; and there is a large wainſcot door leading into the preſent college library, which was formerly the abbey chapter-houſe, where Leland informs us ſeveral perſons of great eminence have been buried, whoſe names, in the time of that great great antiquary, were painted on the wall, near their grave-ſtones, in black letter, as follow:

Hic jacet Rogerus, Comes de Hereford.
Hic jacet Richard Strongbowe, filius Gilberti comitis de Pembroke.
Hic jacet Gualterus de Lacy.
Hic jacet Philipus de Foye, Miles.
Hic jacet Bernardus de Novo Mercato.
Hic jacet Paganus de Cadurcis.

Thomas Pury, jun. eſq; whoſe arms are on the north ſide of the eaſt window, aſſiſted by Mr. Sheppard, captain Heming and others, made this library at a great expence in the year 1648, and, as Sir Robert Atkyns has obſerved, encouraged literature to aſſiſt reaſon, in the midſt of times deluded with imaginary inſpiration. In 1656 this library was ſettled upon the mayor and burgeſſes, who made themſelves guardians of it; but Mr. Pury, Sir Matthew Hale, and the officers of the garriſon were the principal benefactors to it. It is above twenty-four yards long, and eleven wide within the walls. Mr. Wheeler began to ſtock the library with books in the year 1686, but the collection is even now by much too ſcanty.

Before the library door is buried William Lambe, ſometime mayor, who died Oct. 21, 1705; and not far from him lies Mr. Abraham Rudhall, a very noted bell-founder of this city.

Here is a door that leads into the common orchard, where, or near to it, by the infirmary, ſtood archbiſhop Aldred's church, the ſcite of which is called the grove, becauſe Mr. Wheeler, formerly maſter of the ſchool, planted it with trees; ſo that what Camden ſays of the preſent cathedral being the ſame which Aldred built, is a miſtake.

On the bricks in the pavement are the following arms: France and England quarterly.—A cheveron between three croſs croſſlets fitchy.—A feſs charged with a creſcent between ſix croſs croſſlets.—Checky, a feſs fretty.—Berkely.—Within a bordure a lion rampant.—Three bendlets the middle one charged with an eſcallop.

In the North Cloiſter, towards the weſt end, is the lavatory, conſiſting of eight arches, and directly oppoſite is the ſudatory, or place to hang up towels, conſiſting of two arches.

In the Weſt Cloiſter, at the north end, is a door which led into the abbey refectory, or great hall, now a conſiderable time ſince demoliſhed. About the middle is a door leading to the houſe now aſſigned to the dean, but formerly belonging to the chief prior of the abbey. At the ſouth end is a little room where the glaſs belonging to the church was kept, and where the glaziers did their work.

In the South Cloiſter, on the north ſide of it, are twenty diſtinct places or ſeats, according to tradition, for the monks to write in, before the invention of printing. ſeveral perſons have been buried, and have grave-ſtones and inſcriptions on them here; and near the eaſt end is an old mural monument without any inſcription or arms, only a croſs and the letters W. B. on it.

The little cloiſters ſeem to have been made by archbiſhop Aldred, near the church which he built. Some part of them was pulled down in the civil wars.

The beautiful Tower, as biſhop Gibſon ſays in his additions to Camden's Britannia, is ſo neat and curious, that travellers have affirmed it to be one of the beſt pieces of architecture in England. Abbat Seabroke, the firſt deſigner of it, dying, left it to be finiſhed by Robert Tully, one of the monks of the abbey, which is intimated in two Latin lines written under the arch of the tower, as in p. 138. It is 222 feet high, ſupported by a ſtrong wall at each of the four corners, by a ſlender arch from the eaſt to the weſt ſide, and a ſmall pillar in the middle. It has a peal of eight large bells in it, ſome of them very antient. In a loft under theſe is a very large one, weighing about 6500 pounds, with this inſcription on it, ME FECIT FIERI MVNCVTVS NOMINE PETRI; whence ſome have concluded that it was given by Peter, the fourth abbat, for between the words of the inſcription are the arms of the abbey, with a coronet of four flowers de luce over them. The coronet may ſerve to ſhew that it was caſt in the time of the dukes of Glouceſter. The diameter of this bell is five feet ten inches, and that of the ſtar-hole in the arch but five feet, whence it may be concluded, that the bell was put into the tower before the arch under it, which is over the choir, was finiſhed.

It is ſaid, that round about the choir are twelve chapels, ſome over, ſome under others, in memory of the twelve apoſtles, whoſe names they are affirmed to bear, and perhaps they are as follow: In the ſouth paſſage from the Lady's chapel one, one over it, and one under it; more weſterly in that paſſage one, one over and one under it; in the north paſſage from the Lady's chapel one, one over and one under it; going into the chapter-houſe one, one over and one under it. There were ſeveral other chapels diſperſed over many parts of the church, particularly one in the Lady's chapel on the ſouth ſide, and one over it; one on the north ſide, and one over it; one over the weſt end of it, one over the door leading to the great ſouth croſs aile, one under the tower on the ſouth ſide, one dedicated to St. Anthony on the north ſide of it, one at the eaſt end of the body of the church, taken down to make room for the organ, one for abbat Seabroke, one for king Edward the Second, and one for abbat Parker.

On the outſide of the body of the church are ſix buttreſſes, which ſupport as many ſtatues for principal benefactors to the abbey. The firſt figure at the eaſt end hath a ſceptre in the left hand, and a church in the right, and under it a charter with three three ſeals appendant to it upon his breaſt. The ſecond hath a ſceptre in the right hand, and in the left a church reſting on his breaſt. The others are much defaced.

Part of the buildings which belonged to the abbey are ſtill remaining. The infirmary is converted into a houſe for one of the prebendaries, and for others belonging to the church. There was a chapel in it dedicated to St. Bridget, and endowed in the time of Henry the Third.

The number of houſholders in the college precincts are not mentioned by Sir Robert Atkyns, but in the year 1743 they were fifty-one, and of inhabitants two hundred and twenty-ſeven. Out of theſe precincts two perſons are elected guardians of the workhouſe.

Sir Robert Atkyns was miſtaken in ſaying that there were inſcriptions in this church for the abbats Seabroke and Parker, and the biſhops Cheyney and Smith, as there were never any; nor any tomb, as he ſays, for queen Iſabel, wife of king Edward the Second, who was buried in the Grey Friars, London, and had nothing erected here to her memory. Willis.

In deſcribing the abbey church, I cannot but obſerve how perfectly it correſponds with the antient form of churches, which I find in a ſcarce and valuable book, intituled The Fardle of Facions, tranſlated into Engliſh by William Watreman, and printed in the year 1555, where it is ſaid, 'Their oratories temples, or places of praier '(whiche we calle churches) might not be built 'without the good will of the Biſhoppe of the 'Dioceſe. And when the Timbre was redy to 'be framed, and the foundacion digged: it be-'hoved them to ſende for the Biſhoppe, to hal-'low the firſte corner ſtone of the foundacion, 'and to make the ſigne of the croſſe therupon, 'and to laie it, and directe it juſte Eaſte and 'weſt. And then mighte the Maſons ſette up-'on the reſte, but not afore. This Churche 'did thei uſe to builde, aftre the facion of a Croſſe, 'and not unlike the ſhape of a manne. The 'Chauncelle (in the whiche is conteined the highe 'Altare and the Quiere) directe fulle into the 'Eaſte, repreſenteth the heade. And therfore 'ought to be made ſomwhat rounde, and muche 'ſhorter then the Body of the Churche. And yet 'upon reſpecte that the heade is the place for the 'eyes, it ought to be of more lighte, and to bee 'ſeperate with a particion, in the ſteade of a necke, 'from the body of the Churche. This particion 'the Latine calleth Cancelli: and out of that 'cometh our terme Chauncelle. On eche ſide of 'this chauncelle peradventure (for ſo fitteth it 'beſte) ſhould ſtand a Turret; as it were for two 'ears. And in theſe the Belles to be hanged, to 'calle the people to Service, by daie and by night. 'Undre one of theſe Turrettes, is there commonly 'a vaulte, whoſe Doore openeth into the quiere. 'And in this are laid up, the hallowed veſſelles and 'ornamentes, and other utenſiles of the Church. 'we calle it a veſtrie. The other parte oughte to 'be fitted, that having as it ware on eche ſide an 'arme, the reſte maye reſemble the bodye with 'the fete ſtretched in breadthe, and in lengthe. 'On eche ſide of the bodye the pillers to ſtonde. 'Upon whoſe coronettes or heades the vaulte or 'rophe of the Churche maye reſte. And to the 'foote beneth, aulters to be joyned. Thoſe aulters 'to be orderly alway covered with two aulter 'clothes, and garniſhed with the croſſe of Chriſte, 'or ſome litle cofre of reliques. At eche ende a 'candelſticke: and a Booke towarde the middes. 'The walls to be parieted without, and within, 'and diverſly paineted. That thei alſo ſhould have 'in every pariſhe a faire rounde Stone, made ho-'lowe, and fitte to holde water: in the whiche the 'water conſecrate for baptiſme, may be kept for 'the chriſtening of children. Upon the right 'hande of the highe aulter, that ther ſhould be 'an almorie, either cutte into the walle, or framed 'upon it: in the whiche thei woulde have the 'Sacrament of the Lordes bodye; the holy oyle 'for the ſicke, and Chriſmatorie, alwaie to be 'locked. Furthermore thei woulde that ther 'ſhould be a pulpite in the middes of the Churche, 'wherein the Prieſte may ſtonde upon Sondaies 'and holidayes, to teache the people thoſe thinges 'that it behoveth them to knowe. The Chaun-'celle to ſerve only for the prieſtes, and clerkes. 'The reſt of the temporalle multitude to be in 'the body of the church. Seperate notwith-'ſtonding, the men on the ryghte ſide, and the 'women, on the left. And eche of them to 'be ſobre and honeſte in apparelle and behav-'our. Whatſoever is contrary to good facion 'or chriſtiane religion, with greate diligence to 'ſhoune it. It was the maner in the firſte churche, 'both amonge men and women to let their heare 'growe, to ſhewe out their naked ſkinne, and very 'litle or nothing to diffre in apparelle. Sainct 'Peter put firſt order, that Women ſhould cover 'their heades, and men rounde their heare, and 'either of them to go in ſeveralle and ſondry ap-'parelle. Moreover that to every church, ſhould 'be laide out a Churchyarde of the Grounde ad-'joyning, in the whiche all chriſten mennes bodies 'mighte indifferently be bewried. The ſame to be 'conſecrate, or halowed by the Biſhoppe, and to 'enjoye all the privilegies that the churche may 'enjoye.

'The funeralle for the deade, thei kepe not in 'every place ylike. Some mourne and kepe dirige 'and Maſſe ſeven daies continualle together, ſome 'ix. ſome xxx. or fourtye, ſome fivetie, and a Hun-'dred, and other a whole yere, wrapped up in 'blacke. The counſeile of Toledo ordeined that 'the corps beinge firſte waſhed and then wrapped 'up in a ſhiete, ſhould be caried forthe with ſing-'ing by menne of his owne condicion or ſorte, 'clerkes by clerkes, and lay menne of lay menne. 'And aftre what time the prieſt hath ſenſed the 'corps, throwen holy water uppon it, & ſaid cer-

‘ taine prayers, to laye it into the grave with the ‘ face upward, and the heade into the Weaſte. ‘ Then to throwe in the earth again, and in token ‘ that there is a chriſtian ther bewried, to ſette ‘ up a croſſe of wodde, garniſhed with yvie, cipres, ‘ or laurelle. Theſe be the orders and facions of ‘ the Chriſtiane religon.

Notwithſtanding I have inſerted the above abſtract, becauſe I thought ſome of my readers might be pleaſed to ſee it, 'tis not my preſent purpoſe to diſcuſs the point what form would be moſt convenient for our churches, according to the preſent eſtabliſhed method of divine ſervice. Wiſe men have differed in their judgment, and will ſtill continue to differ, concerning modes of worſhip; and it is probable they will not better agree as to the moſt eligible form for a place of worſhip; therefore I diſmiſs the ſubject, without offering my opinion concerning it.

Of the ſeveral PARISHES within the City of GLOUCESTER.

St. ALDATE's.

THIS was a low ſpired church, covered with ſhingles. It conſiſted of one aile, and ſtood not far from the city wall, near the upper North-gate, where the hall belonging to the fraternity of ſmiths, &c. and other adjacent buildings now are. It was dedicated to Saint Aldate, Aldact, or Eldad, and was a rectory formerly belonging to the priory of Deorhurſt, the prior of which was taxed at half a mark in this church 19° E. 1. The rectory was valued at 3*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.*

The commiſſioners appointed to make a return of the value of livings 26° H. 8. certified as follows:

Rectoria Sancti Aldati valet clare in decimis et oblationibus, ultra 12 denarios ſolutos pro Senagio, 5 ſolidos archidiacono pro procuratione, 8 den. epiſcopo pro viſitatione, 77 ſol. 3 den.

In this church were a chantry, dedicated to St. Mary, a chantry or fraternity, dedicated to St. John, the light of St Katherine, and the light of the Holy Croſs.

In 1648, by an ordinance of parliament, this pariſh was united to St. Michael's, and the church and its appurtenances were given to the corporation of the city, who made an order that the church-wardens of St. Michael's ſhould take it down, and ſell the materials, to defray the expence of building a brick wall round their own church-yard; accordingly, in 1653, St. Aldate's was demoliſhed, and St. Michael's was repaired with part of the materials. But the ordinance of parliament being annulled at the reſtoration, the pariſhes became ſeparate.

ALL SAINTS, or ALL HALLOWS.

THIS was a ſmall church conſiſting of one aile, with a chancel. At the time of the conqueſt, the ſee of Exeter had poſſeſſions in Glouceſter, as appears by Domeſday book, where it is ſaid, "Oſbernus the biſhop holds the land "and manſions which Edmarus held. They pay "10*s.* with other cuſtom." This church might probably be a part of thoſe poſſeſſions, for Robert Chicheſter, biſhop of Exeter, granted it as a chapel to the priory of Lanthony, which received a penſion of 2*s.* out of it, now paid to the crown. In the 19th year of king Edward the Firſt, that priory was taxed eight marks in this church.

By an ordinance of parliament in 1648, this pariſh was united to that of St. Mary de Crypt, and in the year 1664, biſhop Nicholſon not only united it to, but incorporated it with that pariſh in all reſpects, the church having been converted into the Tolſey, or place of public judicature, where the mayor and ſheriffs hold their courts, &c. on which account the corporation pay 2*l.* 13*s.* towards repairing the church of St. Mary de Crypt, the miniſter of which performs all the duties of the pariſh prieſt. See p. 89, under Tolſey.

In the valuation 26° H. 8. are the following particulars: Rectoria Omnium Sanctorum valet clare in decimis et oblationibus, ultra 12 den. pro ſenagio, 2 ſol. penſionem priori et conventui Lanthoniæ, 8 den. epiſcopo pro viſitatione, 12 ſol. pro vino, cera, et pane, annuatim ſolutos, 6*l.* 13*s.* 6*d. ob.*

There was a chantry dedicated to St. Mary, and another ſervice called the feoffees ſervice.

The lot fell on this pariſh to augment the living with queen Ann's bounty, in the year 1739, but the governors would not allow of the augmentation on account of the union of the pariſhes.

A part of the church has been converted into a chapel, for the uſe of the corporation; but the whole building hath been ſince taken down and rebuilt, and now forms a large and commodious court for the adminiſtration of public juſtice; together with an elegant chamber over it, for the private buſineſs of the corporation; who now attend divine ſervice at the cathedral church. On the front, in an eſcutcheon, are the arms of the city cut in free-ſtone.

The number of houſholders in 1562, was 15. In Sir Robert Atkyns's account of houſholders this pariſh is taken in with St. Mary de Crypt, and ſo cannot be diſtinguiſhed; but in 1743, the houſholders were 21, and the number of inhabitants 80.

St. JOHN BAPTIST.

THIS pariſh extends a little on the north ſide of the lower North-gate, and takes in all the lower North-gate ſtreet.

The church is a rectory, depending upon the benevolence of the pariſhioners. The lord chancellor is patron, but before the diſſolution it belonged to the abbey of St. Peter, to which it had been confirmed by the kings Henry the Firſt, and Stephen; and it was appropriated by abbat Hameline to the precentor, for maintaining the feaſt of St. Oſwald. The church was taxed 19° E. 1. at ten marks, and the abbey received a yearly penſion of 20*s.* out of it, which at the diſſolution was granted to the dean and chapter.

The preſent church is a new building, on the weſt ſide of the ſtreet, juſt within the upper North-gate. The old church, affirmed to have been built by king Ethelſtan, and taken down about forty years ſince, conſiſted of a large nave, and ſouth aile of the ſame length, a chancel, a ſlender ſteeple at the weſt end of the aile, and a large porch on the north ſide. It was a ſtone building 80 feet long and 50 broad, the eſtimate of the charge of rebuilding of which was 2310*l.* and upwards. A brief was obtained for this purpoſe, and 435*l.* 8*s.* 10*d.* collected upon it, which being inſufficient, a further ſum was raiſed by taxation on the pariſhioners, and by private contributions from well diſpoſed perſons, for building the preſent church, the foundation of which was laid on the firſt day of June, 1732. The new church, which was firſt preached in on Auguſt 4, 1734, conſiſts of three ailes, of which the middle one is the wideſt. The old ſteeple is left ſtanding, with five bells in peal, and a ſaint's bell.

In the old church were the ſeveral chapels, chantries, and ſervices following:

1. A chapel dedicated to St. Bridget, on account of which, and ſome other particulars, St. Peter's abbey was adjudged by the pope's delegates, in 1222, to pay 20*s.* per ann. to St. Oſwald's priory.

2. A chapel dedicated to St. Thomas, wherein abbat Thokey, with the conſent of the rector, in 1390, ordained, that the rectors of the church ſhould ſay maſs every week, and receive a certain corrody for that ſervice of the ſub-almoner of the abbey.

3. A chantry dedicated to St. Mary, ſeveral of the poſſeſſions of which, and of many others in Glouceſter, were granted to Thomas Chamberlain, knight, and Richard Pates, eſq;

4. A chantry dedicated to St. Ann.

5. A chantry dedicated to the Holy Rood, in the patronage of St. Peter's abbey. Richard Boyden, the laſt incumbent of it, was allowed a penſion [a] of 4*l.* at its diſſolution.

6. The light of St. Nicholas.

7. The light of St. Catherine, which Maud Browd, before the year 1393, endowed with certain lands near Alvingate.

'Tis alſo ſaid that a chantry was erected in this church in 1340, and annexed to the church of the Holy Trinity, but whether it was either of the above it does not appear.

At the viſitation of this church, 26° H. 8. the commiſſioners certified as follows: Rectoria Sancti Johannis valet clare in decimis et oblationibus, ultra 20 ſol. ſolutos abbati et conventui Glouc. pro quadam penſione annuali, 12 den. pro ſenagio, 6s. 8d. archidiacono pro procuratione, 13 den. epiſcopo pro viſitatione, 14l. 0s. 10d. ob.

By an order of parliament in 1648, Saint Katherine's being united to this pariſh, the perpetual patronage was granted to the mayor and burgeſſes. An annuity of 60*l.* and one of the prebendal houſes were ſettled upon this rectory, and the incumbent was to pay firſt fruits and tenths according to the rate of 8*l.* a year; but the pariſhes became diſtinct at the reſtoration.

The living has been augmented by Mr. Hodges's legacy, and the queen's bounty; beſides which, three pounds a year are left for the miniſter to read prayers on Wedneſdays, and ten ſhillings for a ſermon. There was no houſe for the miniſter 'till lately, but theſe donations will more particularly appear in the liſt of benefactions.

After the battle of Boſworth-field, in 1485, wherein king Richard the Third was ſlain, Francis viſcount Lovel and the lord Stafford fled to this church for ſanctuary.

[a] Having now firſt mentioned this penſion of a chantry-prieſt, I ſhall here take occaſion to obſerve, that tho' it may at firſt appear to have been a very trifling allowance to a clergyman for his maintenance; yet the matter will be ſeen in a very different light, if we compare the prices of things now, with what they were formerly; for which purpoſe Mr. Willis, in his firſt volume of his Hiſtory of Mitred Parliamentary Abbies, p. 11, has produced an item from the farmer's account of the impropriation of Ravenſton, in Buckinghamſhire, with Chriſt Church college, Oxford, in the reign of king Henry the Eighth; wherein the farmer, by way of diſcount out of his rent, reckons only 1l. 6s. 8d. for the vicar's diet for the whole year; ſo that five pounds a year then, ſays the ſame author, would maintain any one in great honour and credit.

In this pariſh ſtands

SAINT MARGARET'S HOSPITAL.

This hoſpital was built in honour of the ſepulture of our Lord, and of St. Margaret. It was called The Hoſpital, or Houſe of the lepers of St. Sepulcher's and St. Margaret's; alſo, The lower Houſe of Dudſtan.

There were formerly houſes of this kind in moſt cities and conſiderable towns in England, Ireland, the Low Countries, Germany, &c. and no longer than a century or two ago, there was indeed too much occaſion for them. It ſeems no difficult matter to account for the leproſy being ſo rife formerly, and ſo little known at preſent. That loathſome diſeaſe is occaſioned by bad air, but more eſpecially by unwholſome diet. The cauſes of bad air are now in a great meaſure removed among us, by cutting down our large foreſts, draining our marſhes, and cultivating our lands; and it cannot be denied but we live better than our forefathers.

No longer ago than Cromwell's time, the leproſy was very common in Ireland. It was occaſioned by the people's living ſo much upon ſalmon and other fiſh, which every river and brook abounded with, and the poor people had for catching. The Engliſh getting poſſeſſion of the country, limited the uſe of ſuch unwholſome food, and forbad it at a certain ſeaſon of the year. They introduced the planting of coleworts, and other gardenſtuff, in conſequence of which the poor people were cured, and the many hoſpitals expreſſly built to receive the lepers are now gone to ruin.

I am told that formerly it was almoſt a ſtanding condition in the indentures of apprenticeſhip at Glouceſter, that the ſervant ſhould not be obliged to eat ſalmon more than thrice a week; which was undoubtedly intended as a precaution againſt this grievous diſorder.

The founder of this hoſpital and the time of its foundation are equally unknown. It conſiſted of a maſter or ſuperviſor, a prior, a chaplain, and brethren and ſiſters. Alured, biſhop of Worceſter, the king's chaplain, who, according to Mr. Willis, was enthronized April 13, 1158, granted to theſe lepers liberty to bury in their own churchyard, which evidences the foundation to have been of great antiquity.

The patronage of the houſe belonged to the abbey of St. Peter, which preſcribed rules for it; therefore, when Thomas (perhaps Horton) was abbat, they called it noſtrum hoſpitale apud Newlond, our hoſpital at Newlond; and it is ſo called in a deed witneſſed by the abbey's hundred, or court, held there; but the town of Glouceſter, ſoon after the diſſolution of the abbey, had the ſole government of it.

According to the certificate of the commiſſioners appointed 37° H. 8. a copy of which is now among the city records, the yearly value of this hoſpital was then 11*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* of which the brethren and ſiſters received 8*l.* 12*s.* the prieſt had for his ſalary 2*l.* and the out-rents, which came to 15*s.* The goods, plate, ornaments, &c. belonging to it were valued at 24*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*

At a metropolitical viſitation held in St. Bartholomew's hoſpital, November 8, 1580, John Fenner, alias Spring, being then governor, or ſuperviſor of the Margaret's hoſpital, it appeared, that the foundation of the houſe, by which was meant the charter of the foundation, was delivered to Mr. Rumney, then deceaſed, who had been mayor of the city in the year 1572, and was not returned; but that by the foundation ſix poor people were to be fed [or maintained] therein; that John Povey, alias Shepherde, Alice Cooke, Katherine Bryan, William Sprynge, ſon of the governor aforeſaid; Agnes ——, and Grace Sprynge, alias Fenner, wife of the ſaid governor, were then maintained in it. But according to biſhop Cheiney's account of the dioceſe in 1562, a reader and ten men were belonging to it. Since that time the number varied, 'till it was fixed, as it now is, to eight men, a reader, and ſome other officers. Each of the poor perſons now receives 2*s.* a week, and the remainder of the income is expended in fees and other charges.

On the S. W. ſide of the hoſpital ſtands a ſmall chapel, which, in the certificate above-mentioned, is ſaid to be a pariſh church, at which prayers are read every Saturday morning.

At the eaſt end were the prior's lodgings, upon the ſite of the adjacent houſe. The old hall was converted into a barn the thirty-firſt year of queen Elizabeth; and at the ſiege of the city, in 1643, ſome of the king's forces took up their quarters in the hoſpital, which ſeems to have been then very much damaged.

William Organ, huſbandman, was admitted a brother, and his wife Emmote, a ſiſter, of the hoſpital in 1518, by the mayor and all the burgeſſes of Glouceſter, with the maſter of the houſe: He was then by the ſame perſons advanced to the prioriſhip, which he was to enjoy for his life, upon payment of 10l. yearly to the brethren and ſiſters, and employing the lands in huſbandry. In his time the grant of Helias Giffard (long enjoyed by the hoſpital) of the full carriage of one horſe-load of wood every day in the winter, and three waynloads every week in the ſummer, to be had from Brimpsfield wood, being detained by the king's officers; he, in behalf of himſelf and the hoſpital, petitioned the king that their right might be reſtored to them, but with what ſucceſs is uncertain. He occurs April 4, 11 H. 8.

Thomas Peers, or Perce, occurs 25, 38 H. 8.
Robert Hobbes, September 23, 6 E. 6.

Thomas Wilſe, of Dimmock, huſbandman, admitted a brother of the hoſpital October 24, 6 E. 6. was at the ſame time advanced by the maſter, with the conſent of the brethren and ſiſters, to the office of prior; but to admit no brother or ſiſter, without leave of the mayor and three of the eldeſt aldermen. The value of the goods belonging to the hoſpital then was 59l. 7s. 3d. 1 Mary 1. he occurs in the office; but the next year was diſpoſeſſed of it whether by reſignation or removal doth not appear. After him no other perſon occurs in this office; but a father and a matron are appointed for this houſe by the governors of the Bartholomew's hoſpital, where, as at the principal houſe, courts are occaſionally holden, and the poor people of the Margaret's are obliged to attend them.

In this pariſh alſo is

Saint Mary Magdalen's, or King James's Hospital.

This houſe is ſituate northward of St. Margaret's, and was therefore called the Upper Houſe, or Hoſpital of Dudeſtan. The priory of Lanthony is acknowledged as the founder, and uſed to ſupply it weekly with a certain quantity of bread.

This hoſpital, as appears by the Monaſticon, ſeems to have been in part ſuſtained with a moiety of the lordſhip of Bernyſtone, [Barrington] in this county, which was given to the priory of Lanthony, by earl Milo, the conſtable, for thirteen lepers. It appears by a manuſcript now in C.C.C. college, Oxon, that the brethren received yearly to the value of 12*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* for providing certain loaves, called the loaves of Dudeſtan, and for other neceſſaries, from the priory of Lanthony; to the monks of which the cure of this houſe was the uſual title for obtaining of holy orders.

It is ſaid in the regiſter book of Henry Deene, prior of Lanthony, that the poor people of this hoſpital aſſigned two loaves a day, a load of hay, and a tree for fewel yearly, with the paſturage of a cow, and ſome other lands, for the maintenance of their prieſt.

John Carrell, eſq; Richard Pate, and Edward Goſtroyke, gentlemen, were commiſſioners appointed by the king, 37° H. 8. who certified, That this hoſpital was founded for a maſter and certain poor people, who were to enjoy the income of all the lands, amounting to 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* yearly. The goods, plate, and ornaments belonging to it were valued at 6*l.* 8*s.* 8*d.*

The priory of Lanthony being diſſolved, this hoſpital was ſo poor, and the buildings ſo miſerably decayed, that queen Elizabeth, December 4, in the 41ſt year of her reign, granted the patronage and power of placing a ſuperviſor or governor over it, to the mayor and burgeſſes of Glouceſter, in conſideration of their rebuilding it, at which time there were only four perſons in it of the old foundation. And afterwards, on account of the great expence the corporation had been at in this building, king James the Firſt, in the 14th year of his reign, by his charter granted, That the hoſpital ſhould be under the government of the city, and that thenceforth it ſhould be called by his name: That whereas the kings of England paid an annual penſion of 13*l.* to this hoſpital, that penſion, with all the former gifts, grants, and lands, ſhould be applied for the maintenance of nineteen poor people and a miniſter.

In 1562, according to biſhop Cheiney's account of the dioceſe, there were then one reader and ſix poor people only maintained in it.

It appears by original writings in the cuſtody of the corporation, that an annuity of 20*l.* payable out of the manors of Newland and Ruredean, in the county of Glouceſter, was ſold to the mayor and burgeſſes in the year 1650, and at that time king James's penſion of 13*l.* before-mentioned was aſſigned to the hoſpital.

At ſome diſtance from the hoſpital, on the weſt ſide next the highway, is a neat chapel, which in the before-mentioned certificate is called a pariſh church; and there was a meſſuage near the hoſpital called the old parſonage houſe.

Priors.

Thomas Tully occurs 9 H. 7.

William Malvern, who died ſometime after the 25th of June, 1551.

Thomas Povey, alias Shepherd, who died between April and October, 1571.

John Fenner, alias Spring, was preſented by the queen, March 26, 15 Eliz. His will is dated June 13, 1603, and was proved in May following; on the back of which is an inventory of the houſhold goods, &c. which came to him as prior of the hoſpital, and are to remain to it for ever. Firſt, one cornewayne and one dungwayne, with one pair of iron-bound wheels.—Item two yokes for oxen and two iron ſtringes, one plow with a ſhear and coulter, one ſow, one cock with three hens.—Item, four braſſe potts, two great potts and two little potts.—Item, three braſſe pans and one braſſe kettle.—Item, one little braſſe poſnet.—Item, one pewter candleſtick.—Item, a challis or communion cup of ſilver.—Item, in the church, one table cloth and a ſurplis.

Alderman Thomas Machen, upon Fenner's death, was elected by the corporation, September 5, 1 J. 1. He placed thirteen perſons in the hoſpital, which he governed with great prudence, and gave to it the yearly ſum of 3l. 15s. for ever. No other prior occurs after him, but ever ſince this hoſpital has been ſubject to the ſame governors as the Margaret's, and the poor people attend the courts held at the Bartholomew's.

St. Katherine's, alias St. Oswald's.

THIS pariſh is ſituate partly in the city, and partly in the liberties.—St. Oſwald, king of Northumberland in the year 634, a devout and religious prince, was killed by the Danes, and his relicks firſt carried to the abbey of Bardney, in Lincolnſhire;

Lincolnſhire; whence, upon the approach of the Danes afterwards to thoſe parts, they were removed to this place, by Ethelred and the famous princeſs Ethelfleda, who built a college here for ſecular prieſts, which was dedicated to the honour of St. Oſwald, and afterwards converted into a priory of regular canons, of which more particularly hereafter.

This priory had antiently a free chapel with a ſpire ſteeple, ſtanding upon the bank of the old river Severn, dedicated to St. Katherine, which afterwards became the pariſh church of which I am now about to give a further account.

Thurſtan, archbiſhop of York[a], pulled down the old church, which was very ſpacious, built a new one at great expence, and enlarged and repaired St. Oſwald's tomb. He alſo granted to the heirs of the crown two thirds of the yearly income of the canonry, and appropriated the other ſhare for the reparation of the church.

In the taxation made in the 19th year of king Edward the Firſt, this church, with its chapels of Churchdown, Norton, Sainthurſt and Compton, was valued at ſixty marks. The rectory and advowſon of the above church and chapels belonged to the priory of St. Oſwald's 'till it was diſſolved; when the king, on the 18th of November, 34° H. 8. granted all, except Sainthurſt, to the dean and chapter of Briſtol, who now pay 10*l.* a year to the curate of this pariſh; beſides which, the living was augmented with the queen's bounty in the year 1747.

By an ordinance of parliament in the year 1648, the pariſh was united to St. John's, the church with its materials given to the corporation of the city, and in 1665, the roof and ſome other parts of it were uſed in building the Barley-market-houſe, in the Eaſt-gate-ſtreet. This ordinance became null at the reſtoration, and the pariſh was again ſeparate, and is at preſent ſupply'd by its own curate in the church of St. Mary de Lode; but they bury in their own church-yard.

There was a chantry in this church dedicated to St. Katherine, and another called the charnel ſervice, which the commiſſioners, in their certificate made 1. E. 6. ſay, was founded, and its lands put in feoffement for a prieſt, at the yearly penſion of 3*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.* and the value of its jewels, ornaments, and other goods, was 2*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.*

Benefactors, &c.

Alderman Thomas Machen gave 24*s.* a year to twelve poor perſons of this pariſh; and

Mr. Daniel Lyſons gave 40*s.* a year in bread for the poor.

The number of houſholders in 1562 was 102; about 1712, according to Sir Robert Atkyns, there were 100 houſes and about 500 inhabitants; but in 1743, there were 119 houſholds and 406 inhabitants.

The baptiſms and burials of this pariſh are regiſtered at St. Mary de Lode, and included in the account of them there.

In this pariſh is the ſite of

The PRIORY of St. OSWALD.

This houſe ſtood N.N.W. of St. Peter's abbey, upon the bank of the Severn, near the old key or wharf, which, on occaſion of a diſpute between the town and the priory, was removed. Some of the legendary writers report[b], that Merwald, viceroy of the weſtern part of Mercia, and his wife Domneva, about the year 660, built a ſtately monaſtery here in honour of St. Oſwald, the king and martyr, which from the abundance of ornaments about it, was vulgarly called the golden one. But the better and more certain account, is that which has been juſt touched on at the beginning of the ſhort hiſtory of the pariſh of the ſame name, taken from the Saxon Chronicle, and from biſhop Tanner's Monaſticon. Theſe great authorities ſay that Ethelred, earl of Mercia, and the famous Elfleda his princeſs, tranſlating the remains of St Oſwald from Bardney in Lincolnſhire, in the year 909, richly entombed him here, built a college in honour of that ſaint, and filled

it with prebendaries. In the wars with the Danes, the monks were driven away, and from that time it became a college of ſecular prieſts, and was accounted a free chapel royal, exempt from the juriſdiction of the archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the biſhop of Worceſter, and ſubject only to the archbiſhop of York.

Having refuſed to acknowledge the authority of the archbiſhop of Canterbury, in the year 1083, that prelate[b], for their contumacy, excommunicated the prior, and ſeveral of the principal officers, and ſent his mandate to the biſhop of the dioceſe to execute the ſentence publickly in all his churches, which he did with bells ringing, and lighted candles; but this diſpute was afterwards ſettled in favour of the college.

In the reign of king William the Second, according to biſhop Tanner, the ſecular prieſts were changed into canons regular of the order of St. Auguſtine, of which Leland gives the following account. A certain biſhop of Lincoln, who was alſo the chancellor, and highly in favour with the king, intreated the king to intercede with the archbiſhop of York for ſome lands in Lindſey and Moteham, which belonged to that ſee. The archbiſhop granted the king's requeſt, but on condition that this houſe, which was the king's free chapel, ſhould ever afterwards be appropriate to the ſee of York, which the king readily complied with. And this accounts for the churches under the patronage of St. Oſwald's, being in the dioceſe of York.

When the archbiſhop had got the houſe into his hands, he treated with the poſſeſſors of it about a new foundation of regular canons. Some of them complied, but others at firſt refuſed: however at length prevailing, he appropriated benefices to them, but reſerved ſeveral of their lands for the church of York. Geofry of Malmeſbury ſays that the archbiſhop drove out the poſſeſſors by force of hoſtility, but preſerved ſeveral of their lands, and beſtowed them upon his own monks.

Rudburn accounts[c] differently for this priory being appropriated to the church of York, and Sir William Dugdale agrees in part with both accounts, viz. that the king gave this houſe and the monaſtery of Selby, at his own charge, in ſatisfaction for the claim which the archbiſhop had in Lincoln and Lindſey.

After the king's grant had been confirmed by the popes[d] Honorius, Paſchal, Alexander, and Innocent, the priory again denied the juriſdiction of the ſee of Canterbury, whereupon the members of this priory, the clerks and officials of the ſee of York, were ſummoned to the viſitation of the archbiſhop of Canterbury, and not attending, were ſuſpended. They appealed to the pope, and Brompton and Hoveden both relate that the next year, a cardinal of the name of Hugezun, or Hugh, was diſpatched from Rome to ſettle the difference, which was done at a council at Wincheſter, where it was agreed that the archbiſhop of Canterbury ſhould quit his claim to this priory, being eſteemed the king's chapel, and ſhould abſolve thoſe whom before he had excommunicated.

At a provincial council held at Lambeth in 1280, archbiſhop Peckham[e] pronounced his ſentence againſt the prior and convent, by which he commanded, that no perſon ſhould preſume to ſell them any bread, wine, or victuals, for their ſuſtenance; to pay them any tithes; to buy any thing of them, or to have any commerce with them. It was alſo put under a like ſevere ſentence by Godfrey Giffard, biſhop of Worceſter, which was afterwards ratified by Robert Winchelſey, archbiſhop of Canterbury; but the king, by his writs, commanded theſe proud prelates to revoke their decrees; and the archbiſhop was afterwards attached to anſwer the prior in the king's bench, in the octaves of Candlemas, for excommunicating of him and his canons, to the contempt of the king, and prejudice of his majeſty, and in the damage of 200*l.* to the priory. Notwithſtanding all this, the archbiſhop ſtill refuſed to abſolve the prior, therefore the king iſſued his mandate to the keeper of his ſpiritualties of that province to have him abſolved, which had its proper effect. Another mandate was ſent in November following to William de Geyneſborough[f], then biſhop of Worceſter, and his official, prohibiting them from exerciſing any eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction over the priory; and in 1318, a general prohibition was iſſued againſt making any kind of incroachments on its liberties and privileges, which put a ſtop to them intirely.

The donations to the priory were confirmed by the kings Henry the Firſt, and Richard the Second.

In the grant of the tenths of the clergy to the king, 2° H. 7. the prior is rated at 46 ſol. 4 den. ob. for temporalties. The priory was valued at the diſſolution at 90*l.* 10*s.* 2*d. ob.*

The king, July 7, 31° H. 8. in conſideration of 100*l.* and of former ſervices, granted to John Jennings, eſq; the ſite of the priory, with all its houſes and lands in the city and ſuburbs of Glouceſter, and ſome other particulars, at the twentieth part of a knight's-fee, and the yearly tenths of 1*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.* Several other lands, tithes, &c. in Longford, Churchdown, Norton, Sainthurſt, Compton Abdale, and other parts of the county of Glouceſter, were granted to the biſhop and to the dean and chapter of Briſtol, upon the erecting of that ſee; and a fiſhery which had belonged to this priory, was granted to the chapter of Glouceſter, 38° H. 8.

The ſite of the priory afterwards deſcended to Agnes Wright, daughter of Joan Kemp, who was daughter of —— Jennings, ſon and heir of Sir John Jennings, who had the original grant before he was knighted. The huſband of Agnes Wright had livery granted him 5° Mariæ, and their ſon Richard had livery 17° Eliz. but it is now the property of the Reverend Mr. John Newton, who reſides here.

Moſt of the priory has been long ſince demoliſhed; but by the buildings yet remaining, it ſeems to have been a ſmall quadrangle, with a gate on the ſouth ſide, and another on the north, leading to the church adjoining.

Priors, collected out of the regiſter books of York and Worceſter, and other authorities.

Humphry, a man of eminent learning and piety, of the priory of Lanthony, was, in 1153, made the firſt prior after the introduction of regular canons, as we learn from Hagulſtaldenſis, in his Continuation of Simon Dunelm.

William Newland was collated, 1474.

Nicholas Fawkener, or Falkner, a canon of Lanthony, was collated by the archbiſhop of York, 1491. How long he continued doth not appear, nor does the election of William Giffard, alias Jenings, who occurs June 24, 21° H. 8. and obtained from St. Peter's abbey a preſentation to the rectory of Rudford, Auguſt 4, 1533, with which he held the priory in commendam 'till 1536, when he reſigned that rectory. After his priory was diſſolved, he became a monk of St. Peter's, and in 1541, was made the firſt dean of the cathedral.

In this pariſh is the ſite of the monaſtery of

The White Friers, or College of Carmelites.

This houſe ſtood without the lower North-gate, not far from Brook-ſtreet, towards the weſt end of the meadow which is ſtill called the friers ground.

According to Mr. Speed, from whom Sir Robert Atkyns takes his ſhort account, and to whom biſhop Tanner refers, it was founded by queen Eleanor, Sir Thomas Giffard, and Sir Thomas Berkeley; but ſome MS. collections of Mr. Stow make Sir Thomas Berkeley the ſole founder. William Giffard, archbiſhop of York[g], granted the friers leave to build an oratory in Brook-ſtreet, without Glouceſter, 15 kal. Feb. 1269. It was ſurrendered[h] July 28, 1538, to Richard, ſuffragan biſhop of Dover, in the preſence of the mayor and three of the aldermen, when it was ſaid to be but a ſmall houſe in decay. It had no rents, except 2*l.* a year for land on leaſe for twenty years. Thomas Knight, William Pleaſans, and Henry Birchwood, who were friers of it, had then permiſſion to change[i] their habits.

After it was diſſolved, the houſe, and two acres of land called Elmrow, belonging[k] to the friery, were granted July the 4th, 35° H. 8. to Richard Andrews, and Nicholas Temple, who ſold them ſoon after to Sir Thomas Bell, by whom the houſe and meadow adjacent, granted to Alexander and Daniel Perte, 7° E. 6. were applied towards the ſupport of St. Kimbro's, or Kineburg's hoſpital, of which hereafter. Other lands in the pariſh of Leigh, belonging to the friery, were granted to Sir Thomas Bell, 36° H. 8.

Great part of the friery ſeems to have been deſtroyed about the year 1567, yet in the reign of queen Elizabeth ſeveral of the buildings belonging to it remained, and the houſe of correction for the county of the city was appointed to be kept in ſome part of them. The laſt and total deſtruction of this houſe was reſerved for the time of the civil wars, when ſome of the materials were uſed in the fortification of the city. Some of the buildings, called the founder's lodgings, were converted into a barn, which proved very ſerviceable to the city at the ſiege.

The corporation have now the land whereon the friery ſtood, for which they pay yearly to the crown a quit rent of 1*s.* 3*d.*

Nicholas Cantelupe, or Cantelow, D.D.[l] but called from the place of his nativity and reſidence Nicholas of Glouceſter, was of the ſame family with a canonized biſhop of Hereford, and being a Carmelite, preſided over the convent of his order here. He was intimately and familiarly acquainted with Humphry the good duke of Glouceſter. Being choſen prior at Northampton, he continued there 'till his death, in 1441, leaving behind him ſeveral monuments of literature, in divinity and hiſtory.

David Boys, called ſometimes Boſchus, and Boethius, D. D.[m] a Carmelite here, viſited moſt of the foreign univerſities for improvement, and was alſo a familiar friend to duke Humphry. After he had been for ſome time governor of this monaſtery, he died in that office about 1450, or 1451, and was buried among his brethren here, having led a religious life, and left ſeveral learned works behind him.

St.

St. MARY de CRYPT,

Called alſo Chriſt-Church, and St. Mary in the South.

THIS is a handſome church ſituate on the eaſt ſide of the South-gate ſtreet, conſiſting of a low aile on each ſide of the nave, a croſs aile, and a neat tower with eight ſmall but very muſical bells in it; a chapel on each ſide of the chancel, a large porch againſt the ſouth aile, and a ſmaller one at the weſt end. It ſeems to have received the name of Crypt, which ſignifies a vault or charnel houſe, from the vaults under it, of which there are two; that under part of the ſouth and middle chancel is thirteen yards long, ten broad, and about three deep; the other at the weſt end, into which there is a deſcent out of the ſtreet, ſeems to be larger.

The rectory, now in the patronage of the lord chancellor, is worth, beſides voluntary contributions, about 26*l.* a year, including the rent of three houſes, and money paid for ſermons. It was given to the priory of Lanthony in 1137, by Robert Chicheſter, biſhop of Exon, who built the church, together with all its profits, except a penſion of 20*s.* to the nunnery of Godſtow, in the county of Oxford.

In the taxation of eccleſiaſtical preferments made 19° E. 1. it is thus expreſſed: Rectoria Sanctæ Mariæ in auſtro villæ Glouc. alias eccleſia Chriſti, valet clare in redditu una cum decimis et oblationibus ibidem per annum ultra 6*s.* 8*d. ſolutos archidiacono pro procuratione*, 20*s. pro ſinagio*, 20*s. abbatiſſæ de Godſtow pro penſione*, 3*s. ſacriſtæ Lanthoniæ pro quadam annua penſione*, 4*d. ob. coquinario Lanthon. pro capitali redditu*, 8*d. comiti Glouceſtriæ pro longabulo*, 3*s.* 4*d. ſeneſcallis Glouceſtriæ pro quodam quieto redditu*, 13*d. epiſcopo pro viſitatione*, 14*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.*

The dean and chapter of Glouceſter now pay the rector 1*s.* 6*d.*

By an ordinance of parliament, All Saints and St. Owen's were united to this church, and one of the prebendal houſes, with an annuity of 80*l.* was ſettled for the rectory; the rectory to pay for firſt fruits and tenths according to the rate of 8*l.* a year; and the patronage was given to the corporation.

In this church were the following particulars:

1. A chantry, dedicated to St. Mary, to which Richard Mancheſter was a great benefactor in 1454.

2. A chantry on the ſouth part of the church, dedicated to St. John Baptiſt, to which Mancheſter likewiſe contributed.

3. A chantry dedicated to St. Katherine, the lands of which lying in Lidney in Glouceſterſhire, and Ripple and Naunton in Worceſterſhire, were ſold to Sir Thomas Bell, and Richard Duke, eſq; Auguſt 17, 2° E. 6.

4. A fraternity dedicated to St. Thomas.

5. An anniverſary, ſome of the poſſeſſions of which were ſold to the two laſt mentioned perſons.

6. A yearly obit on September 13, for alderman John Cook, his father, mother, wife, and others, mentioned in the will of lady Cook, 1544, by whom it was founded.

Great part of the Black-Horſe inn was formerly the parſonage houſe, which is the only one now remaining to any of the pariſhes in the city, and at this time it pays a conſiderable chief-rent to the rector. There certainly were parſonage houſes antiently belonging to all thoſe rectories or livings, the incumbents of which did not live in the religious houſes to which their churches were appropriated; Saint Mary de Grace, and the Holy Trinity had them, and the parſonage-houſes of All Saints, St. Aldate, St. Mary de Lode, and St. Michael, all occur in the old records. How they came to be loſt does not appear; perhaps they might be taken away under pretence of concealed lands, or of forfeiture.

Upon ſeveral bricks now remaining in the church and chancel, are the following arms: A feſs between ſix croſs croſſlets.—The arms of archbiſhop Deene.—The arms of the Berkeley family.

The FRIERY, called the BLACK FRIERS, or the Houſe, or College of Friers Preachers.

This ſtood within the town, ſays Leland, not far from the caſtle-garth, or court-yard. It was founded by king Henry the Third and Stephen lord of Harneſhull, about the year 1239. King Edward the Third, in the 39th year of his reign, as we learn from biſhop Tanner, gave licence to the prior and brethren of this friery to enlarge their manſion-houſe.

A manuſcript in the Cotton library mentions the ſurrender of this monaſtery on the 28th of July, 1538, to Richard, (perhaps Richard Yngworth) ſuffragan biſhop of Dover, in the preſence of the mayor and three of the aldermen. They had no rents, but their gardens were in leaſe for a long term of years. Thomas Bell then kept 300 men at work in the friery, for which reaſon the biſhop deſired he might continue in it.

John Rainolds, B. D. the prior; John Hooper, Richard Bylond, William Swan, afterwards rector of Shipton Solers; William Walton, Ralph Howel, or Powel, Thomas Mekins, afterwards curate of Upton St. Leonard's, and vicar of Aſhelworth, were the friers at the time of the ſurrender, and were permitted to change their habit.

The ſite of this friery, with ſome other lands, were granted to Sir Thomas Bell July the 12th, 31° H. 8. in conſideration of 240*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.* and ſoon afterwards this houſe was improved into a handſome manſion, called Bell's Place, where the manufacture of cap-making was carried on. From Bell it deſcended to one of his wife's relations, married to Thomas Dennis, eſq; whoſe deſcendents ſold it to Mr. Samuel Cockerell, of whoſe family Mr. John Buſh purchaſed the capital building for a dwelling-houſe, in the year 1768.

Dr. Stukeley has given a draught of this priory in his Itinera Curioſa, as it ſtood in 1721, and one of the plates in Buck's collection of the remains of Engliſh religious houſes, is of this monaſtery and of Lanthony together. A good part of the church is ſtill remaining.

Upon a broken ſtone dug up in 1716, was the effigy of a frier, and on another Oſſa Johannis Biſeley.

There were lately upon ſome bricks in the floor of one of the houſes, made out of the ruins of the friery, the arms of archbiſhop Dene, of the biſhoprick of Durham, of St. Peter's abbey, and a bend cotiſed, between ſix trees; and in a miſſal found in the friery, in the year 1714, were the names of Walter Bowden, Agnes his wife, Richard Warminſter, John Brigge, Robert Durnel, and Julian his wife, who probably were benefactors to it. Thomas lord Berkeley, about the reign of Edward the Firſt, relieved the brethren of this houſe very liberally out of his granaries.

There was formerly in this pariſh, a priory of Black Canons, founded by king Athelſtan, which ſeems to be different from the houſe of Dominicans, or Black Friers, juſt ſpoken of, for that order was not in being 'till ſome hundreds of years after the time of Athelſtan; but the accounts of theſe houſes are ſo confuſed, that there is not much to be learnt concerning the latter diſtinct from the other.

In this pariſh ſtood alſo

The GREY FRIERS, or, The Houſe or College of Friers Minors, or Franciſcans.

This houſe, according to the undoubted authority of Leland, ſtood within the city, eaſtward of the church of St. Mary de Crypt, and was founded by one of the lords of Berkeley. William Gerard gave the monks of this houſe a ſupply of water from Matſon, or Robin-Hood's hill, the quantity of which, on account of a diſpute between the friery and St. Peter's abbey, was ſettled by Edward the Black Prince, in 1350.

Thomas lord Berkeley, about 35° E. 3. gave them ſome adjacent lands and tenements; and it is ſaid in Dugdale's Baronage, that William, marquis of Berkeley, by his will, dated February 5, 1491, ordered that a frier ſhould perpetually officiate for himſelf and relations in this houſe, towards the rebuilding of which, Leland ſays, he gave 20*l*. We have it alſo on Dugdale's authority, that the lady of James lord Berkeley was buried in the choir of this monaſtery, in the year 1452. She had been unjuſtly impriſoned in the caſtle of Glouceſter, by Margaret counteſs of Shrewſbury, on account of ſome violent conteſts at law, which for a great number of years ſubſiſted between thoſe two families, and there kept 'till ſhe died, which was on Saturday before the feaſt of St. Michael.

It is ſaid that this friery was in ſome meaſure under the direction of the warden of the Grey Friers in Lewinſmead, Briſtol, but how far I cannot learn.

This houſe was ſurrendered July 28, 1538, to Richard, ſuffragan biſhop of Dover, in the preſence of the mayor and three aldermen, when it was ſaid to be "a goodly houſe, much of it new builded, eſpecially the church, choir, and dorture; the reſt ſmall lodgings".

William Lightfoot, afterwards vicar of Tetbury, John Beacheley, or Berklay, Henry Tacket, George Cooper, and John Kebul, afterwards rector of St. Aldate's, friers of this houſe, were permitted to change their habit.

After the diſſolution, the king, April 2, 33° H. 8. granted it with a cloſe of paſture ground on the eaſt ſide, the church-yard, a garden in the ſouthgate ſtreet, and all other particulars belonging to the ſcite of the monaſtery, to Sir John Jennings, for twenty-one years, at 33*s*. a year, reſerving all the buildings to be thrown down and carried away, as he by his commiſſioners ſhall think fit; but the ſame year he convey'd the fee to the ſame perſon. From Jennings it paſſed to Hugh Gethyn, and thro' ſeveral hands 'till Mr. Thomas Pury granted it, in 1630, to the corporation of the city.

Great damage was done to the buildings of this houſe at the ſiege, by the king's artillery; but there are ſtill conſiderable remains of the monaſtery; the walls of the church, which was large, are entire. It is now formed into three tenements, which, together with others, a bowling-green, orchard and gardens, all belonging to the ſaid monaſtery, are now the property of Powell Snell, eſq; who has a leaſe of them from the corporation for a long term, at a ſmall chief-rent.

Dr. Stukeley, in his Itinera Curioſa, has given a plate of this alſo, as it ſtood Auguſt 24, 1721, but he was miſtaken in calling it the White Friers.

Mr. Juſtice Powell, one of the judges of the king's bench, was a native of this city, and reſided in this houſe, whoſe ſolid judgment in the municipal laws, and moderation in behaviour, deſervedly placed him on the bench of the higheſt courts of judicature in the nation. He died in the year 1713, and was buried in the Lady's chapel, in the cathedral church, where is a magnificent monument for him, as in p. 119.

Littleworth, and ſevaral of the South Hamlets lie in this pariſh, but they will all be conſidered at the concluſion of the account of the city, under Suburbs.

St. MARY de GRACE, or GRACE-LANE; called alſo St. Mary in the Market.

THIS church conſiſted of one aile, with a ſpire ſteeple, and ſtood on the place now called the knap, where the herb and fiſh market is kept, eaſt of the ſite of the king's board. It is is a rectory, but was antiently a chapel to the Holy Trinity. The abbey of St. Peter granted the oblations and profits of it to a chaplain, at the yearly rent of 10*s.*

In the valuation or certificate 19° E. 1. it is thus expreſſed: Exitus Capellæ, viz. de decimis perſonalibus ad Paſcha 49 ſol. 11 den. oblationibus 39 ſol. oblationibus ad imaginem Beatæ Mariæ ibidem 4 ſol. 4 den. in purificationibus, anniverſariis obſequiis, et aliis conſimilibus 22 ſol. 10 den. quæ omnia et ſingula curatus ibidem percipit pro ſalario ſuo, preter 10 ſol. nomine cujuſdam penſionis, annuatim ſolutos abbati. Valet clare cxvi. ſol. i. den.

The value of this living has been twice augmented by lot, with queen Ann's bounty, and returned.

This church was united to that of St. Michael by an ordinance of parliament in 1648, and the building was granted to the corporation in conſideration of their keeping powder and ammunition for the defence of the city. In 1653, it was intirely taken down by order of the corporation, and part of the materials were uſed in repairing St. Michael's; but ever ſince the reſtoration, the pariſhes have been ſeparate and diſtinct, though the inhabitants go to St. Michael's church, the miniſter of which is generally licenced to this curacy.

In this church was a chantry dedicated to St. Mary, and in Grace-lane a meſſuage called Grace-lane college, or prieſt's college, belonging to this chantry, which being purchaſed of the crown, at the diſſolution, by Richard Pate, eſq; he gave it to Corpus Chriſti college, in Oxford, towards the maintenance of a ſchool and hoſpital at Cheltenham.

Benefactions.

Mr. Daniel Lyſons gave 21*s.* a year to the poor of this pariſh for bread.

The baptiſms and burials are regiſtered in the book at St. Michael's, and included in the account of them in that pariſh.

The number of houſholders in this pariſh in 1562 was 29; about the year 1710, according to Sir Robert Atkyns, there were 42 houſes, and 240 inhabitants; but in the year 1743, there were 45 houſes, and only 137 inhabitants.

Before the workhouſe was erected, this pariſh had paid 6*l.* towards the maintenance of the poor of other pariſhes, having none of its own; but in the year 1770 it paid quarterly to the workhouſe 7*l.* 9*s.* 1*d.* and towards lamps 6*l.* 19*s.*

St. MARY de LODE;

Called alſo St. Mary before the Gate of St. Peter's, St. Mary Broad-Gate, and St. Mary de Port.

THE church is very old, but handſome, with two ſide ailes, and a veſtry at the end of that on the ſouth, and a croſs aile at the end of that on the north. In the middle is a low ſquare tower, with ſix bells, and it is ſaid there was antiently a lofty ſpire upon it, which was demoliſhed by a ſtorm. The firſt name ſeems to have been given it on account of its ſituation, for the river Severn formerly ran near it.

Gilbert Foliot, when he was abbat of St. Peter's, with the advice and conſent of his convent, aſſigned this church, with its chapels of St. Giles at Maiſemore, St. Lawrence at Barnwood, and St. Leonard at Upton, to the maintenance of a light at the altar of St. Peter.

This vicarage was taxed at thirty marks 19° E. 1. John de Rodberow had a penſion in it of twenty-three marks, the ſacriſt of St. Peter's had five, and the prior of Lanthony, in great tithes, two marks. The rector of this church had five ſhillings out of that of Matſon. The portion of John de Rodberow was a ſhare of the tithes, which for ſome time was reputed a diſtinct and independent rectory, enjoyed before him by William de Berners, to which the abbey preſented. Reginald de Schipton reſigned this portion on the 19th of February, 1301, and on the 15th of April following, it was annexed to the vicarage by the authority of the archbiſhop of Canterbury.

In 1304, by a compoſition between the vicar and the abbey, the former and his ſucceſſors were granted a certain corrody, as formerly received, with a yearly penſion of five marks, pay for one horſe, and entertainment for himſelf, a chaplain, a deacon, and two clerks at the abbey table, on certain feſtivals. All perſons belonging to the abbey, tho' pariſhioners, might be interred in the abbey church-yard; the vicar to have the firſt maſs, and all oblations ariſing from it; and the abbey to pay no tithes for things privileged within the pariſh.

In 1313, the vicarage of this church was aſſigned, by the king's licence, for ſuſtaining and repairing the Virgin Mary's chapel in the abbey.

Pope

Pope Urban the Sixth, and Boniface the Ninth alſo appropriated the revenues of this church, which were then forty marks, to the ſervice of the abbey, and in 1394, the appropriation was acknowledged and ratified by the biſhop of Worceſter; and again, at a metropolitical viſitation, on the 3d of September, 1534.

In 1398, the abbey granted an annual penſion of 6*s.* 8*d.* for all epiſcopal dues.

On the 3d of April, 1403, the biſhop of Worceſter, with the conſent of the abbey, ordained, that inſtead of all former penſions, &c. the vicar ſhall have only the care of the vicarage, and enjoy a yearly penſion of 16*l.* with the vicarage houſe; the abbey to pay 26*s.* 8*d.* to the poor of the pariſh; and, receiving all the oblations and profits ariſing in the church, to provide at their charge what other chaplains ſhall be neceſſary, or uſed to be, in the church and the chapels belonging to it.

Some of theſe particulars are taken from abbat Frauceſter's regiſter, which contains many things relating to this vicarage; the preſentation to which, together with the rectory, coming to the crown at the diſſolution of the abbey, they were granted by king H. 8. to the dean and chapter at their foundation, who were appointed to pay the vicar 10*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* In the year 1666, they paid him 53*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* and continued ſo to do for twenty-one years; but it appears by the biſhop's viſitation book, that ſince the expiration of that term, they have paid only 40*l.* which, it is there ſaid, will be continued to a reſident vicar; the privy tithes of part of the pariſh, eaſter offerings, and ſurplus fees may amount to 30*l.* more.

Certain portions of tithes, and a moiety of the wood at Woolridge and of another at Le Perche, all ſaid to be in this pariſh, are alſo granted by the king to the dean and chapter, in their charter of endowment.

Lands in St. Mary de Lode, lately belonging to St. Peter's abbey, were granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple 35° H. 8.

The hermitage of Sendbridge, or Senbrugge, or Sondbrugge, or Sandbrug is in this pariſh. The abbey of St. Peter granted it by the name of the chapel or hermitage of Sendbridge, with the oblations, &c. to Humphry Wilkins, clerk, September 29, 23° H. 8.

William Nottingham, eſq; the king's attorney general, gave to St. Peter's abbey certain lands at Senbrugge, to maintain a chantry in the abbey for two monks.

In the ordinance of parliament 1648, for uniting certain churches in the city, this is wholly omitted; but in the year 1650, the corporation petitioned the parliament to unite the cathedral with this pariſh, and to appoint a preaching miniſter in the college church: And in 1654 they petitioned again that the cathedral might be made the pariſh church, and that St. Mary's and St. Katherine's might be united with it.

There were in this church,

1. A chantry dedicated to St. Mary, whereof John Mery, the laſt incumbent, obtained a penſion of 4*l.* Sir Thomas Bell, and Richard Duke, eſq; purchaſed certain poſſeſſions belonging to this chantry 2° E. 6. The houſes at the north-weſt end of the church, adjoining to the church-yard, belonged to the chantry prieſts.

2. A fraternity dedicated to the Holy Trinity, whereof William Taylor, the laſt incumbent, obtained an annuity of 2*l.* 10*s.* I ſuppoſe this is the guild of which it is ſaid, the maſters were yearly elected by the corporation out of their own body.

This is a large pariſh, and antiently was much larger than it is at preſent. Tuffley and Kingſholm, with ſome part of Laſſington, Longford, Twigworth, Down Hatherley, and Wotton, and other lands without the weſt-gate are reputed to belong to it; and it is ſaid that Lawford's-gate, with forty-eight houſes on this ſide of it, adjoining to the city of Briſtol, alſo belonged to it, and had a proper officer aſſigned for receiving the dues, and for other neceſſary purpoſes. Lands in Stow on the Wold are likewiſe ſaid to have belonged to this pariſh. The chapelries which were formerly dependent on it, are now become ſeparate and independent pariſhes; and the hamlets juſt mentioned will be conſidered diſtinctly under the title Suburbs.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

In the north wall of the chancel, oppoſite the outward door, is an antient mural tomb, with the effigy of a man lying on it, ſaid to have been erected in memory of Lucius, the firſt chriſtian king, who is reported to have been buried here. Collier's Hiſtorical Dictionary. This figure is attired like archbiſhop Aldred in the cathedral, and was probably intended for ſome benefactor to the church. The tomb was broken open in the time of the laſt civil war, in hopes of finding valuable treaſure, but the perſons engaged in this buſineſs were diſappointed.

In the croſs aile below the chancel are ſeveral antient ſtones, but the inſcriptions are moſtly gone. Upon the verge of one of them, in old Engliſh letters, may be read, Orate pro anima dmni Philipi Hoggas - - - - - - - CCC - - - - - - - picietur dn amen.

On the next ſtone is a croſs. Round the verge

Claudit'. tuba Spenſer Ion ſic et ✕ Iohanna - - - - -

Part of both the above are covered with ſeats.

Almoſt at the weſt end of the ſouth aile, is a ſtone with a croſs at top, about the middle of it is this inſcription in old black letter:

Hic jacet Ioannes Benha quonda Herimita de Senbrige Cm' - - - - - de - - - - -

Upon ſome bricks within the weſt door and in the ſouth aile, is written Katherina Koke, probably a benefactor to this church.

St. MICHAEL's.

THE church is large, conſiſting of two ailes of equal dimenſions, and a ſquare tower at the weſt end, with ſix bells in it. It was antiently part of the poſſeſſions of the ſee of Exeter. Peter, one of the biſhops of that ſee, ſold it with its chapel of St. Martin, to St. Peter's abbey, in the year 1285. At the diſſolution of the abbey, the patronage devolving to the crown, the lord chancellor is now patron. It is a rectory, worth about 15*l.* a year in tithes, beſides ſurplus fees and voluntary contributions. Robert Cole informs us, that the church of St. Martyn ſtood where that of St. Michael now is.

The church and chapel were valued at ſeven marks 16° E. 1. and three years afterwards at nine; but in the ſixth year of the next reign they were valued at ten marks. In the commiſſioners certificate, 26° H. 8. it is thus expreſſed, Rectoria Sancti Michaelis valet in decimis et oblationibus, ultra 20 den. ſolutos epiſcopo pro viſitatione, 6s. 8d. archidiacono pro procurationibus, 2s. pro ſinagio, et 2 den. ſeneſchallis villæ Glouceſtriæ, 21l. 5s. 9d. ob. The firſt fruits of this rectory, which before the year 1624 were 21*l.* 5*s.* 9*d.* halfpenny, were then reduced by a decree of the barons of the exchequer, to 8*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.* on the appeal of Mr. Woodruffe, the rector.

In 1366, the pariſhioners, who before were interred in the church-yard of the abbey, acquired the right of ſepulture in their own, paying 20*s.* yearly to St. Peter's; but their church-yard having been conſecrated without the approbation of the biſhop of Worceſter, was continued under an interdict 'till November 1368.

By an ordinance of parliament in 1646, the pariſhes of St. Aldate and St. Mary de Grace were annexed to this, and 80*l.* a year with a prebendal houſe were ſettled upon the rectory, the patronage of which was given to the mayor and burgeſſes. This church being at that time much out of repair, both the others were taken down, and many of the materials uſed on St. Michael's in the year 1653, when it was under built with three new pillars. At the reſtoration the pariſhes became ſeparate, and have continued ſo ever ſince.

In this church were the following particulars. 1. A chantry dedicated to St. Ann, of which the fraternity of weavers were patrons, and Richard Burnell the laſt incumbent. Lands in Nailſworth, in the pariſh of Avening, belonged to it. 2. A chantry dedicated to St. John Baptiſt, whereof Stephen Pool, the laſt incumbent, obtained a yearly penſion of 4*l.* 3. A chantry dedicated to St. Mary, of which Hugh Fiſherpole, the laſt incumbent, obtained a penſion of 4*l.* a year. 4. A fraternity of brethren and ſiſters, dedicated to St. John Baptiſt, who inhabited a houſe in the Eaſt-gate ſtreet, called Brethren-hall. 5. Our Lady's chapel. 6. The Rood light. 7. St. Katherine's light.

Here was alſo a very ſolemn anniverſary kept, and attended by the ſheriffs and ſtewards of the town, in memory of maſter Thomas Whytefeld, who ordained by his laſt will that 30*s.* ſhould be expended on it.

Abbat Malvern gave ſeveral rich veſtments to the church in 1499, for eſtabliſhing a yearly obit on the 18th of July, for John Hertland, one of the monks of St. Peter's, and his parents.

In abbat Frauceſter's MS. a great deal is ſaid relating to this rectory, and there are now ſome antient papers in the cheſt on the ſame ſubject.

In a window of the north aile, eaſt of the pulpit, is the following coat; Gules, a creſcent between ſix eſcallops, 3, 2, 1, argent. Near it another eſcutcheon, the field gules, but the bearing not intelligible.

The eaſt end of the ſouth ſide of this church was rebuilt in 1736.

That 30*l.* be annually laid out in blue gowns, ſhoes, ſtockings, and linen cloth for ten men and ten women. above diſpoſitions are made, and neceſſary repairs done to the houſe, if any money remains, to be given to young beginners, and maid ſervants who have lived in any place faithfully for three years, and to decayed houſekeepers.

The corporation purchaſed the manor of Awre and Blakeney with Sir Thomas Rich's money, worth about 200*l.* a year; which being inſufficient for the above purpoſes, ſeveral additions have been ſince made to the charity.

Lady Napier's gift of 50*l.* to the city, was applied to it in 1715.

Mr. Amity Clutterbuck, who had been one of the twenty boys brought up in this hoſpital, gave 1000*l.* to it in 1722.

Alderman Thomas Brown alſo gave 400*l.* to it.

He alſo gave, after his ſiſter's deceaſe, 200*l.* to the ſociety for promoting chriſtian knowledge; 200*l.* to the ſociety for propagating the goſpel in foreign parts; and the reſidue of his eſtate, which is conſiderable, to be diſpoſed of in charity, as his executors ſhall think proper.

St. NICHOLAS's.

THE church ſtands on the north ſide in the Weſt-gate ſtreet. It conſiſts of a handſome nave, with an aile on each ſide of it, and a veſtry at the eaſt end of the north aile. At the weſt end of the nave is a lofty ſpire with ſix bells, beſide a ſaint's-bell. On the ſpire is a mural coronet, whence it has been conjectured, that the church was built by king John, who had been earl of Glouceſter. It is dedicated to St. Nicholas, biſhop of the city of Myra, in Lycia.

The advowſon of the church was granted to Nicholas Ragnel, in the fourth year of the reign of king John; and William Coxnell held it as incumbent 5° H. 3. for the repairing of the Weſt-bridge.

King

King Henry the Third, at the requeſt of his queen, gave it to St. Bartholomew's hoſpital, in the 13th year of his reign; and pope Gregory, (perhaps the 11th of that name, 'tho it be not expreſſly ſaid which of them) by his bull, confirmed it to the hoſpital; but recites that it was given by a biſhop of Worceſter, with the conſent of his chapter.

After the diſſolution, it was granted with the ſaid hoſpital, by queen Elizabeth, to the mayor and burgeſſes of Glouceſter, ſubject to a penſion of 13*s.* 4*d.* granted out of it to the dean and chapter, by their charter of foundation, being part of the revenues of the late diſſolved abbey there.

This church was valued at 40 marks 19° E. 1. but the clear yearly value of it, in tythes and oblations, 26° H. 8. was 9*l.* 18*s.* The certificate runs thus: Eccleſia Sancti Nicholai Glouc. valet clare in decimis et oblationibus per annum, ultra 2*s. per annum ſolutos epiſcopo Wigorniæ,* 6*s.* 8*d. pro procuratione archidiaconi Glouc.* 13*s.* 4*d. pro viſitatione epiſcopi Glouc. juxta ratam cujuſlibet tertii anni* 40*s. et* 104*s. ſingulis diebus dominicis per totum annum inter pauperes et mulieres dicti hoſpitalis* [St. Bartholomei] diſtribut. ratione appropriationis dictæ eccleſiæ ex fundatione Henrici 3. nuper regis Angliæ, 9*l.* 18*s.* The voluntary contributions are worth about 50*l.* a year. This living has been twice choſen by lot to be augmented by queen Anne's bounty, and was returned. There is no parſonage-houſe, but the miniſter has a lodging in Bartholomew hoſpital.

The church of the Holy Trinity was united to this, by an ordinance of parliament in 1648, and an annuity of 80*l.* annexed to the curacy, with one of the prebendal houſes; the incumbent to pay firſt fruits and tenths after the rate of 8*l.* a year. But the pariſhes are now diſtinct.

There were in this church the following particulars: 1. A chantry dedicated to St. Mary. 2. Another chantry dedicated to St. Katherine, at which a light was provided for William Sanford and Owen Windſor, by the prior of St. Bartholomew's. This William Sanford, about the middle of the reign of Henry the 3d, gave to that hoſpital all his lands and poſſeſſions in and about the town of Glouceſter, for the honourable maintenance of a ſecular prieſt, to officiate daily in this church, and for providing 2*s.* weekly to be given to the poor of the hoſpital. The prieſt to have 20*s.* a year to buy him cloathes, and to receive his victuals and have his lodging in the hoſpital more honourable than any of the brethren, next to the prior. 3. A chantry for one prieſt, founded by the will of Thomas of Glouceſter, dated May 18, 1446. 4. An altar dedicated to St. Thomas, at which the prior, or one of the brethren of the ſaid hoſpital, officiated for the ſouls of Sanford and Windſor; and a light burning for them from ſun-riſing to ſun-ſetting, at the high altar; and another taper burning before the croſs. 5. An obit on December 28, in memory of William Francomb, and Alice his wife, for which the ſaid Alice gave certain lands in 1491. In the reign of queen Elizabeth, the rent of the land was detained by the crown; but the churchwardens have received 6*s.* 8*d.* a year ever ſince on that account.

In this pariſh is

St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

This hoſpital is ſituate between the bridges on the north ſide of the weſt-gate ſtreet. In an inquiſition taken upon oath before William the prior of Lanthony, and William de Chiltenham, 30° E. 3. it is ſaid to owe its original to William Myparty, a burgeſs of Glouceſter; who, when Nicholas Walred, clerk, began to build the weſt bridge, in the reign of king H. 2. gave him a piece of land, whereon the hoſpital now ſtands, built a houſe upon it for the convenience of Walred and his workmen, and retiring to them himſelf, with ſeveral other perſons of both ſexes, they all lived there together, in hermitical habit, under the government of a prieſt, upon the charity of well diſpoſed perſons. But king H. 3. on the twenty ſixth of June, in the thirteenth year of his reign, being at Glouceſter, gave them the church of St. Nicholas; and from that time the houſe was called the Hoſpital of St. Bartholomew the apoſtle. Soon after, the ſame king, upon their petition, granted them liberty to chooſe a prior; and on the 12th of September, in the forty ninth year of his reign, gave them ſixteen ells of land in length, and five in breadth, to be taken out of the ſtreet, for the enlargement of their chancel.

Leland ſays this hoſpital was founded by one of the biſhops of Worceſter, but by which of them is not known. Others attribute it to Boſil, the firſt biſhop of that ſee. However that be, it was found upon the inquiſition mentioned at the beginning of this account, that after St. Nicholas's was granted to the hoſpital, the biſhop of Worceſter claimed a right of viſiting it. According to biſhop Tanner, king E. 3. order'd the ſtate of this hoſpital to be ſurvey'd; and we learn from Mr. Prynne, in his Animadverſions on Coke's Inſtitutes, that king R. 2. iſſued out a commiſſion for viſiting it. But on the nineteenth day of November, 9° H. 4. the king granted the prior and brethren a new charter, which is now in the cuſtody of the corporation, and the tranſlation of it may be ſeen in the Appendix. N°. 12.

The hoſpital conſiſted of a maſter, or prior, or guardian, and three fellows, beſides the poor people. Andrew Whitmay the maſter, John Henbury, John Harsfield, and Henry or Harry Francum, the three brethren, ſubſcribed to the king's ſupremacy, Sept. 4, 1534.

There was formerly a chapel in this hoſpital, dedicated to St. Urſula. A chantry in Newent church-yard, dedicated to St. James and St. Anne, belonged alſo to this hoſpital, 'till its diſſolution.

In the fifth year of king Henry the ſeventh, this hoſpital was valued at 23*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* About the time of its diſſolution, the accounts are exceedingly various. The profits were computed at 33*l.* 8*s.* 8*d.* clear of all repriſals 26° H. 8. The next year the whole rent was ſaid to be 74*l.* 0*s.* 1*d.* and the clear income 44*l.* 7*s.* 2*d. ob.* which was increaſed the year afterwards to 65*l.* 7*s.* 8*d. ob.*

The commiſſioners appointed 37° H. 8. certified, that this hoſpital was founded for a maſter, who was to have a ſalary of 20*l.* 5*s.* 5*d. q.* for five prieſts, [perhaps the three brethren and two others to officiate here and at St. Nicholas's] whoſe ſalary was 29*l.* for thirty two poor people, who receive 30*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.* and for finding a lamp and two tapers in the above church, at the yearly expence of 14*s.* 6*d.* Beſides the above payments, there were 6*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.* for out rents; 4*l.* 8*s.* 8*d. ob.* for tenths; 1*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.* ſynodals and pentecoſtals for the churches belonging to it; and

2*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* for fees. The value of the ornaments, plate, goods, &c. then belonging to it was 20*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.*

The commiſſioners, 1° E. 6. certified, that the clear yearly value was 25*l.* 11*s.* 2*d.* and that the ſeveral poſſeſſions of the poor people belonging to the hoſpital were worth 25*l.* 4*s.* 5*d.* I ſuppoſe before the outgoings were deducted. And that valuation being approved, 9 February, 3° E. 6. the maſters were to pay firſt fruits to the crown accordingly for it. In archbiſhop Sancroft's MS. Valor. it is 25*l.* 6*s.* 3*d. toto*, 4*l.* 10*s.* 11*d. ob. clare.* Thirty-four poor perſons were then in the hoſpital. The full income of the lands belonging to it was 78*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.* when it was granted from the crown.

By the intereſt of Mr. Pates, recorder of the city, queen Elizabeth, by letters patents, dated July 14, regni 6° granted this hoſpital to the mayor and burgeſſes of Glouceſter, with the patronage of the office of maſter, &c. when the ſame ſhould become void by the death of John Man, eſq; and alſo the revenues of it, for the maintenance of a miniſter, a phyſician, a ſurgeon, and forty poor people. This grant was obtained on condition that the mayor, &c. would releaſe an antient annual penſion of 9*l.* 2*s.* paid by the crown to the hoſpital, which was done on the 17th of the ſame month. The mayor, &c. covenanted with the queen, that the whole clear yearly profits ſhould be expended in the manner mentioned.

The hoſpital was in a deplorable condition when it came into the hands of the corporation. The church was ruinous, and the houſe ſo decay'd, that they rebuilt twenty-one chambers, and were at great expences in other repairs.

Soon after the corporation obtained the grant of this hoſpital, they elected a preſident or provoſt, a treaſurer, two ſurveyors, two almoners, and two ſcrutineers yearly, as they now continue to do, to manage the affairs of this hoſpital, who have alſo the ſuperintendency over thoſe of St Margaret, and the Magdalen or king James's. The ſtatutes for their government were compoſed, it is ſaid, by archbiſhop Laud, about the year 1636.

The queen's grant has ſince been confirmed by act of parliament, which provides, that the biſhop of Glouceſter, or other ordinary of the dioceſe, ſhall freely viſit the hoſpital every third year to ſee if the above covenant be truly obſerved.

In Leland's time there were fifty-two poor perſons in the hoſpital; but 26° & 27° H. 8. there were only twenty-four. In Sternhold's and Man's maſterſhips were thirty-two, at four pence half penny or three farthings a week. Soon after the grant, it was increaſed to ſix-pence each. In the time of king Charles the firſt, it came to two ſhillings each, and then from time to time, additional chambers were added, ſo that at preſent there are twenty-ſix men and thirty women in ſo many chambers, who receive two ſhillings and ſix-pence each weekly.

I have a large folio book of abſtracts from the original grants to this hoſpital, which exhibits the names of near a hundred benefactors to it.

Priors or Maſters.

Adam Garon, or de Garne, was the firſt prior or maſter. About the time of his government, Oſbert Giffard gave lands in Brimpsfield for the maintenance of a chaplain, to officiate for himſelf and anceſtors. A perpetual chaplain was appointed for Philip and Margery Apothecary. And Adam de Ardern gave a certain ſum of money for eſtabliſhing a chantry in the hoſpital.

John de Monumeta occurs in the reign of H. 3.

Adam Reyner.

John de Boſco.

William Abenhalle, or Abbehal occurs temp. E. 1.

John de Wode.

John de Oke, del Oks, or de Oka, occurs 29 E. 1. In 1318, a perpetual anniverſary was erected here for John Thormerton. This prior dying in 1326,

John de Bykenor was advanced to the priorſhip.

Nicholas Hardewyke occurs 5°, & 28° E. 3. William de Bohun earl of Northampton, July 15, 17° E. 3. gave to him and the hoſpital the advowſon of the church of Newnham, and chapel of Little Dean, co. Glouc. And in 1374, a perpetual chantry was erected here for Ralph Baron.

Walter Gibbes occurs 36° E. 3.

John Bilmulle ſucceeding, occurs 12° & 21° R. 2.

John Prentys ſucceeded. He reſigned in 1401, whereupon

John Arundel was elected the ſame year.

Thomas Carpenter occurs 1°, & 6°. H. 5.

William Wirceſtre occurs 2° H. 6. upon whoſe reſignation,

Stephen Myle ſucceeded Mar. 8. 1425, and dying 1454,

William Sobbrory, called alſo John Sodbury, alias Holwey, was elected.

John Haſſefeld was advanced July 12, 1476. He had a diſpute with the prior of Lanthony about ten loaves which that priory had engaged to furniſh every day to the poor people of this hoſpital, in conſideration of 220 marks given to the ſaid priory, upon that condition, by Richard the prieſt of Heytherleia, about the time of king H. 3. and which the priory had refuſed or neglected to furniſh. The biſhop of Worceſter made a definitive ſentence for the hoſpital againſt the priory Aug. 18, 1477; but the latter often failed in performance, and the prior and convent were ſeveral times ſummoned and cited before different authorities, particularly 4° H. 7. by the archbiſhop of Canterbury, to ſhew cauſe why they did not perform their covenant with Richard de Hatherley.

Richard Baker occurs 8°. & 11° H. 7.

Thomas Aphowel occurs 14° H. 7. About the time of his government, one Pauncefote is ſaid to have been a great benefactor. He was buried in the chapel of the hoſpital. The raiſed tomb, under an arch between the church and the little ſouth aile, was probably erected for him.

Andrew Whitmay, ſuppoſed to be born at Wheatenhurſt, occurs as prior 4° H. 8. He raiſed the houſe, ſubject before to the frequent inundations of the Severn, and built a handſome lodging for himſelf, in the windows of which the initial letters of his name are ſtill remaining. He was archdeacon of St. David's, and a ſuffragan biſhop of the dioceſe of Worceſter. He ſubſcribed to the king's ſupremacy, and held the government of the hoſpital till his death, about 1546.

Thomas Sternhold, eſq; groom of the king's wardrobe, had the maſterſhip conferred upon him Sept. 25, 1° E. 6. for from the time of the diſſolution the title of prior ceaſed.

John Man, eſq; was preſented to it Oct. 29, 3° E. 6. Upon queen Elizabeth's grant of the reverſion of this office to the corporation, he reſigned it to them, who paid him a penſion of 38*l.* a year. He was inſtituted to the deanery of this cathedral, and died 1568. See Deans.

Many lands and poſſeſſions in this city, and the counties of Glouceſter and Worceſter, belong to this hoſpital. Among others are, the perpetual curacy of St. Nicholas; the perpetual curacy of Newnham; the perpetual curacy of Little Dean; the rectory of Kemmerton, given by biſhop Goodman, all in this county; and thirty pounds a year paid out of the improved rent of Bentham-farm, given to the corporation by Lilly Cook; ſo that the whole revenues of the hoſpital, according to biſhop Tanner, are about 500*l.* a year.

No

No perſon can be admitted into this, nor the hoſpitals of St. Margaret, and Mary Magdalen, under the age of fifty two years, unleſs on account of ſome irrecoverable infirmity. The governors hold a court, at leaſt once a month, for theſe hoſpitals, at which all the poor people attend.

St. OWEN's.

THE church, which ſtood on the weſt ſide, a little without the South-gate, was burnt down by the citizens, with the reſt of the ſuburbs, at the ſiege, after the meſſengers from the city had returned their anſwer to the king's ſummons, on the tenth of Auguſt, 1643. It was founded by Walter the conſtable of Glouceſter, and dedicated, and made parochial, by epiſcopal authority.

In the year 1137, earl Milo gave it and its appurtenances to the priory of Lanthony. The appurtenances were, a chapel within the caſtle; a ſmall piece of land upon the bank of the Severn, to find a light to the ſaid chapel; all the offerings of the keepers of the tower of the caſtle, and the barons reſiding there; half the oblations of himſelf and family, if his chaplain was preſent, and the whole if abſent; St. Kyneburgh's chapel, and the whole parochial land of the conſtable of the caſtle, within the South-gate and without; and all the land which Roger de Tocheham and Richard the chaplain poſſeſſed within and without that gate. Earl Milo, at the ſame time, gave to the ſaid priory ſeveral rural churches or chapels, particularly Hempſted, Elmore, and Quedgly, and many other things expreſſly ſet down in earl Milo's charter to the priory of Lanthony.

When Walter de Cantelupe was biſhop of Worceſter, the value of the ſeveral particulars belonging to this vicarage, was as follows; the alterage, ſmall tythes, and other obventions of St. Owen's, 3*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* the alterage, &c. of Hechamſted, 60*s.* and other tythes 21*s.* i. e. 4*l.* 1*s.* the alterage and ſmall tythes of Quedreſſe [Quedgley] and other obventions, four marks, and tythe of other lands, 5*s.* 9*d.* in all 2*l.* 19*s.* 1*d.* the ſmall tythes of Elmore, and other obventions, five marks, other tythes 6*s.* 7*d.* and tythes of villainage 20*s.* in all 4*l.* 13*s.* 3*d.* So that one vill and three contiguous country cures, were ſerved for 15*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* which the biſhop ratified at the appointment of the vicarage.

The vicar complaining afterwards, to the prior and convent of Worceſter, who were guardians of the ſpiritualties, that his vicarage was inſufficient, and that if he was obliged to live upon it, the prior and convent of Lanthony were bound, by an antient agreement, to build an habitacle for him; it was agreed, that the vicar ſhould have ſix marks of ſilver, three and a half of which to be expended in building a houſe at Heyamſtede, for the uſe of the vicarage of St. Owen's.

The vicarage was taxed at thirteen marks, 19° E. 1. The abbey of Lyra, in Normandy, had 20*s.* out of it; and in 1398, the pope appropriated it to the priory of Lanthony, which paid, by compoſition with the biſhop of Worceſter, a penſion of 3*s.* 4*d.* for all epiſcopal demands on account of this church, in which the prior and convent held their halimot court.

In this church were, 1. A gild dedicated to St. John Baptiſt, whereof Thomas Briſtol was the laſt incumbent. 2. A chantry dedicated to St. Mary, whereof Richard Stanley, the laſt incumbent, upon its diſſolution, obtained a penſion of 4*l.* a year. Sir Thomas Bell, and Richard Duke, eſq; had a grant of ſeveral of the poſſeſſions belonging hereto, 2° E. 6. 3. An altar dedicated to St. Katherine. 4. The rood-light.

By an ordinance of parliament in 1646, this pariſh was united to St. Mary de Crypt; but that being null, they are now ſeparate, notwithſtanding the rector of St. Mary's pariſh performs parochial duties, as curate, to the pariſhioners of this. In the year 1740, biſhop Benſon procured 200*l.* of queen Anne's bounty to augment the vicarage. The church ſtood on or near the place whereon a new meeting-houſe was erected in 1730. This pariſh has one churchwarden and one overſeer.

For benefactions ſee St. Mary de Crypt.

The number of houſholds in 1562, was 93. Sir Robert Atkyns joins this pariſh with that of St. Mary de Crypt. In 1743, the exact number of houſholds was 65, of inhabitants 186. The baptiſms and burials are included in the account of thoſe of the laſt mentioned pariſh.

St. Owen's pays to the workhouſe quarterly 5*l.* 14*s.* 3*d.* and 2*l.* 14*s.* towards lamps.

In this pariſh are Kyneburgh's Hoſpital, and another charitable inſtitution, called Mr. Hill's Houſe. And firſt

Of KINEBURGH'S HOSPITAL.

We have already ſhewn that the chapel of St. Kyneburg, as an appurtenant to the church of St. Owen, was given by earl Milo to the priory of Lanthony, at its foundation. It ſtood on part of the town wall. Upon the diſſolution of Lanthony, this chapel was ſold by the crown to Thomas Bell, gent. Aug. 1, 34° H. 8. who being afterwards knighted, gave five tenements, which he built on part of the ſite of the old chapel, and another chamber at the weſt end of it, of antient building, with ſome lands belonging to the late diſſolved monaſteries in this county, for the maintenance of ſix poor people; and queen Elizabeth confirmed the donation in the forty-firſt year of her reign. In the year 1608, Mr. Thomas Hobbes gave 2*l.* a year; and Mrs. Margaret Norton gave the intereſt of 50*l.* to the poor people of this hoſpital, each of whom now receives 1*s.* 6*d.* weekly, and ſome money quarterly. The government of this charity is veſted in the corporation.

A portion of the weſt part of the old chapel, given by the founder for the poor people to perform their public devotions in, was granted, in the year 1671, to the fraternity of cordwainers, for their common hall. On the ſouth-weſt ſide of it is a raiſed ſtone monument, whereon lies the effigy of a young lady, with a coronet on her head. The common tradition is, that it is the tomb of one Maud Kimbros, who is ſaid to have been drowned in a well on the north part of the chapel, where are viſible remains of a door, ſuppoſed to lead to that well.

Mr. Hill's Houſe, on the weſt ſide adjoining to the South-gate, was deſigned for an almſhouſe by the proprietor, who had been thrice mayor of the city; and by his will, beqeathed 80*l.* to erect a houſe for the habitation of ſix poor people of the ſouth ward, which has been ſince done by the corporation.

There were formerly ſeveral other almſhouſes belonging to the city. Mr. Pates's houſe, and alderman Thomas Semys's houſes occur in 1643. And it is ſaid that Mr. Richard Keylock erected two houſes for two poor people in St. John's pariſh. But probably they were not endowed with revenues to ſupport them, and ſo falling to decay, they are now undiſtinguiſhable.

TRINITY.

THE church of the Holy Trinity ſtood in the middle of the Weſt-gate-ſtreet, and conſiſted of one aile, with a beautiful tower at the weſt end of it.

It was antiently a rectory, but in the year 1391, it became a vicarage, and was appropriated to St. Peter's abbey. The appropriation of this vicarage, with it's chapel of St. Mary de Grace, was ratified and confirmed by the biſhop of Worceſter, Oct. 14, 1394, and afterwards by other authorities. The dean and chapter of Glouceſter are patrons. The vicarage was augmented by lot, and returned, in the year 1743.

By an ordinance of parliament in 1648, this pariſh was united to that of St. Nicholas, and the church granted to the corporation to be converted to a ſchool-houſe, which was done accordingly, the bells, ſeats, and other particulars, being removed to the chapel of St. Bartholomew's hoſpital, to Teynton, St. Nicholas's, and other places. At the reſtoration, the ordinance was annulled, and the pariſh became diſtinct and ſeparate; but by a faculty, obtained in 1698, the church, which for a long time had been in a ruinous condition, was taken down, except part of the walls towards the weſt end, which, with ſome addition, were converted to a houſe for keeping the fire-engines, and other neceſſaries for the uſe of the city. The beautiful tower was alſo ſuffered to remain, becauſe, according to the notion of thoſe times, it was of public uſe as well as ornament to the city; and beneath it a conduit was erected in 1702. But how fluctuating and uncertain are all human affairs! In a few years afterwards, this beautiful tower, and the more beautiful high croſs, were conſidered as mere public nuiſances, and accordingly were taken down by virtue of an act of 23° G. 2. and the materials purchaſed and uſed in rebuilding the pariſh church of Upton upon Severn.

"The ſite of this church, Sir Robert Atkyns "obſerves, is turned into a market; but the mar-"ket is ſo well regulated, that it gives no diſ-"turbance to the many worthy magiſtrates of "this city who lye buried underneath."

In this church were the following particulars: 1. A chantry dedicated to the Holy Jeſus, whereof Matthew Walker, the laſt incumbent, upon its diſſolution, obtained a penſion of 4*l.* a year. 2. A chantry dedicated to St. Mary, whereof George Cooper, the laſt incumbent, obtained an annuity of 4*l.* 3. A fraternity dedicated to St. Thomas a Becket; for the augmentation of which, and finding a chaplain to officiate at the altar there, for his own ſoul, and for the ſouls of all the faithful deceaſed, Thomas Pope gave certain lands, rents and reverſions, by his will dated Sept. 18, 1400.

A houſe in Gore-lane, given by Richard Pate, eſq; to Corpus Chriſti college, towards the maintenance of a ſchool and hoſpital at Cheltenham, was antiently called Trinity-college, where all the prieſts of this church inhabited.

Richard Morwood, one of the minor-canons, was inſtituted to the vicarage in 1617, and occurs in 1636. He was the laſt incumbent of this church, and was buried in the ſouth part of the tranſept of the cathedral, of which he was præcentor.

The miniſter of St. Nicholas now performs moſt of the parochial duties.

Benefactions.

Mr. Peach gave four houſes to four poor people, rent free.

Mr. Samuel Willet gave 10*l.* the intereſt of which to buy bread for the poor.

Mrs. Mary Broad gave 40*s.* per ann. for the ſame purpoſe.

Mr. Daniel Lyſons gave 20*s.* per ann. for the ſame uſe.

The baptiſms and burials are included in thoſe of the pariſh of St. Nicholas.

The number of houſholds in this pariſh in 1562, was 60; about 1710, according to Sir Robert

Robert Atkyns, there were 134 houſes, and about 600 inhabitants; but in 1743, there were 119 houſholds, and 491 inhabitants.

SUBURBS.

THE ſuburbs are not at preſent ſo large as they were before the ſiege, in the year 1643, when they were ſet on fire by the governor, and are ſaid, in the petition of the mayor and burgeſſes to parliament, for relief on that account, to have been a full third part of the city. They certified that two hundred forty and one houſes, beſides barns, ſtables, and out-buildings, were then burnt and deſtroyed; and it appears by good evidence, that they even exceeded that number.

The houſes joined on both ſides, almoſt all the way from without the lower North-gate to St. Margaret's hoſpital. On the weſt ſide were houſes from the gate to Feate-lane, which had ſeveral good buildings in it; and beyond that lane, and at the weſt end of it, were many others.

There was a ſtreet which led from the South-gate to Rignor's-ſtile; and without the gate were houſes on both ſides, called lower South-gate, and Sudbrook-ſtreet; on the weſt ſide were St. Owen's lane, and Severn-ſtreet. It is very certain that antiently there were houſes without the Weſt-gate alſo; but Leland in his Itinerary takes no notice of them.

Within the liberties of the city, but without the walls, which extended no farther than the four gates, (of which the upper North-gate was one) on the eaſt ſide is Fullbrook, running from Morin's mill, under the North-gate, through the antient abbey, to which it was given by king W. 1. and after confirmed by charter in ſeveral ſucceeding reigns. Many particulars concerning it are related in abbat Frouceſter's manuſcript.

Without the upper North-gate on the weſt ſide, was the caſtle of Croydon, ſtanding in Hairlane, otherwiſe Herlon, Harelane, and Boundlane, where the counteſs of Stafford had lands; and where was a houſe called Dunning's Place, belonging to the abbey.

The lower North-gate belongs to the mayor's porter. It ſtands on the ſouth bank of the brook Wyver, which begins at the poſtern, and runs beyond Alvingate into the Severn. All the land on each ſide of it, without the gate, has been called Neulond, or Newland, for many ages paſt, and extended nearly to St. Margaret's hoſpital.

At the north end of the lower North-gate-ſtreet ſtood Alvingate, which was frequently repaired by the corporation, and had a particular porter belonging to it. This was probably deſtroyed at the ſiege. Juſt without the gate was Kingeſham or Kingeſhome-ſtreet, which occurs in 1269. A little diſtant from the road, ſtood a chapel dedicated to St. Thomas, and occurs in 1273. It was new built by Philip Monger, in 1454; and tho' long ſince demoliſhed, there is a houſe belonging to Bartholomew's hoſpital, built on the ſite of it, which is now called the Chapel Houſe.

The place called Le Hurſt in antient writings, was very probably a wood, about the time of the conqueſt, as the name ſignifies. It extended from Hairlane before-mentioned, to Bridelane, called alſo Farther Harelane; and reached to the eaſt corner of Wood-garden, and near Hangman's-pits, oppoſite to the wall of the cathedral, next the orchard belonging to the prebendary of the third ſtall.

Watering-ſtreet, or Water-ſtreet, commonly called Katherine-ſtreet, was from St. Oſwald's-ſtreet, which was directly oppoſite to the church of that name.

The White Friery is now intirely demoliſhed. The ground on which it ſtood is ſtill called the Frier's-ground.

Featlane, Feetlane, Feytlane, or Featlone, is now alſo deſtroy'd. It ſtood northward of the above, and the archbiſhop of York had tenements in it: Lady-croft, or Lendy-croft, which occurs in the reigns of H. 3. E. 1. and E. 2. was very near it.

Brook-ſtreet, juſt without the poſtern-gate, extended to Morin's mill, given by John de Thormerton to the abbey 11° E. 2. which enjoy'd it 'till the diſſolution. Afterwards Sir Thomas Bell being poſſeſſed of it, gave it with other things for the maintenance of Kimbro's hoſpital. The greateſt part of the ſouth ſide of this ſtreet is in the pariſh of St. Michael, the north ſide is in that of St. Katherine. It was deſtroyed at the ſiege, but ſome few of the houſes have been ſince rebuilt.

Leland in his Itinerary, ſpeaking of Glouceſter, obſerves, that there were divers pretty ſtreets that now be clean decay'd, as St. Bride's-ſtreet, and Silver-girdle-ſtreet. Several others occur in antient records, that have been long ſince deſtroy'd. Antiently the town extended northwards and ſouthwards, with few buildings on the eaſtern and weſtern ſides. The more noble part of it ſtood where now the Kingſholm houſe is. It had handſome, ſpacious ſtreets of the following names: White-ſtreet gave entrance into the town from the London road, thro' Pedmark's field; King's-ſtreet led from Kingſholm to Glouceſter; Queen-ſtreet, Silver-ſtreet, Long-ſtreet, towards Longford; Milk-ſtreet; Caſtle-ſtreet, which led from the Old-Bear to the caſtle. Beſides theſe, there were ſome others of leſs note. Many of theſe ſtreets were very ſubject to floods from the Severn, which made the inhabitants deſert them by degrees, to build on a higher and more ſecure ſituation.

Without the Eaſt-gate, Barton-ſtreet extended, with houſes joining almoſt all the way on both ſides, to a place called the World's-end; and on the north ſide of it, near the gate, were many houſes along Gawdy-green. Part of it is within the liberties of the city, and part not. All within the liberties is in the pariſh of St. Michael; and what is beyond them, lies in the pariſhes of St. Michael, and St. Mary de Load. In the reign of king E. 1. there was, in the north part of this ſtreet, a place called the King's ditch, and Law-day ditch, intended perhaps to ſeparate the liberties of the town from the county.

There were antiently two diſtinct manors here, King's-barton and Abbat's-barton. The firſt was ſo called, becauſe it was a farm in the king's hands, to ſubſiſt the caſtle of Glouceſter. It was a conſiderable manor, of which Domeſday book gives the following account:

'In Bertune king Edward had nine hides, of 'which ſeven were in demean. And there were 'three plow tillages, and fourteen villeins, and 'ten bordars, with nine plow tillages. There 'were ſeven ſervi. Two free men held two hides 'of this manor, and have there nine plow tillages. 'They cannot ſeparate themſelves nor the land 'from the manor. There is a mill of 4*s*. [value] 'King William's bailiff [prepoſitus] added eight 'bordars, two mills, and one plow tillage. In 'king Edward's reign it paid 9*l*. 5*s*. and 3000 'loaves for the dogs. It now pays 20*l*. 20 cows, '20 hogs, and 16*s*. in lieu of the bread.

'Ældred the archbiſhop claimed Brewere, one 'member of this manor. There are three yard 'lands and three men. Milo Criſpin holds it.

'Optune, another member, Aluui the ſheriff 'claimed. There is one hide of land and four 'men. Hunfridus holds it.

'The ſame Aluui claimed Merwen, a third 'member. There are three yard lands. Nigellus 'the phyſician holds it.

This manor continued in the crown 'till 2 H. 3. when Jeoffry Lucy was ſeized of it. Robert le Savage was ſeized of Barton-court 45° H. 3. Walter Wither held it 54° H. 3. John Muſgroſs was ſeized of this place 3° E. 1. Ralph de Waleſworth held it 8° E. 1. The rent of the caſtle, and the Bertone and Tyne of Glouceſter, which was 110*l*. a year, was ſettled on queen Margaret, in part of her dower, 27° E. 1.

The abbey of Glouceſter was ſeized of the manor of Berton and of ſix plow tillages, in the 17th year of the reign of king Edward the third, who, two years afterwards, by his charter dated June 25, granted to the abbey this manor with its appurtenances, and a pool at Minſterworth, a moiety of the pool at Dunye, with its appurtenances, and the privilege of having twigs out of the foreſt of Dean to repair the pool, in fee for ever. The abbey to pay 48*l*. per ann. into the king's exchequer, for the advowſon of the church of Wyrardeſbury, in the county of Bucks; but to be diſcharged, out of the ſaid 48*l*. of a penſion of 5*l*. a year, which they uſed to pay to that church. This charter was confirmed by king Richard the ſecond.

But Elizabeth, the widow of Thomas duke of Norfolk, and daughter of Richard earl of Arundel, was ſeized of the manor of King's-Barton 3° H. 6.

Robert Maell, and Cicely his wife, were ſeized of a mill, and of one acre and a half of arable land, and two acres of meadow in Barton near Glouceſter.

There was a houſe in the South-gate-ſtreet, which, in a leaſe from the priory of Lanthony, dated March 27, 47° E. 3. is ſaid to be in the liberty of the King's Barton.

Abbat's Barton was ſo called, becauſe it belonged to St. Peter's abbey. Aldred, under-king of the Wicces, gave an hundred hides to this monaſtery, when Eva was abbeſs. In Domeſday book it is ſaid,

'In the time of king Edward, Saint Peter of 'Gloweceſtre held Bertune, in Dudeſtanes hun-'dred, with its adjacent members, Berneuude, 'Tuffelege, Mereuuent. There are twenty-two 'hides, leſs one yard land. In demean nine plow 'tillages, and forty-two villeins, and twenty-one 'bordars, with forty-five plow tillages. There 'are twelve ſervi, and a mill of 5*s*. and 120 acres 'of meadow, and a wood five furlongs long and 'three broad. It was worth 8*l*. and is now 'worth 24*l*. This manor was always exempt 'from geld, and from all royal ſervice".

It has been already ſhewn, under the account of abbat Hameline, that archbiſhop Aldred took this manor, and ſome other eſtates from the monaſtery, to repay himſelf the great expences he had been at in rebuilding the abbey, and that afterwards they were reſtored by his ſucceſſor; from which time this manor continued in the poſſeſſion of the abbey 'till its diſſolution; when it came to the crown. A leaſe of the ſite of it, with ſeveral lands belonging to it, was granted 31° H. 8. for twenty-one years, to John Ap-Rice, at the yearly rent of 14*l*. 4*s*. 4*d*. And the reverſions of all theſe, and many other lands here and elſewhere, were ſold to the city* on the 11th of September, in the 34th year of the ſame reign. But the crown reſumed its claim, for the manor of Barton Abbat's was granted to Anne Forteſcue, widow of Sir Adrian Forteſcue, and to his heirs male, 5° Mariæ. And according to Sir Robert Atkyns, it did again belong to the crown, in the year 1608. But it is now the property of the corporation of the city of Glouceſter.

* Civ.

Lands

Lands in Barton Abbat's, and the firſt feeding of the meadow called Pully-mead, and the tythes of the ſame, lately belonging to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to Arthur Porter 32° H. 8.

A portion of tythes in St. Mary de Load, in Barton, formerly belonging to the abbey of Glouceſter, were granted to the chapter of Glouceſter, 33° H. 8. And other tythes in Barton Abbat's, formerly belonging to the priory of St. Oſwald, were granted to John Fernham 22° Eliz.

The bord-lands, parcel of the manor of Barton-Abbat's, and other lands in the ſame manor, were granted in truſt, to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple 35° H. 8. And Robert Thornhill and Leonard Warcop had a grant of other lands there 38° H. 8.

Here is a fair on the 28th day of September, which uſed to be ſo famous for large quantities of cheeſe, as to ſet the price of that article for the whole year, in all the neighbouring parts; but ſince the factors [b] have made a practice of buying it up at the dairy-houſes, all the cheeſe-fairs and markets in this country are ſunk to nothing; and that neceſſary article of proviſions advanced to more than double the price it bore about twenty or thirty years ſince.

The manors of King's-barton and Abbat's-barton, by a long unity of poſſeſſion, are ſo confuſed with each other, as not to be every where diſtinguiſhed.

King James the firſt, in the 8th year of his reign, granted the hundreds of Dudſton [c] and King's-barton to Sir William Cook, knight, for twenty-one years. The next year, the ſame king granted them for ever to George and Thomas Whitmore, and —— Whitmore, eſq; of Slaughter, ſon of general Whitmore, who died in the year 1771, is the preſent proprietor of them.

The places in the hundreds of Dudſton and King's-barton are ſet down p. 41, of which the following owe ſuit and ſervice to the court-leet of King's-barton. The hamlet of St. Michael, Barton-ſtreet, Upton St. Leonard, Pitchcombe, Hareſcombe, South-gate and Woolſtrop, Saintburſt, Twigworth, Matſon, and Kingſholm.

In the year 1770, when the land-tax was at 3*s.* in the pound, Barton St. Michael paid 27*l.* 9*s.* Barton St. Mary 113*l.* 14*s.*

[b] The modern cheeſe-factor is a dealer on his own ſtock, and at his own riſque; it is therefore an abuſe of the term to call him factor. He buys whole dairies together, which are carried from the farm-houſes to his warehouſe, and not a cheeſe of them appears in the market, except what he rejects on account of ſome imperfection. The dairy-man ſells none of his beſt cheeſe from the dealer, unleſs he be tempted by an extravagant price, or induced by ſome particular circumſtance or connexion. Some factors are either in actual poſſeſſion, or in aſſurance of forty or fifty dairies each; how then can it be difficult to account, even in a time of plenty, for the exorbitant price of cheeſe?

Our forefathers were of opinion that commerce in the great neceſſaries of life ſhould be reſtrained, and provided laws to prevent a monopoly of them; but we have lately experienced the inſufficiency of thoſe laws. If it be neceſſary in large cities and towns, that cheeſe-mongers be provided with a ſufficient ſtock for the inhabitants of ſuch places; yet no perſon I believe, will think it equally neceſſary that the whole produce of the dairy be drawn into the dealers warehouſes, or ſhut up in the cheeſe-lofts, in order at length to paſs through their hands to the conſumers. I inſiſt not that the cheeſe-factor and meal-man are unlawful dealers; but it is an error in the police to ſuffer them to conduct their buſineſs after the preſent method.

[c] It is not abſolutely certain where Dudſton lay; but it was probably without the lower North-gate, beyond the Newland. It was alſo called Dudeſtan, Dodeſtan, &c. perhaps from the Saxon words Dyd dead, and Stan ſtone. It might be the common burying place in the time of the Romans. Bertachia, from Bergenne a grave, is mentioned in antient writings, in the reign of E. 2. and might lie adjacent to Dudſton.

OF THE PARISHES

IN

Glouceſterſhire.

ABBENHALL.

THIS is a ſmall pariſh, full of little hills and dingles, within the hundred of St. Briavel's; twelve ſtatute miles weſt from Glouceſter, and three north from Newnham. It is bounded on the north-weſt by Mitchel Dean, on the ſouth-eaſt by Flaxley, with Blaiſdon to the north-eaſtward, and Little Dean to the weſtward of it.

The abbat of Flaxley had antiently a houſe here, whence the place obtained the name of Abbenhall. It was not particularly ſpecified in Domeſday-book, when the general ſurvey was made; and as late as the ninth year of king Edward the Firſt, the ſheriff, in his account of all the vills in the county of Glouceſter, returned Mitchel Deane, Parva Deane, and Abbenhalle as one vill.

The ſtones in this pariſh are of a ruſty colour, with ſhining particles of iron in their compoſition. The greateſt part of the land is paſturage, with a conſiderable portion of commonable places, over-run with fern and buſhes.

There is a place called Gun's Mills, where was formerly an iron furnace, but the machinery is now converted to the uſe of a paper-mill, which is driven by a fine ſpring of water riſing out of a rock in the foreſt, on the ſide of a hill juſt above the mill. The foreſt is extraparochial, wherefore I ſhall take notice of the ſpring in this place. It is called St. Anthony's Well. At the head, the water runs into a ſquare baſon (with ſteps on one ſide) made for the purpoſe of bathing. I have been told by people of credit and judgment in the neighbourhood, that bathing in this water is an infallible cure for the itch, and other cutaneous diſorders; and a gentleman of Little Dean aſſured me, that his dogs were cured of the mange by being thrown into it two or three times. The water is extremely cold; but whether on that account only it is capable of producing thoſe ſalutary effects, I ſhall not determine.

Maynard Colcheſter, of Weſtbury, eſq; has a good houſe here, called the Wilderneſs, ſituate on the brow of a hill, which gives it a very extenſive proſpect.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The manor of Abbenhall belonged antiently to a family who took their name from this place. John de Abbenhalle was poſſeſſed of it when the ſheriff made his return to the king's writ 9 E. 1. Ralph de Abbenhall died ſeized of it in the 29th year of the ſame reign. John his ſon and heir died ſeized of the manor, and of the advowſon of the church, 10 E. 2. Reginald his ſon and next heir died ſeized of this manor 15 E. 3. Sir Ralph de Abbenhall, ſon of Reginald, died ſeized of it, and of the cuſtody of a wood in the foreſt of Death 21 E. 3. since whose time I find no more of this name here. It is probable that the heiress of this family married into that of the Talbots, for they quarter the arms of Abbenhall, viz. Or, a fess gules, and had at that time great estates in the neighbourhood.

The Grenders were the next possessors of this estate; John Grender was seized thereof 5 H. 4. in which year, and also in the last of that reign, he was high sheriff of this county. Robert his son died seized of this manor 26 H. 6. leaving Elizabeth his only daughter and heiress, married to John Tiptot earl of Worcester, who, after the death of his wife, held this estate by the courtesy of England during his life. He was a firm adherent to the house of York, and on the restoration of king Henry the Sixth, lost his head on Tower-hill, and was buried in the Black Friers, London. He left no issue, wherefore the manor descended to John Grender, alias Greyndour, the next heir to the preceding Robert.

—— Walwyn (son of William Walwyn, who had been high sheriff of Gloucestershire 10 H. 4.) married the daughter and heiress of the last-mentioned John Grender, by whom he had the manor of Abbenhall, which descended to his son William Walwyn.

Thomas Baynham, of Clowerwall, married Alice, daughter and heiress of William Walwyn, with whom he had this estate. Sir Christopher Baynham, their son and heir, died seized of it 32 H. 8. His son, sir George Baynham, died seized thereof 38 H. 8. whose son Christopher had livery of this manor 3 E. 6. His son Thomas had also livery thereof 23 Eliz. and continued seized of it 6 Jac.

Marshall Brydges, of Worcestershire, esq; related to the family of the lord Chandois, was lord of this manor in the year 1711, but John Howell, esq; is the present proprietor.

Of the other estates, the records shew, that Margaret the widow of —— Huntley died seized of lands within this manor, and of a rent issuing out of Little Dean 49 E. 3. Robert Pyrke died seized of lands in Abbenhall 9 Car. and left Richard his son fifteen years old.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the Forest deanery, worth about 70*l.* a year. John Howell, esq; is patron, and Mr. Hoskyns is the present incumbent.

There are thirty acres of glebe, and all the lands are subject to tithe; but there is no parsonage house, and even the place where it stood is forgotten.

The church, dedicated to St. Michael, hath an aile on the south side, which was rebuilt in 1749, and a small tower at the west end, covered with tile.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

On a flat stone of grey marble in the chancel, are memorials for Richard Pyrke, of Mitchel Dean, who died in 1609, and Johan his wife, daughter of John Aylway. And beneath are the effigies of Thomas and Robert their sons; and of Duncombe Pyrke, second son of Nathaniel Pyrke, esq; who died in 1725.

Against the north wall is a monument, with these arms, Party per pale, baron and femme, 1. Argent, a fess sable, charged with three mullets of the field. 2. Gules, a chevron between three estoiles Or. And under, on a table of white marble, this inscription:

When sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of Gloucestershire, there were, according to him, 22 houses, and about 88 inhabitants in this parish, of whom 6 were freeholders; yearly births 3, and burials 3. But examining the register, I find that in ten years, beginning with 1700, the whole number of baptisms was 24, and of burials 34. And that in the like period of time, beginning with the year 1760, the baptisms were 37, and the burials 21. The inhabitants were then about 158, from which the situation appears to be very healthy, and that the people are increasing.

ABSTON and WICK

Is a parish in the hundred of Pucklechurch, five miles west from Marshfield, seven south from Sodbury, seven east from Bristol, and seven north-west from Bath. It is bounded on the north by Puckle-

Pucklechurch, on the eaſt by Dointon and Cold Aſton, on the weſt by Siſton, and on the ſouth-eaſt by part of Somerſetſhire. The houſes lie chiefly under the weſt ſide of that ridge of hills which runs from north-eaſt to ſouth-weſt through the county.

The great poſt and turnpike-road from London to Briſtol leads through Wick, and there is beſide, a turnpike-road from Bath, by the monument on Lanſdown, which communicates with the Briſtol road at this place.

Abſton is probably a contraction of Abbat's-town; for this manor formerly belonged to the abbat of Glaſtonbury. Wick ſignifies a hamlet dependent on a place of better note; for in antient grants and charters of townſhips, after the name, it commonly follows, cum ſuis berwicis, which favours the above conjecture.

The pariſh conſiſts chiefly of good paſture and meadow ground. Three diſtinct ſtreams, i. e. the Filtham, riſing in Pucklechurch; a brook from Dyrham, and another from Tog-hill, empty themſelves into the river Boyd; and in the ſtreet at Wick, the old bridge having lately been taken down, a more commodious one of four arches hath been erected in its room, at the charge of the commiſſioners of the Briſtol turnpikes.

Between this pariſh and that of Dointon, is a deep, narrow glyn, formed by rocks of a ſtupendous height, riſing almoſt perpendicularly from the bottom, where the river Boyd runs. On the Dointon ſide are large fortifications and intrenchments oppoſed by others on the ſide of the glyn, in this pariſh. The ſtone of the rocks I am ſpeaking of, is of a compact texture, of which the inhabitants burn great quantities into excellent white lime. And there is in the neighbourhood, a blue kind of ſtone, which makes a brown lime, that hardens under water, and anſwers the purpoſe of foreign terras.

They dig coal in this pariſh, and burn large quantities of it into coak, for making of malt, and other purpoſes. Here is alſo lead ore, but the proprietors have not hitherto raiſed enough of it to anſwer the working. Belemnites, aſtroites, and ſerpentine ſtones are likewiſe found here, and ſome of the rocks have a ſparry ſubſtance upon them, which ſir Robert Atkyns calls rock-diamonds; but this ſpar is not ſo beautifully brilliant as that commonly called Briſtol ſtones, found in the rocks about Clifton.

This village deſervedly ſtands one of the foremoſt in the neighbourhood on account of its antiquities, as well as its natural productions. Sir Robert Atkyns, in the four laſt lines of his account of it, mentions, "that great quantities of Roman or Britiſh brick have been dug up in an adjacent field, where appear alſo the extended ruins of conſiderable buildings".

Since the publication of ſir Robert Atkyns's Hiſtory, other antiquities have been found in a field called Beach, in the hamlet of Wick, by people at plough, in the year 1743, who turned up with the ſoil a quantity of brick, very hard and ponderous, and much ſuperior in fineneſs to what we now make. Mr. Haynes, the proprietor of the ground, cauſed the ſurface, for a conſiderable ſpace, to be laid open, and preſently found that theſe were parts of a brick pillar. There were three foundations of ſuch pillars ſtanding in a line, each twenty-one inches ſquare. The intervals were thirteen inches. The third pillar ſtood againſt the middle of an abutment, or foundation of rough ſtone-work, meaſuring five feet and a half in front, which being carried on in the ſame direction with the pillars, about twenty-two inches, then ſpread itſelf outwards on each ſide in a concave ſweep.

Between the pillars, in beds of mortar, were parts of ſeveral urns of fine red pottery, but of different ſhapes and dimenſions, ſome pieces of wood burnt to a coal, a crooked ſacrificing knife, about ſix inches long, and the jaw bone of a ſheep or goat. And ſome time afterwards, the capital, or head of a pillar of freeſtone, about two feet ſquare, with the cornice, was turned up by the plough in the ſame field. From theſe remains, and from a great number of Roman coins found there, which are in Mr. Haynes's poſſeſſion, there can be no doubt of this having been a Roman work. For as the Romans had poſſeſſed themſelves of Bath, to which they gave the name of Aqua Solis, where they formed a ſtation; and had alſo made incurſions and conqueſts on the other ſide of the Severn, in the country of the Silures, it was neceſſary to preſerve a free intercourſe between thoſe places. The route by land from Aqua Solis to the paſſage over the Severn, leading to that country, lay in a ſtraight line through this pariſh; and from theſe fields where the ruins were found, is a full view of the country towards the paſſage, or Trajectus of Antoninus. This therefore was a proper ſituation for a garriſon, by which intelligence might be communicated from one ſtation to another.

The late Mr. Richard Haynes, who was lord of the manor, and reſided here, contended very ſtrongly that this was the Abone of Antoninus, which he endeavoured to make out by ſuppoſing miſtakes in the diſtances, and that the ſtations are tranſpoſed in Antoninus's Itinerary. But he was certainly miſtaken, as may be ſeen under Lidney, where the ſubject of the Abone is diſcuſſed more at large.

There is a field in this pariſh called the Cheſtles, or Caſtles, where are three large ſtones about five feet high from the ground, drawn thither from the cliffs below, and placed upright pretty near together, in a triangular form. They are without inſcriptions, but one of them having been taken down, at the foot of it were found ſome old coins, a circumſtance more eſpecially denoting them to be monumental; but to what age or people they are to be attributed, is not eaſy to determine.

determine. It is ſuppoſed, however, that they were placed there after the time of the Romans, as a memorial for ſome chiefs who fell in battle in this part of the country; and their number, and nearneſs to Dyrham, an adjoining village, lead me to conjecture that they ſtand for the three Britiſh princes whom Ceaulin the Saxon ſlew in a bloody battle, as mentioned under that place, in the year 577. But what could induce Mr. Donn to call theſe druidical ſtones, in his accurate map of the environs of the city of Briſtol, is to me unaccountable, ſince neither hiſtory nor tradition favours that notion.

I muſt not omit to mention a memorable battle fought in the time of the civil war, on the 5th of July, 1643. Lord Hopton, prince Maurice, and the earl of Carnarvon drew up the king's forces upon Tog-hill, part of which is in this pariſh, to engage the parliament's forces on Lanſdown, under the command of ſir William Waller. The fight laſted from two in the afternoon 'till one the next morning, when the latter quitted the field, leaving lighted matches on the hedges to ſecure their retreat. But an accident prevented the king's army from improving the victory, for their powder blew up and wounded many officers, among whom was lord Hopton himſelf. Sir Bevil Grenvil was mortally wounded, which occaſioned the titles of earl of Bath and viſcount Lanſdown being conferred on his ſon, by king Charles the Second, after the reſtoration. That earl built the monument on Lanſdown, on which is an inſcription, now much obliterated, but it may be ſeen in lord Clarendon's hiſtory of that war, giving ſome particulars of this battle.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book the manor of Abſton and Wick is not diſtinguiſhed by any particular name, but included in the account of the large pariſh of Pucklechurch, to which it belonged, and which was then held by the abbey of Glaſtonbury, having been given to it by king Edward the Confeſſor. But when king Richard the Firſt was priſoner at Vienna, the emperor Leopold obliged him to annex that abbey to the ſee of Bath and Wells, and to give that biſhoprick to Savaricus the emperor's kinſman. And in the year 1205, the monks of Glaſtonbury quitted their right in the manors of Pucklechurch, Abſton, and Weſterleigh, and in the patronage of ſeveral churches, to that biſhoprick, upon condition that Joceline the biſhop would reſtore to them the election of their own abbat.

The ſucceſſive biſhops of Bath and Wells held Abſton and Wick, without interruption, above two hundred and fifty years; but the records ſhew, that Hugh Dennis levied a fine thereof 11 H. 7. However this manor belonged to the ſame biſhoprick 37 H. 8. when the king purchaſed it, together with the advowſon of the rectory, and Friers wood in Abſton, of William, then biſhop of Bath and Wells; and granted it the ſame year to John Wintour, with all rights of court leet, and court of the manor, which have been kept in uſe to this time from the poſſeſſion of the Wintour family, under the ſtile, as ſpecified in the court rolls, of the court leet and court of the manor of Wick and Abſton.

Maurice Dennis died ſeized of this manor 5 Eliz. and was ſucceeded by Walter Dennis his brother and heir, who was at that time ſixty years old, as appears by the eſcheator's inquiſition.

Sir Edward Wintour was lord of this manor in the year 1608. Sir John Wintour, ſon of ſir Edward, granted it away 8 C. 1. and by divers meſne conveyances it was aſſigned to Mr. Thomas Haynes, in the year 1665.

Richard Haynes, eſq; ſon of Thomas, was lord of this manor when ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his Hiſtory. He was ſucceeded by his ſon Thomas Haynes, whoſe ſon, Richard Haynes, eſq; is the preſent proprietor. The anceſtors of this family, many generations paſt, were ſeized of Southmead in the pariſh of Weſtbury upon Trim, but after purchaſing Wick and Abſton in the laſt century, they have reſided here.

Lands in Nether Wyke and Over Wyke, which belonged to Cript hoſpital near Briſtol, and other lands which belonged to Weſtbury college, were all granted to ſir Ralph Sadler, 35 H. 8.

The hamlets in this pariſh are,

1. Berdwic, now written Wick.

2. Holy Brook, ſo called from a ſpring dedicated to the holy virgin.

3. Churchley, which obtained that name from an antient chapel, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, now intirely ruined. John de Button was ſeized of Churchley 7 E. 2. Robert Grinder was ſeized of it 22 H. 6. when it was reputed a manor; and ſir John Bar was ſeized of it 22 E. 4.

4. Bridge-Yate. 5. Tog-hill.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Hawkeſbury. It is annexed to Pucklechurch. It pays 1s. 6d. for pentecoſtals.

All corn tithes are paid in kind, all others by modus. Sir Robert Atkyns mentions, "that the tithes of hay in Wyke did belong to the priory of Bradenſtoke in Wiltſhire," and that "theſe tithes were granted to the dean and chapter of Briſtol, 34 H. 8." But the grant he refers to, relates to Wick in Berkeley, and not to this pariſh.

The church, which is dedicated to St. James, ſtands in Abſton. It conſiſts of one aile, handſomely pewed, with a neat gallery at the weſt end, where the tower ſtands, adorned with pinnacles.

Clerk and patron the ſame as at Pucklechurch.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

azure, for Haynes. 2. Obliterated. Beneath, this inſcription :

Here lyeth the body of Mrs. Mary Haines, the widdow and relict of Mr. Thomas Haynes of the city of Briſtol, lord of this mannor, who deceaſed the XVIII day of May, A. Dni. MDCCIX, aged LXXX years.

On another flat ſtone is an inſcription for Samuel Woodward, gent. who died July 2, 1648. Under, a ſcutcheon bearing three chevronels, but the colours, &c. are not expreſſed. And beneath the ſcutcheon, a memorial for Mrs. Mary Seede, widow, formerly wife of the ſaid Mr. Woodward. She died Sept. 14, 1695.

In the church-yard, on a head-ſtone,

Here lieth the body of Robert Collins of this pariſh, mathematician, who died the 21ſt of Jan. 1733, in the 62d year of his age.

On a flat ſtone, for Edward Strange, of Deinton, the following lines, which I have inſerted on account of their merit :

Vain king of Terrors, boaſt no more
Thine antient, wide extended pow'r ;
Each ſaint in life, with Chriſt his head,
Shall reign, when thou thyſelf art dead.

Benefactions.

Chriſtopher Cadle, by his will dated 1662, deviſed money to purchaſe lands, and erect a houſe for four poor people ; and a ground and houſe at Holy-Brook were provided and ſettled according to the will.

William Hart, clerk, has given 20*s.* yearly for two ſermons.

John Hathway hath given a rent-charge of 10*s.* yearly, to the uſe of poor houſekeepers.

Beloved Wilks, who died in the year 1727, left a part of his houſe in Wick, for the habitation of two clergymen's widows, to be choſen by the miniſters of Pucklechurch, Deinton, and Dyrham, with 10*l.* a year, and half a load of coal to each. With the overplus of his eſtate, a lad, to be choſen out of the above mentioned pariſhes, is to be maintained at the univerſity 'till he takes the degree of batchelor of arts. He has given 15*s.* a year to be ſpent at the annual meeting of the truſtees and widows.

Mr. Thomas Stephens, ſometime alderman of Briſtol, hath endowed two hoſpitals in Briſtol, with lands in this pariſh. And other lands have been purchaſed with Mr. Langton's money for the uſe of the poor of Dyrham and Deinton. See Dyrham.

In a ſeries of ten years from 1700 to 1709, both incluſive, there are regiſtered 76 baptiſms and 56 burials. In a like ſeries from 1760 to 1769, there are alſo regiſtered 92 baptiſms and 86 burials. About the year 1710, when ſir Robert Atkyns was compiling his hiſtory, it is ſaid this pariſh contained 50 families, and about 230 inhabitants, whereof 8 were freeholders. There are now (1772) about 400 inhabitants ; ſo that the people have conſiderably increaſed here ſince the beginning of this century.

ACTON, or IRON-ACTON,

LIES in the vale, the greater part of it in the hundred of Thornbury ; but the hamlet in this pariſh diſtinguiſhed by the additional name of Ilger, is in the hundred of Grumbald's-aſh. The church ſtands three miles W. from Chipping-Sodbury, ſeven ſouthward from Thornbury, nine north-eaſtward from Briſtol, and about twenty-nine ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter.

The foreſt of Kingſwood extended over a large tract of land in this country, and the place of which I am writing is ſaid to have been much over-run with the oak-tree, whence it is ſuppoſed to derive its name ; for Acton, from the Saxon word Ac, is the ſame in ſignification with Oak-town. The great quantities of iron-cinders, lying about in ſeveral places, ſhew that here were formerly iron-works, which probably ceaſed for want of wood to carry them on, for here is ſtill great plenty of ore ; hence it has ſometimes been called Iron-Acton, to diſtinguiſh it from Acton-Turville, in the hundred of Grumbald's-aſh. There is alſo a coal-pit now in work. The pariſh conſiſts almoſt equally of paſturage and of arable ground. It lies on the verge of that country which is one vaſt continued bed of coal ; but I cannot learn that it is remarkable for any other natural productions beſide the foſſils already mentioned. The river Froome, riſing at Dodington, receives the brook Laden at this place, and runs to Briſtol, where it forms the key of that port.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Before the Norman conqueſt this pariſh conſiſted of two manors. Sir Robert Atkyns erroneouſly prefixed an abſtract of the Domeſday account of Cold Aſton to this place, which he has adapted to it by writing the name Actune, inſtead of Eſcetone, as I read it in my copy of that record. And other writers, following him, have been equally miſtaken in ſaying that the church of St. Peter at Bath held this manor in the reigns of the confeſſor and conqueror. Sir Robert Atkyns has indeed, added a paraphraſtic account of ſome of the particulars of the manor of Actune from Domeſday-book ; but the following is a literal tranſlation, referring, by the figures at the end, to the page of this book where the Domeſday account is printed, in the language, and as nearly as could be done with common printing types, after the manner of the original.

'Hunfridus the chamberlain holds Actune in 'Bacheſtanes hundred. Heroldus a [free] man 'of Aluui of Hereford held it, who could go 'where he would. There are two hides and a 'half. In demean is one plow-tillage, and three 'villeins, and three bordars, with half a plow-'tillage. There are two ſervi, and a mill and a 'half of ſixty-four pence, and five acres of 'meadow. It is worth, and was worth 40 'ſhillings. Domeſday-book, p. 79.

Leland ſays, 'the erles of Heriford were once lords of Acton lordſhippe.' John de Acton was probably deſcended from them, and took his ſurname from this place of his reſidence, according to the cuſtom of early times. He was ſeized of the manor of Actune at the beginning of the reign of H. 3. and it appears by a record 15° E. 1. that he and his anceſtors had enjoyed it time immemorial. His grandſon John de Acton was ſeized of Iron-Acton, with court-leet, gallows and tumbrel 15° E. 1. which privileges were allowed him in a writ of Quo warranto brought againſt him that year. The ſtatute of Quo warranto, in this, and ſome of the ſubſequent reigns, proved an excellent inſtrument by which to extort money from the ſubject; for the king being chief lord of many manors and poſſeſſions, of which the deeds, charters, and other evidences were frequently loſt or deſtroyed in thoſe days, by civil wars, length of time, or other caſualties; it became a common practice, under colour of promoting the good purpoſes of that law, to put men upon the moſt rigorous proof of their right to their eſtates, in which if they failed by any accident, their lands were reſumed by the crown, or very heavy fines exacted from the owners for permiſſion to enjoy them. This accounts for the many writs of Quo warranto occaſionally mentioned in the ſubſequent parts of this work.

John de Acton, ſon of the laſt mentioned John, was high-ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire 4° E. 2. and dying ſeized of this manor in the eighth year of that reign, was ſucceeded by George de Acton; who forfeited his eſtate in the rebellion againſt king Edward the Second to expel the Spencers. Hugh le Deſpencer obtained a grant, and levied a fine of this manor 18° E. 2. but John de Acton, (ſon of George) was reſtored to all his father's lands 1° E. 3. being then under age.

Richard de Bellers held Iron-Acton 3° E. 3. probably in right of guardianſhip, for he was then alſo ſeized of the manor of Elkſtone, which belonged to the Actons. The laſt mentioned John de Acton was knighted, and dying ſeized of thoſe manors without iſſue, 17° E. 3. his couſin and heireſs Maud, by marrying with ſir Nicholas Poyntz, brought them into that name and family; for ſir John Poyntz, ſon of ſir Nicholas and Maud his wife, ſucceeded to thoſe eſtates as heir to his mother.

This family of Poyntz, or Ponz, deſcended from Drogo, ſon of de Ponz, an antient family of Normandy. Three brothers, Walter, Drogo or Drew, and Richard, aſſiſted the conqueror in his invaſion of England. Walter, grandſon of Drogo, reſided at Clifford caſtle in Hereſordſhire, and thence took the name of Clifford; but the younger branch of Glouceſterſhire ſtill retained the name of Poyntz.

Robert Poyntz held the manor of Iron-Acton of Hugh earl of Stafford, as of his manor of Thornbury, by one knight's-fee 10° R. 2. He married Catherine daughter and coheir of Thomas Fitz Nicholas, a branch of the Berkeley family.

Nicholas Poyntz, ſon of Robert, married, firſt, Elizabeth daughter of Henry Haſſey of Suſſex; and ſecondly Elizabeth daughter of ſir Edward Mills of Harſcombe, and dying 29° H. 6. was ſucceeded by

John Poyntz, his ſon by the ſecond wife, who married Alice daughter of — Cox of Skynvraith, in Monmouthſhire; and dying 5° E. 4. was alſo ſucceeded by his ſon

Sir Robert Poyntz, who married Margaret the natural daughter of Anthony Woodvil, earl of Rivers, and died in the year 1519.

Sir Anthony Poyntz, his ſon, married Elizabeth daughter and coheireſs of ſir William Hudfield of Devonſhire.

Sir Nicholas Poyntz, ſon of ſir Anthony, married Joan daughter of Thomas lord Berkeley, and dying ſeized of Iron-Acton 4° Mar. was ſucceeded by his ſon

Sir Nicholas Poyntz, who had to his firſt wife Anne daughter of ſir Ralph Verney, of Penley in Hertfordſhire; but ſhe dying, he married, ſecondly, Margaret daughter of Henry earl of Derby.

Sir John Poyntz (ſon of the laſt ſir Nicholas by his firſt wife) ſucceeded his father, and married Urſula daughter of John Sidenham, of Brampton in Somerſetſhire. He was ſeized of this manor in the year 1608. His ſon

Sir Robert Poyntz was made one of the knights of the Bath, at the coronation of king Charles the Firſt. He wrote a treatiſe in vindication of monarchy, and dying in the year 1665, was buried with his anceſtors in Acton church. He had two wives, but no male iſſue by the firſt. His ſecond wife was Cicely daughter of Mr. Smith, by whom he had his ſon and ſucceſſor,

Sir John Poyntz, who married Anne daughter of Mr. Cæſar of Hampſhire. He died in the year 1680, and left Acton to his widow, of whom it was purchaſed by William Player, eſq; after it had continued in the family near ſix hundred years; for it paſſed by deſcent from the Actons to the Poyntzs, who were very eminent in Glouceſterſhire, where they have many times ſerved the office of high ſheriff, as may be ſeen by the liſt in the former part of this book. The arms of Poyntz are, Barry of eight, Or and gules.

Sir Samuel Aſtry bought the manor of Iron-Acton of Mr. Player, and left the inheritance of it by will to his widow, who was afterwards married to Simon Harcourt, eſq. It came afterwards to ſir Philip Parker, from whom it deſcended to Walter Long, of South Wraxall, in the county of Wilts, eſq; who is the preſent lord of the manor.

Mr. King is poſſeſſed of Acton-lodge, a conſiderable eſtate of the Poyntz's in this pariſh; and the late Mr. Liſton, his uncle, uſed to hold a court-baron, as I am informed, but it was diſcontinued before his death.

Other

Other lands in Iron-Acton belonged to various perſons, of which the following account is drawn from the records. Thomas Brook and Joan his wife levied a fine of lands in Iron-Acton to Ralph Purceval and Edmund Pine 15° R. 2. He died 5° H. 5. ſeized of other lands here; and Joan his widow died 15° H. 6. ſeized alſo of three yard-lands, twelve acres of meadow, and ten acres of paſture in Iron-Acton.

Thomas Cheddre was ſeized of divers meſſuages in Iron-Acton 21° H. 6. And Joan his daughter, widow of John Talbot viſcount Liſle, died ſeized of thoſe lands 7° E. 4. and ſir Humphry Talbot levied a fine of them 15° E. 4.

William earl marſhal and of Nottingham levied a fine of lands in Iron-Acton and Acton-Ilger to Edward Willoughby and Robert Legg 3° H. 7.

A meſſuage in Iron-Acton belonged to the Magdalen hoſpital in Briſtol, and was granted to Edward Brain and John Marſh 37° H. 8.

HAMLETS. There are two hamlets in this pariſh.

1. Acton-Ilger, which lies in the hundred of Grumbald's-aſh, and has a diſtinct tything-man. The cognomen was taken from Ilger or Algar, who held this as a manor in the reign of William the conqueror, as I find it in the record, of which the following is a tranſlation:

'The biſhop of St. Laud [in Conſtance] holds 'Actune in Bacheſtanes hundred, and Ilgerus '[holds it] of him. There are two hides and a 'half. In demean is one plow-tillage; and four 'villeins and five bordars, and one ſervus, and two 'ancillæ with one plow-tillage and a half. There 'is[the] half [ſhare of] a mill of ſixteen pence, and 'ten acres of meadow, and one furlong of wood. 'It is worth and was worth 40*s*. Ebbi, a [free] 'man of Brictric the ſon of Algar, held this 'manor. Domeſday-book, p. 70.

This tything lies very much intermixed with Iron-Acton. Cloſe to the church-yard weſtward lies the parſonage, in Iron-Acton; and cloſe to it alſo eaſtward ſtands an antient houſe called the old inn, which is in Acton-Ilger. It is obſervable that Iron-Acton and Acton-Ilger both lay in Bacheſtanes hundred, as recorded in Domeſday-book. But Thornbury hundred being erected ſince that time, was taken out of the old hundreds of Bacheſtanes and Edereſtan, more eſpecially where the lords of Thornbury had property.

Oſbert Giffard and Alice Mordack were ſeized of this manor 31° H. 3.

Maurice, ſon of Thomas de Berkeley held Acton-Ilger 42° E. 3. and ſir Thomas de Berkeley and Margaret his wife were ſeized of this manor 5° H. 5. Richard de Beauchamp earl of Warwick married Elizabeth the only daughter and heireſs of that ſir Thomas de Berkeley, lord Berkeley, and in her right died ſeized of this manor 17° H. 6. Thomas Cheddre was ſeized of it 21°. H. 6. Joan one of his daughters, and widow of John Talbot viſcount Liſle, died ſeized hereof 7° E. 4. And Margaret counteſs of Shrewſbury was ſeized of Acton-Ilger the ſame year.

2. Lateridge or Ladenridge, ſo called on account of its lying on a high ridge of land on the north-weſt of the brook Laden, over which, a few years ſince, a bridge was built at the expence of the county.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkeſbury, worth about 200*l*. a year. The patronage is in the dean and chapter of Chriſt-church, Oxford. Joſeph Jane, B. D. is the preſent incumbent. Forty acres belong to the glebe. The church is dedicated to St. James. It hath a ſouth-aile, and a tower at the weſt end, remarkably large and maſſy. It ſeems not to have been raiſed nearly to the height intended, as may be concluded from the ſmallneſs of the pinnacles, the ſudden contraction of the upper ſtory, and the diſproportion of the height to the bulk. On the ſouth ſide of the chancel is a vault belonging to the manor-houſe, where ſome of the family of Poyntz are buried.

Mr. Humphry Brown of Briſtol, merchant, has given 10*s*. yearly to the miniſter, for a ſermon on the feſtival of St. John Baptiſt; and 40*s*. yearly to the poor, payable by the mayor of Briſtol. According to ſir Robert Atkyns, when he compiled his account of this pariſh, there were 60 houſes and about 240 inhabitants, whereof 24 were freeholders; the yearly births were 10, and the burials 8. But upon examining the pariſh-regiſter, I find that in a ſeries of ten years from 1700

1700 to 1709 both incluſive, there were regiſtered 112 baptiſms and 80 burials; and in a like ſeries from 1760 to 1769 incluſive, there were entered 205 baptiſms, and 115 burials: And upon a calculation that one in forty dies annually, the whole number of people will be found to be 460; ſo that the inhabitants are increaſing very faſt in this pariſh.

ACTON-TURVILLE.

THIS is a ſmall village in the hill country, within the hundred of Grumbald's-aſh. It is bounded on the ſouth-eaſtward by Wiltſhire, and lies about five miles E. from Chipping-Sodbury, five N. from Marſhfield, and about twenty-eight S. from Glouceſter. The lands are chiefly arable, with ſome paſture. Conſiſtent with the etymology of the preceding pariſh, it may be ſuppoſed that the oak-tree grew ſo plentifully here as to give the place the name of Acton; but it received the additional name of Turville from the family of the Turbervilles, who were the antient lords of the manor.

In the middle of the place ſtands a ſmall ſtone building, remarkable not only for its antiquity, but for its having been a ſanctuary, as it is ſaid, dedicated to the virgin Mary, ſuppoſed to have been built by one of our Saxon kings. Churches were ſanctuaries very antiently in England. The fifth law of king Ina enacted, that If any one be guilty of a capital crime, and flee to the church, let him have his life; but let him make ſatisfaction, as right directs. If any one forfeit his hyde, and flee to the church, let his laſhes be forgiven him. The clergy of the church to which the criminal fled were bound to provide victuals for him while in ſanctuary. He had liberty of going thirty paces from the church, and forty if it were a cathedral. All but clerks, here in England, who took the privilege of ſanctuary for greater crimes, were bound to ſwear that they would leave the kingdom, and not return without royal licence. After taking this oath, they were to go by the direct road to the next port, and embark by the firſt opportunity, and while they were in that road they were deemed to be in ſanctuary. But the reader may ſee more of theſe matters in the 13th page of this book.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Among the particulars belonging to Ernulfus de Heſding, in the hundred of Grimboldeſtou in Glouceſterſhire, Achetone is one ſet down in the record, which may be thus tranſlated:

'The ſame Hernulfus holds Achetone. There 'are five hides taxed. Edricus held it. In de-'mean are three plow-tillages; and four villeins, 'and three bordars, with four plow-tillages. 'There are fifteen acres of meadow. It is worth, 'and was worth 100*s*. Domeſday-book, p. 77.

Richard Turberville was ſeized of this manor 12° and 15° E. 1. and it had then obtained the name of Turberville, ſo that it muſt have been in that family ſoon after the conqueſt.

Richard earl of Arundel held Acton-Turberville 30° E. 1. John de la Rivere was ſeized thereof 8° E. 2. And it was held by knight-ſervice of Edward earl of Kent 4° E. 3. Sir John Drayton died ſeiſed of this manor 5° H. 5. and William St. Loe had livery thereof granted to him 2° Eliz.

The earl of Shrewſbury was lord of the manor in the year 1608. It came afterwards to Henry Cavendiſh, duke of Newcaſtle, who granted it to ſir John Top, from whom it deſcended to ſir John Top, late of Tormarton. He had two daughters, one of them married to —— Hungerford, eſq; whoſe ſon John Hungerford, of Dingley-hall in Northamptonſhire, eſq; is the preſent lord of the manor.

Richard Verney had livery of divers lands in this pariſh, 2° Eilz.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage in the deanery of Hawkeſbury. It was united to Tormarton in the year 1344, and the rector of Tormarton had the preſentation, but it is now in the crown, by lapſe. The glebe lands are worth about 15*l*. a year, and the vicar has the ſmall tithes. Mrs. Adey of Old Sodbury is the impropriator. Philip Bliſs, M. A. incumbent.

The church is ſmall, with a low tower in the middle.

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, when he compiled his account of this pariſh, there were 20 houſes and about 80 inhabitants, and the yearly births were 2, and burials 2. About the year 1747 there were 85 inhabitants; and in a ſeries of ten years from 1760 to 1769 incluſive, the regiſtered baptiſms are 43, burials 20; ſo that population increaſes, and the number of ſouls is about 90.

ADLESTROP, or ÆDELSTHORP,

IS a village in the hundred of Slaughter, pleaſantly ſituated on the gentle ſlope of a hill, with a ſouth aſpect; three miles north-eaſtward from Stow, ten S. E. from Campden, and twenty-eight N. E. from Glouceſter. It is bounded on the eaſt by Oxfordſhire, with the pariſh of Evenlode in Worceſterſhire, to the northward; and the river of the ſame name divides it from Broadwell on the weſt, and Oddington on the ſouth. It was antiently written Eadleſthorp, Tadleſtrop, Tedeſtrop, and in ſome old writings Caſtlethorp; and it is ſaid that in the charter of Egwine, biſhop of Worceſter, who founded the abbey of Eveſham in the year 700, to which this manor belonged, the name is written Tiddleſtrop. The diverſity of writing the name occaſions ſome doubt as to the etymology of it; but it is the common received opinion, that as in the Anglo-Saxon language Æbel ſignifies a nobleman, and ðopp a village or habitation, it was ſo called becauſe it had been the place of reſidence of ſome noble Saxon; and that the others are corrupt modes of writing the ſame name. But as to Caſtlethorp, it was probably ſo called from a round fortification, ſuppoſed to be Daniſh, called Caſtlebarrow, upon Caſtleton-hill, near the boundaries of this pariſh.

of

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

As the church of Eveſham was originally endowed with this manor, ſo at the time of the general ſurvey, in the reign of William the Firſt, it belonged to that abbey, as appears by the record, where, under Salemones hundred, it is thus ſaid:

'The ſame church [St. Mary of Eveſham] holds 'Tedeſtrop. There are ſeven hides. In demean 'are two plow-tillages; and ten villeins, and two 'bordars, with three plow-tillages. There are 'four ſervi, and one knight with two plow-til-'lages. There is a little meadow. It was worth '4*l.* now 100*s.* Domeſday-book, p. 72.

The church of Eveſham continued in poſſeſſion of this manor 'till the time of the diſſolution of monaſteries. That abbey was dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and valued at 1268*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*

After the diſſolution, the manor and the tithes were granted to ſir Thomas Leigh, 7° E. 6.

The anceſtors of this family aſſumed their name from the town of High-leigh in Cheſhire, where they were ſeated before the Norman invaſion. Collins deduces their pedigree, with many particulars, which, for want of room, are not admiſſible in this place, from Hamon, lord of the mediety of High-leigh, whoſe ſon William was father of Richard, who had for his ſon another Richard, who had a daughter Agnes.

This Agnes, by her ſecond huſband, William Venables of Bradwell, had iſſue John, who took the name of Leigh after his mother, but bore his father's arms, and died in 1322; leaving, by Ellen his wife, three ſons, John, Robert, and Peter; and according to ſome accounts, he had another ſon William by a ſecond wife.

Robert, the ſecond ſon, was of Adlington in Cheſhire, whoſe eldeſt ſon was ſir Robert Leigh, and his ſecond ſon ſir Peter Leigh, of Maxfield, who by his wife Margaret, daughter and heir of ſir Thomas Dangers, had a ſon ſir Peter Leigh, who was made a knight banneret, and was ſlain at the battle of Agincourt, 1415.

This ſir Peter Leigh, knight banneret, married Cecilie daughter of John del Hagh, and had by her a ſon John, and two daughters. John was eſcheator of Cheſhire in the reign of H. 6. and marrying Alice daughter and heir of Thomas Alcock, had three ſons, Roger, Richard, and John.

Richard the ſecond ſon left iſſue Roger, who had two ſons; William the eldeſt was ſeated at Wollington in Shropſhire, and at Ruſhall in Staffordſhire, but Thomas the younger brother of William was bred up under ſir Rowland Hill, a rich merchant and lord mayor of London, who having no child, gave him in marriage his favourite niece Alice Barker, on whoſe iſſue he entailed the greateſt part of his eſtate.

This Thomas Leigh was one of the ſheriffs of London in the year 1555, and lord mayor of that city at the death of queen Mary, and during his mayoralty was knighted. He had by his lady three ſons, Rowland, Thomas, and William; and four daughters. Thomas the ſecond ſon is the anceſtor of the preſent Edward Leigh, lord Leigh of Stoneley. William was father of lord Dunſmore, afterward raiſed by king C. 1. to the higher dignity of earl of Chicheſter, which title, for want of a male heir, became extinct at his death in the year 1653.

Rowland the eldeſt ſon was largely provided for at Longborough in this county, and other places, by ſir Rowland Hill his god-father. He married a daughter of ſir Richard Berkeley of Stoke-Gifford, by whom he had iſſue ſir William Leigh, who died in the year 1631, and was ſucceeded by his ſon William Leigh, eſq; of Adleſtrop, who dying in the year 1690, was ſucceeded by his ſon Theophilus Leigh, eſq; who married a daughter of —— Craven. His ſecond wife was Mary daughter of James lord Chandois, by whom he had William Leigh, eſq; who was ſucceeded in this eſtate by his eldeſt ſon James Leigh, eſq; the preſent lord of the manor of Adleſtrop. He married Caroline the only daughter of his grace the late duke of Chandois. He hath greatly repaired and enlarged the old family ſeat, in the Gothick taſte, and reſides here. His arms are, Gules, a croſs engrailed argent, a lozenge in the dexter chief of the ſecond.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, annexed to Broadwell, in the deanery of Stow. They are worth together about 350*l.* a year. Dr. Johnſon, who was rector of this church, built a parſonage-houſe in the year 1670, on which he expended 1500*l.* James Leigh, eſq; is patron; his brother, Mr. Thomas Leigh, incumbent.

The advowſon of the chapel of Adleſtrop was formerly in the abbat of Eveſham, who by an antient reſervation in the year 1450, received 6*l.* yearly of the rector, which is now paid to the patron. After the diſſolution of religious houſes, the advowſon of the chapel of Adleſtrop was granted to Richard Andrews, 37 H. 8. Two yard-lands belong to the glebe. The demeans pay no tithe of hay.

The church hath been twice rebuilt in the ſpace of a few years, owing to the unſkilfulneſs of the workmen employed in the firſt rebuilding. The inhabitants formerly buried at Broadwell, but in the year 1590, the anceſtors of Mr. Leigh gave land for a church-yard, and procured it to be conſecrated. In the chancel are memorials for ſeveral perſons of Mr. Leigh's family.

Benefactions.

Mr. Thomas Barker, who formerly reſided here, gave 20*l.* a year to the uſe of the poor.

Lady Turner, ſiſter of the preſent lord of the manor, by her will in the year 1770, amongſt other legacies of the ſame kind, gave 50*l.* to the poor of this place.

When ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his hiſtory, there were 34 houſes, and about 200 inhabitants, which is nearly the preſent ſtate of this pariſh.

ALDERLEY,

IS a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Grumbald's-aſh, ſeated on a riſing ground, yet ſheltered every way by the hills that ſurround it, except on the weſt and ſouth-weſt ſides; whence it commands a fine proſpect of the village of Kingſwood, and other parts of the vale. It lies three miles ſouth from Wotton-under-edge, eleven weſtward from Tetbury, and about twenty-two ſouthward from Glouceſter. It was antiently the utmoſt bounds of the foreſt of Kingſwood.

To inveſtigate the ſignification of the name is no leſs difficult than to fix, with certainty, the moſt antient and original manner of writing it. For ſome centuries back it hath been written Alderſley, and Alderleigh, differing very little from the modern orthography; all which ſeem to be compoſed of the Anglo-ſaxon words Ealdop or Aldop, older, and Ley, a paſture ground. But I offer this as a mere conjecture, as it may be objected, that more antiently, in Domeſday-book, the name is written Alrelie, which doth not favour this etymology.

Upon the hill, eaſtward and ſouth-eaſtward of the village, are found petrifications of ſeveral marine ſubſtances, as the oiſter and cockle, in great abundance; but this pariſh produces nothing remarkable, or rare, in the vegetable world.

It hath been matter of doubt with ſome perſons, how ſo many ſhell-fiſh, and other productions of the great deep, ſhould be intermixt with the materials of our higheſt hills, at ſuch a diſtance from the ſea; but it is now generally allowed to have been the effect of the univerſal deluge, and to furniſh the ſtrongeſt arguments for that great event that can be drawn from nature. This ſubject hath been largely handled by Dr. Woodward, Mr. Catcott, and other eminent perſons, to whoſe writings the curious are referred.

This pariſh is hilly, and the lands are pretty equally divided into paſture and arable. The ſoil is good, in ſome parts naturally, in others 'tis made ſo by cultivation, and the air is healthy. Two ſmall brooks bound the pariſh on the north and ſouth, and joining, are called in antient evidences the Avon, and run from this place to Berkeley.

The clothing buſineſs hath been ſettled here ſome hundreds of years ſince. Leland, in his Itinerary, calls Alderſley a clothing village; but that buſineſs hath lately been declining in the whole neighbourhood. The ſame author, among the memorable things taken notice of by him, informs us, that in the year 1225, a man of Adderlay, which I take to be intended for this place, feigned himſelf to be Chriſt, and for his moſt infamous preſumption was carried to Oxford, and there crucified.

But Alderley is moſt remarkable for being the birth place of that great and ſolid lawyer, ſir Matthew Hale, lord chief juſtice of the king's bench. He was (ſaith a learned author, who hath nearly thus drawn his character) a perſon eminent for his piety, learning, and juſtice. His piety was manifeſt by his excellent Private Contemplations, publiſhed at the importunity of others, and by his conſtant attendance on public divine ſervice on ſundays, from which he was not once abſent in thirty-ſix years. His learning is evident by his laborious works, ſome of which are depoſited in Lincoln's-inn library. His juſtice and integrity could never be warped by private intereſt, nor attachments, which often prove too powerful for human nature to withſtand. He lived in the time of the greateſt civil commotion this country ever knew, when envy and inveteracy ſullied the moſt reſpectable characters; yet he carried himſelf ſo uprightly as to be equally admired and eſteemed by all ranks and conditions of men. If Glouceſterſhire hath not produced ſo many eminent perſons as ſome other counties, yet this great man may well go for many, Quantum inſtar in ipſo eſt!

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Milo Criſpin held ſeveral eſtates in Glouceſterſhire at the time of the general ſurvey, for in Domeſday-book it is thus recorded:

'The ſame Milo [Criſpin] holds Alrelie 'in Grimboldeſtou hundred. Wigot held it. 'There is one hide. In demean are two plow-'tillages; and ſeven villeins, and five bordars, 'with ſeven plow-tillages. There are four ſervi, 'and a mill of 10*s.* [value,] and twelve acres 'of meadow. It is worth and was worth '100*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 78.

Leland

Leland ſpeaking of this manor, ſays, 'the Chanſeys were ſumtyme lords of it, as in Edward the Third's days.' Itin. vol. 7. p. 90.

Robert Stanſhaw, eſq; was ſeized of the manor of Alderleigh 12 E. 4. Joan the widow of Robert Stanſhaw being married to John Bodiſaunt, they both joined in a fine of the manor and advowſon of Alderleigh, to Richard Becket and others 14 H. 7.

John Poyntz, ſon of ſir Robert Poyntz, and younger brother of ſir Anthony Poyntz of Acton, became lord of the manor of Alderley. He married Catherine, daughter of ſir Matthew Browne of Surrey, and dying 36 H. 8. was ſucceeded by his ſon Matthew Poyntz, who married Winnifred, one of the daughters and coheirs of Henry Wild, of Camberwell. Robert Poyntz, his younger brother, was a learned author, and a great zealot for the Roman catholic religion.

Nicholas Poyntz, ſon of Matthew, was lord of this manor in the year 1608. He married Anne, daughter of ſir Maurice Berkeley, of Bruton in Somerſetſhire. From him it deſcended to his ſon

Robert Poyntz, who ſold it to one Mr. Rogers.

Mr. Barker, of Fairford, purchaſed this manor of Mr. Rogers, and conveyed it to ſir Matthew Hale, in exchange for Meiſey-Hampton.

Matthew Hale, eſq; deſcended from ſir Matthew Hale, lord chief juſtice of the king's bench, is the preſent proprietor of this manor, and hath a handſome ſeat near the church. His arms are, Argent, a feſs ſable, in chief three mullets of the ſecond. This family is of antient ſtanding in the county, and hath always been eſteemed for their probity and charity.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkeſbury, worth 70*l.* a year. Mr. Hale is patron, Mr. Draper the incumbent.

The church is ſmall but neat, and hath a tower at the weſt end, with pinnacles, and an aile on the north ſide, and a ſmall aile on the north ſide of the chancel, belonging to Mr. Hale.

On the left of a window, in the ſouth wall of the church, is a ſmall effigy, with a crown on its head; and the figure of a biſhop, with his mitre, ſtands on the other ſide of the window, in the ſame wall. Theſe are ſuppoſed to repreſent the antient founders of the church; but tradition doth not ſay who they were.

ALDERTON and DIXTON.

ALDERTON is a pariſh in the upper part of the hundred of Tewkeſbury, and Dixton is a hamlet within it. Alderton lies ſeven miles eaſt of Tewkeſbury, four miles north-weſt from Winchcombe, and about fifteen north-eaſtward from Glouceſter. It ſeems to have been ſo called from the Saxon word Ealdop, older, and the common termination ton, becauſe, in reſpect to Dixton, it is the more antient place. It is a ſmall village in the vale part of the county, conſiſting chiefly of rich tillage land, with ſome paſture, and affords nothing remarkable, except only, that on the top of Dixton hill, which ſtands ſingly in the vale, are intrenchments thrown up, not unlikely in the time of the Saxon wars.

It is mentioned by ſir Robert Atkyns, that 'near 'the weſt end of a wood belonging to Mr. Hig-'ford, a great quantity of wood and trees, from 'the top of a hill, parted and ſlipt away out of 'this county into Worceſterſhire.' But upon inquiry, I find that ſir Robert had been miſinformed in reſpect of the trees reſting in that county.

This pariſh is reputed to be within the juriſdiction of the honour of Glouceſter. A brook runs through it into the Carant below Beckford, and the turnpike-road from Tewkeſbury to London leads through the pariſh.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book, under the head Terra Regis, it is thus recorded:

'Dunning held ſix hides and a half in Aldri-'tone, and four hides and a half in Dridedone, 'and a thane held one hide in Hundeuuic. Hun-'fridus held theſe lands of the king, and he had 'there four plow-tillages in demean; and five 'villeins and eight bordars with three plow-til-'lages, and one radcheniſter with one plow-'tillage, and one burgeſs in Wi'combe, and 'there were twelve acres of meadow. The whole 'was worth 11*l.* in the time of king Edward, 'and is now worth 6*l.* Domeſday-book, p. 68.

Brictric the ſon of Algar was a great thane, and held the manor of Tedekeſberie, in the reign of king Edward the confeſſor, and was the chief lord of this eſtate at Aldritone, and many others thereabout.

But the abbey of Winchcombe had an eſtate in this pariſh ſoon after the conqueſt, for among the poſſeſſions of that abbey in Greteſtanes hundred, it is thus recorded:

'The

'The ſame church [St. Mary de Wincelcumbe] 'holds Aldritone, and a certain knight [holds it] 'of the abbat. There are two hides and a half, 'and two plow-tillages in demean; and one 'villein with one plow-tillage, and there may 'be three beſides. There are four ſervi. It was 'worth and is worth 30*s*. Domeſday-book, p. 71.

Thus the record ſhews that this place was then in ſo rude a ſtate, that lands ſufficient for three plow-tillages were uncultivated; and immediately after, under Niwetone in the pariſh of Aſhchurch, it is ſaid, that ſix other plow-tillages might be made there; ſo that the country muſt have been very thinly inhabited, to ſuffer ſo fine a part of it to remain neglected.

This manor antiently belonged to the Dickleſtons, who took their name from Dicleſton, or Dickleſton, or Dixton, the place of their reſidence. William Dickleſton held the manors of Dickleſton and Aldrington in the reign of E. 3. John Dickleſton held the ſame 12 H. 4. Margaret the widow of John Dickleſton, and Thomas their ſon, were ſeized of the manor of Dickleſton, and of the advowſon of the church of Aldrington 6 H. 5. Sir John Dickleſton, brother to Thomas, ſucceeded him, and died ſeized thereof 1 H. 6 leaving only female iſſue. John Hugford, eſq; married Elizabeth one of his daughters, and had with her the manor of Dickleſton.

The manor of Aldrington came afterwards into the family of the Tracies. Sir William Tracy, of Todington, was ſeized thereof in the reign of H. 7. William Tracy his ſon died ſeized of Aldrington 20 H. 8. But this eſtate did not remain long with the Tracies, for John Hugford had livery of the manors of Dickſton and Alurinton 3 E. 6. and they have continued in the ſame name ever ſince, ſo that the reverend Mr. Henry Higford is the preſent lord thereof.

The Higfords are a very antient family in Shropſhire, and were formerly called Hugford. Robert Hugford was controller to Thomas Beauchamp earl of Warwick, and much in his favour, which brought him out of Shropſhire, to ſettle at Empſcot in Warwickſhire, which he purchaſed of Richard Revel 9 H. 4. John Hugford, ſon of Robert, married Elizabeth, daughter and coheireſs of ſir John Dickleſton, and was ſucceeded by his ſon John, who married the daughter of Norman Waſhborn. Thomas Hugford, ſon of the laſt John, married Iſabel, daughter of ſir Thomas Hungerford of Down-Ampney. William Hugford, ſon of Thomas, married Margaret, daughter of —— Horgan of Selrin in Somerſetſhire, and dying 37 H. 8. was ſucceeded by John Hugford his ſon, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Edward Fetiplace of Beſheſley in Berkſhire, and was ſucceeded by his ſon John, who married Dorothy, daughter of William Rogers of Dowdeſwell, and was lord of this manor in the year 1608. William his ſon (who wrote his name Higford) married Mary, daughter of John Meulx of the iſle of Wight, and had a ſon John, born in the year 1607. James Higford was lord of this manor in the year 1712, who was ſucceeded by his brother Henry, rector of this pariſh; to whom ſucceeded William, father of the late William Higford, M. D. who was ſucceeded by his brother the reverend Mr. Henry Higford, the preſent rector of this pariſh, and lord of the manors of Alderton and Dixton. His arms are, Vert, on a chevron between three bucks heads caboſhed Or, as many mullets gules. By this account it appears, that the manor of Dixton has continued in the ſame family upwards of four hundred years, whereof it has been more than three hundred in the name of Hugford, or Higford.

William de Ditchford levied a fine of a moiety of lands in Aldrington, to Joan the widow of John Newington, and others, 5 E. 2.

Two meſſuages in Aldrington and Dixton, formerly belonging to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, were granted to Richard Gunter 36 H. 8.

HAMLET. Dickleſton, or Dixton, is a hamlet in this pariſh, the ſame, I apprehend, which in Domeſday-book is written Dridedone, as in the beginning of this account. It ſtands about a mile weſtward from the church, on the ſide of a hill, and was formerly called Caſtle-hill, from the intrenchments there.

Mr. Higford has a large, handſome houſe here, built of ſtone. In the hall windows are the following arms painted on the glaſs, viz.

1. Quarterly, 1ſt and 4th, Hugford as before, 2d and 3d, Sable, a pile argent. Theſe are impaled with, 1ſt and 4th, Argent, two chevrons gules, for Fettiplace. 2d and 3d quarterly, 1ſt and 4th, Argent, three beſants. 2d and 3d, Sable, a lion paſſant argent. And beneath is written HUGGIFORD and FETTIPLACE.

2. Argent, two bars gules; in chief three cinquefoils ſable, in the feſs point a mullet for difference, for Denton;—impaled with, quarterly of ſix, 1ſt Argent, a chevron between three etoiles of eight points ſable, for Mordaunt. 2d, Gules, a croſs patonce Or. 3d, Or, an eagle diſplayed argent. 4th, Argent, on a bend ſable the bearing obliterated. 5th, Quarterly per pale indented, Or and gules, in the firſt and fourth quarter a mullet of the ſecond. 6th, Mordaunt. Beneath the ſcutcheon, in antient letters, DENTON and MORDAUNT.

3. Quarterly, 1ſt and 4th, Hugford. 2d and 3d, Sable, a pile argent;—impaling, quarterly, 1ſt and 4th, Or, a greyhound courant ſable, between three leopards heads caboſhed azure, for Hennege; 2d and 3d, Gules, three garbs Or.

There is a chapel near the houſe dedicated to All Saints, but now diſuſed, and fallen to decay.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth about 120*l*. a year. The reverend reverend Mr. Henry Higford is patron and incumbent. The rectory pays 20*s.* yearly to the crown. In Willis's edition of Ecton's Theſaurus it is ſaid, Abb. Tewkſbury xx*s.* Patrono liii*s.* iv*d.* Abb. Winchcomb iv*s.* viii*d.*

The church is ſmall, and hath an aile on the ſouth ſide, and a low tower, with battlements, at the weſt end, and ſix bells in it. It is dedicated to St. Margaret. The Higfords arms are painted in the chancel window.

William Higford, eſq; a very ingenious poet, died 1657, and lies buried in the chancel. He had his education in the univerſity of Oxford, and left behind him a large manuſcript of Inſtitutions to his grandſon, which were epitomiſed and publiſhed by Clement Barkſdale.

The family of the Higfords are buried in the chancel, without any monuments or inſcriptions.

In the year 1373, this pariſh had a licence granted to bury Villanos tantum apud Alerington, et quod rector habeat omnes oblationes funerales, pro quibus ſolvat 2s. ſacriſto de Winchcombe, in feſto Sti. Kenelmi, ſalva ſepultura mortuorum in villa Dixton abbat. Winchcombe.

Benefactions.

William Higford, eſq; in the reign of H. 8. gave 6*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.* yearly, charged on his eſtate, to repair the utenſils and ornaments of the church. The church-wardens, in memory of this charity, are to pay annually at Michaelmas, a couple of capons to the heirs of Mr. Higford. — Henry Tovey gave by will 40*s.* to the poor for ever. — John Page, in the year 1610, gave 12*l.* to the uſe of the poor for ever.

There are about 172 inhabitants in this pariſh.

ALDSWORTH.

THIS pariſh lies in the Coteſwold country, on the turnpike-road from Bath, through Cirenceſter, to Oxford, ten miles north-eaſtward from Cirenceſter, ſeven ſouth-weſtward from Burford in Oxfordſhire, about twenty-three eaſt from Glouceſter, through Northleach, from which it is diſtant four miles. The houſes ſtand near together, on the north ſide of the turnpike-road, on a gentle riſing ground.

In Domeſday-book the name is written Aldeſwrde, and Aldeſorde, and comes either from Alo, old, and ꝑoꝛ̃ð, a village, ſtreet, croft, farm, court, or place; or elſe, the former part of the word is the name of ſome antient proprietor of the manor; and, in that ſenſe, it is the ſame as Alde's court, or place: For, as villa among the Romans implied the houſe of a nobleman, within his own eſtate, ſo did ȝueoꝛ̃ð, or worth, among the Saxons.

The lands are chiefly arable, with ſome paſture. This village affords nothing worthy the notice of the naturaliſt, or traveller; but the downs in the neighbourhood, part of which are in this pariſh, afford excellent ſport to thoſe that delight in hunting.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book it thus expreſſed:

'Elward the ſon of Reinbald holds Aldeſwrde 'in Becheberie hundred. Balchi held it. There 'are two hides taxed. In demean is one plow-'tillage; and four villeins, and two bordars, with 'two plow-tillages, and one ſervus. It was worth '40*s.* now 30*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 71.

But the church of Glouceſter held a larger eſtate in this pariſh, for in the ſame record, under the head Terra S. Petri de Glowec'. in Begebriges hundred, it is ſaid:

'The ſame church holds Aldeſorde. There 'are eleven hides, and three plow-tillages in 'demean; and twenty-one villeins, and five 'bordars, and two francigeni, with fifteen plow-'tillages. There are ſix ſervi. It was worth '100*s.* now 8*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 79.

This manor belonged to the abbey of Glouceſter 17 E. 3. It was in the crown in the year 1608; but James Lenox Dutton, eſq; who reſides at Sherborne in this county, is the preſent lord thereof.

Divers lands in Aldeſworth, with common for 300 ſheep, and a portion of tithes lately belonging to the abbey of Cirenceſter, were granted to Richard Andrews, and Nicholas Temple, in truſt for others, 34 H. 8.

William Coley died ſeized of a farm called Wall, in Aldſworth, with tithes of lamb and wool, 4 Mar. Eſcheator's inquiſition.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the peculiar of Bibury. The rectory, and advowſon of the vicarage, belonged to the monaſtery of Oſney, and were granted to the chapter of Oxford, 34 H. 8. who are the impropriators. There are about 250 acres of glebe. Portions of the tithe of Aldeſword, formerly belonging to the abbey of Glouceſter, were granted to the biſhoprick of Glouceſter 33 H. 8. and were confirmed by another grant 6 E. 6. The curacy is worth 20*l.* a year, beſides the tithe of cows and calves, Eaſter-offerings, garden-pence, and the rent of two little houſes. The impropriation pays 6*s.* 8*d.* a year to the crown.

The church is dedicated to St. Peter, and hath a handſome ſpire, which ſhews itſelf to advantage, ſtanding upon high ground. There are three cottages given to repair the church.

About the year 1710, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 30 houſes, and about 120 inhabitants in this pariſh; yearly births 4, burials 3. Upon examining the regiſter, I find that in ten years, from 1701 to 1710, there were entered 53 baptiſms, and 31 burials; and from 1760 to 1769 incluſive, there were 49 baptiſms, and 34 burials, ſo that population continues in the ſame ſtate nearly, as it was in the beginning of this century.

ALMONDSBURY.

THIS is a large pariſh, in the vale part of the county, conſiſting of four tithings, of which only the tithing of Almondſbury lies in the lower part of the hundred of Berkeley. The other three lie in other hundreds, as will be ſhewn hereafter. The church ſtands in the tithing of Almondſbury, eight miles north from Briſtol, ten weſt from Chipping-Sodbury, and twenty-nine ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter.

It is ſaid to derive its name from Alcmond, a Weſt-Saxon prince, father of Egbert, the firſt ſole monarch of England, (who is ſuppoſed to be buried in the church;) and from a fortification of a rampire and double ditch, at Knole in this pariſh; for ſuch our anceſtors called Burghs, and we, by frequent uſe, have ſoftened the word into borough and bury.

This camp is ſituated upon the brow of a hill, next the Severn, ſo as to command an extenſive view of that river, and every thing paſſing upon it. 'Tis ſuppoſed to be Saxon, but no mention is made of it in the Chronicle, nor by any of the antient writers. Tradition will have it to be the work of Offa, king of the Mercians, whoſe coffin the common people think was dug out of a tumulus, at Over, in this pariſh, in the year 1650, but Florilegius affirms, that he was buried at Bedford, whoſe authority, in this matter, ought to be preferred to vulgar opinion. It is however related in Mr. Wantner's papers, that at the time and place above mentioned, there were found the intire bones of two men. One of the ſkeletons was of an uncommon ſize, incloſed in a vaſt ſtone coffin, ſo artificially cemented together, that the joint was not diſcernible. The ſtone that covered the coffin was very ponderous, of a greyiſh colour without, but reddiſh, and ſtudded with a ſhining ſparry ſubſtance within. Two coins were found in the coffin, one of which bore the impreſſion of a faulcon, as the writer expreſſeth himſelf; on the other was a head, which he ſuppoſes to be that of Claudius Cæſar, but makes no mention of any inſcription. I have no doubt as to the facts, but cannot determine, from the circumſtances related, to whom the remains belong. If to a Roman, why were the bones unburnt, and no inſcription cut on the ſtone? If to a Saxon, how ſhall we account for the Roman coins found in the ſepulchre itſelf? But this is certain, ſays the writer of thoſe papers, the bones were thoſe of a man, whoſe height exceeded the ordinary ſtature by more than three feet. The corps was buried ſitting, which Drexelius ſaith was the cuſtomary manner of burying kings and princes, as an emblem of eternity.

Knole, the antient ſeat of the family of Cheſter, ſtands upon the brow of a hill, about two miles from the Severn, ſurrounded by the fortifications already mentioned, from whence there is a moſt extenſive and agreeable proſpect, over the Severn, into Monmouthſhire.

In ſo large a pariſh the ſoils muſt be various; There is more paſture than arable land, and a great deal of marſhy ground towards the river Severn. The proprietors have given an account to the commiſſioners of ſewers, that 1342 acres are more particularly liable to be overflowed by that river. See p. 26.

Tockington marſh-lands lie in this tithing.

It is obſervable, that neither Camden, nor his learned editor, hath taken any notice of this place.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book it is ſaid, that two hides in Almodeſbury (as it is there written) did then belong to the manor of Berchelai. Dom. B. p. 68.

This eſtate continued the property of the lords of Berkeley, 'till Robert Fitz-Harding, in the year 1148, founded the abbey of St. Auguſtin in Briſtol, and endowed it, among other very conſiderable eſtates, with the manor of Almondſbury. The ſame abbey held Almondſbury, with court leet, 13 and 15 E. 1. and had a charter for fairs and markets, and free-warren within it. The fair to be on Whit-monday, and to continue for ſix days; the weekly market on wedneſday. Many of the charters of markets and fairs, in this and ſome of the ſubſequent reigns, were granted only with a view of aggrandiſing the ſeignorie of thoſe manors which belonged to very eminent proprietors, and this paſſage, Quantum in nobis eſt, was always inſerted in the original grant. So that when it came to be diſcuſſed afterwards, before the judges itinerant, at the general aſſizes, Quo warranto they were held, that is to ſay, what authority there was to ſupport them, if they were found convenient and neceſſary, they were ratified and continued; but on the contrary, if they were deemed unneceſſary and ſuperfluous, they were, by the power of the law then veſted in the judges, vacated and taken away.

This

This manor continued in the abbey of St. Auguſtin 'till that houſe was diſſolved. It was afterwards granted, with a reſervation of 8*l.* 10*s.* rent, to Miles Partrige, 36 H. 8. who conveyed it to Arthur Darcy 7 E. 6. Henry Darcy had livery of it 1 Eliz. and afterwards ſold it to Thomas Cheſter.

William Cheſter, father of Thomas, was a younger branch of the Cheſters of Huntingdonſhire, and gentleman of the horſe to the duke of Buckingham, who was beheaded in the year 1522. He married Jane, the daughter of John Wear, and was mayor of Briſtol 1539.

Thomas Cheſter, who purchaſed this manor, was alſo mayor of Briſtol 1569, and was ſucceeded in this eſtate by his ſon

William Cheſter, who married Catherine, the daughter of Richard Dennis, of Dyrham.

Thomas Cheſter was ſon and heir of William. He married, firſt, Elizabeth, daughter of John Backhouſe, of Swallow-field in Berkſhire; ſecondly, Elizabeth, daughter of ſir George Speke, of Somerſetſhire, and was ſeized of this manor in the year 1608. By his ſecond wife he had Thomas Cheſter, his ſon and heir, who married Elizabeth, daughter of ſir John Howe, of Compton, and died 1686.

Thomas Cheſter, ſon of the laſt Thomas, married Anne, daughter of ſir Samuel Aſtry, of Henbury, and was ſucceeded in this eſtate by his ſon

Thomas Cheſter, born in the year 1696, who having repreſented this county in five ſucceſſive parliaments, died at Knole, Oct. 1, 1763, without iſſue, bequeathing his eſtate to the daughter and only child of his brother Richard Howe Cheſter; who marrying William Bromley, of —— in the county of Warwick, eſq; he, by virtue of the king's mandate to the earl marſhal of England, aſſumes the name and arms of Cheſter. Other particulars of the laſt mentioned Thomas Cheſter, eſq; are largely expreſſed in the well written memorial for him, printed in the courſe of this account. It remains only to be obſerved, that his relict is the preſent poſſeſſor of Almondſbury and Knole.

William de Gale held the manor of Knowl, of Brimpsfield caſtle, 7 E. 3. John St. Loe, eſq; was ſeized of it, and of Barton hundred, of the foreſt of Kingſwood, and of the fiſhing in Stapleton, 5 H. 6.

Thomas Hill died ſeized of lands in Almondſbury 6 Car. and left Edward his ſon fourteen years old.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

The other tithings are 1. Over. 2. Hempton and Patchway. 3. Gaunt's Urcot. of which in their order.

1. Over lies in the hundred of Langley and Swineſhead, about a mile and a half weſtward from the church, and has a diſtinct peace officer. What ſir Robert Atkyns ſays of Ethelric granting thirty meſſuages in Overe to St. Peter of Glouceſter, ſhould be underſtood of Over near that city, and not of this place.

This tithing is not expreſsly named in Domeſday-book, but it is probable that the following particulars relate to the tithings in this large pariſh.

'Roger the ſon of Ralph holds a manor in 'Sineſhoved hundred, which Seuuin the mayor 'of Briſtou held of king Edward, and he could 'go with his land wherever he pleaſed, and he 'gave no farm [rent] for it. There are three 'hides, and ſix plow-tillages in demean; and 'ſix villeins, and ſix bordars, with two plow-'tillages. There are three ſervi, and eight acres 'of meadow. It was worth 100*s.* and is now '[worth] 60*s.*

'Roger hath a manor of one hide of land in 'Sineſhovedes hundred, and he hath there two 'ſervi. There was no perſon who could anſwer 'concerning this land.

'Walter hath one manor of one yard-land. 'It was worth 20*den.* and is now worth 2*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 79.

Maurice de Gaunt died ſeized of Oure 14 H. 3. which afterwards came to Robert de Gourney, his ſiſter's ſon, who died ſeized of it in the fifty-third year of that reign. Anſelm de Gourney held Over 14 E. 1. and John de Gourney died ſeized thereof 19 E. 1. From him it went to John ap Adam, who had married Elizabeth, the daughter and heir of John de Gourney. Thomas ap Adam, his ſon, ſold it to Thomas lord Berkeley, and Margaret his wife, 4 E. 3.

Catherine, the widow of Thomas de Berkeley, of Beverſtone, was ſeized of the manor of Overe, and of the advowſon of the chantry 9 R. 2. in which family it continued to ſir William Berkeley, who was attainted of treaſon, and the manor of Over was granted to Thomas Brian, and his heirs male, 2 R. 3.

From Brian the manor was conveyed to John Poyntz, whoſe grand-daughter Alice married ſir Edward Berkeley, and brought this manor again into that family. John Berkeley, grandſon of ſir Edward, was ſeized of Over 1 H. 8. From him it paſſed in a lineal deſcent to John Berkeley, who had livery thereof 20 Eliz. and ſold the manor to John Dowel, who was the ſon of James Dowel, a wealthy merchant of Briſtol. From him it paſſed in a lineal deſcent to John Bridges Baker Dowel, eſq; who died unmarried in the year 1743, and was buried in Almondſbury church, where there is a very handſome monument, and a memorial for him, and for ſeveral of his family, which is inſerted at the end of this account.

Mr. Dowel bequeathed his whole eſtate to the reverend Mr. Degge, who had travelled with him as a tutor; and Mr. Degge dying in the year 1766, this manor, with ſeveral other large eſtates in the county, devolved to his ſiſter Mrs. Wilmott, the preſent proprietor. The manor-houſe is large and and handſome, with a park adjoining, in which are the traces of a large round camp, ſtill viſible.

Eaſter Compton is a ſmall hamlet in this tithing.

2. Hempton and Patchway lies in the hundred of Langley and Swineſhead, about a mile and a half diſtant ſouthward from the church. This tithing is not mentioned by name in Domeſday-book; but it is likely that the two ſmall eſtates diſcribed in that record, and placed at the head of this account, belonged to this tithing. However that may be, it appears by the records, that Margaret, the widow of Nicholas Stanſhaw, was ſeized of the manor of Hempton 14 H. 6. but Alice, the widow of William Chedder, held it in the 34th year of that reign. John Baker was ſeized of Hempton and Patchway 1608. Mrs. Wilmott has a good eſtate at Hempton; but Mr. Cheſter has the chief eſtate at Patchway.

Woodland is a hamlet in this tithing, where Mrs. Tace has a good houſe.

3. Gaunt's Urcot, ſo called from the family of Gaunt, lies in the hundred of Thornbury, near three meaſured miles eaſtward from the church. This is ſaid to be within the juriſdiction of the court of the honour of Glouceſter. In Domeſday-book it is thus expreſſed:

'The ſame biſhop [of St. Laud in Conſtance] 'holds Herdicote, in Langelie hundred, and Ro-'bert holds it of him. Cuulf held it in the time 'of king Edward. There are two hides taxed, 'and two plow-tillages in demean, and two bor-'dars, and four ſervi, and four villeins, and ten 'acres of meadow, and a wood. It is worth and 'was worth 40*s*.' Domeſday-book, p. 71.

This manor antiently belonged to Gilbert de Gaunt, whoſe ſiſter's ſon and heir, Richard de Gourney, founded an hoſpital in his manor-houſe called Bilſwick, and gave this manor to it; which hoſpital being diſſolved, the manor of Gaunt's Urcot was granted to the city of Briſtol, for public uſes, 33 H. 8. and the mayor and commonalty of that city are the preſent lords of this manor. The Gaunt's hoſpital was originally founded for a hundred poor people. It ſtands within the liberties of the city of Briſtol, was refounded in the reign of queen Elizabeth, and now entertains the blue-coat-boys.

Within this manor is a farm called St. Swithin's chapel, ſurrounded with a moat. The body of the chapel and the chancel were lately ſtanding, but the croſs building which was at the weſt end, ſuppoſed to have been the prieſt's lodging, hath been long ſince taken down, and the foundation new built upon. The inhabitants hereabout talk of an abbey dedicated to St. Swithin, that ſtood not far from it, but there are no traces of it to be found. Mr. Edgar is the preſent proprietor of the farm.

Brokenborow is a place within this tithing, where a chantry was erected in the ſame year as the abbey of St. Auguſtin was founded, and the patronage of it given to that abbey. John Harold was the laſt incumbent, and had a penſion of 4*l*. according to Mr. Willis. Lands lying in Almondſbury, formerly belonging to this chantry, were granted to Richard Moor, and Thomas Monford, 6 Jac. Brokenborow was a reputed manor, for William Turner, and Alice his wife, and her anceſtors, were found by an inquiſition, 9 H. 6. to have been ſeized, time out of mind, of the manor of Brokenborow, with the alternate preſentation to the chantry, which they ſettled on Thomas his younger ſon. This manor paſſed to Thomas Ivy, who was ſeized of it 4 H. 8. Thomas lord Berkeley had livery of it 24 H. 8. and Henry lord Berkeley ſold the fourth part of it to John Holliſter, and others, 6 Eliz.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Briſtol, worth about 70*l*. a year. It is one of the diſcharged livings, valued in the king's books 40*l*. 13*s*. 10*d*. The biſhop of Briſtol is patron, Mr. Taſwell incumbent. The rectory, and advowſon of the vicarage of Almondſbury, belonged to the abbey of St. Auguſtin, in Briſtol, and that houſe being diſſolved, were granted to Paul, biſhop of Briſtol, and his ſucceſſors, 34 H. 8. In a ſurvey about that time, they were valued at 18*l*. 15*s*. Willis. This was the mother-church to Filton and Elberton.

The church is large, and handſome, with an aile on each ſide, of the ſame height and length with the body. It hath a ſpire in the middle, with croſs ailes on each ſide, and is dedicated to the virgin Mary. The church and ſpire are covered with lead. The chancel is handſomely wainſcotted ſix feet high, with an altar-piece of Dutch-oak, ornamented with fluted pillaſters and capitals of the Corinthian order, and enriched with carvings and inlaid work, by a good hand. The communion-table is of grey marble, about ſix feet long. In the ſteeple are eight bells, and a clock.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

In the north croſs aile, upon a raiſed tomb, is the effigy, as it is ſuppoſed, of one of the abbats of St. Auguſtin, without any inſcription.

In the ſame aile, which belongs to the Cheſter family, againſt the wall, is a very elegant pyramidal monument of Egyptian marble. In front ſtands a beautiful female figure, in a looſe robe, leaning her arm on a vaſe, in whoſe countenance the paſſion of grief is excellently expreſt. Above, a drawn curtain diſcovers the arms of the deceaſed, Gules, a lion paſſant ermine, between three lures argent. In the feſs point a ſcutcheon of pretence, Gules, on a feſs argent, a lion paſſant azure, between three boars heads couped Or. Motto, POST FUNERA VIRTUS. And below, upon a large table, is the following inſcription:

Thomas Cheſter, Eſq; - - - - - Feb. 26, 1703.

The Succeſſion of this Lineage was cloſed in the Death of THOMAS CHESTER, Eſq; late of Knole, Son of the laſt recorded of this Name. He was by unanimous Suffrage of his County called up to be KNIGHT of the SHIRE in five ſucceſſive Parliaments; and on his own Part did the Honour that became him to their Choice, by the moſt inflexible Attachment to what he thought the true Intereſts of his Country. From theſe he could never be prevailed on to ſwerve, nor during ſo long a Service by one Vote, or conniving Abſence, to deſert, or diſappoint the Expectations of his Conſtituents.

His Country muſt long ago lament in Him the Loſs of a moſt upright and uſeful Magiſtrate. Juſtice was his conſtant Object, temper'd only with Compaſſion, as Occaſion called it forth; which his benevolent Heart would never ſuffer Him to eſtrange himſelf from; but never was he to be biaſſed by any ſiniſter View, or private Intereſt, from the Execution of his proper Duty.

Nor was He leſs amiable in his private Character, than reſpectable in his public; Under every Connection in which He ſtood, anſwering with his beſt Powers to its reſpective Duties, and ſuſtaining in Character, as in the different Scenes of Life they aroſe upon Him, the Neighbour, the Friend, the Brother, the Huſband, with no leſs Eſteem, Honour and Virtue —— than the MAGISTRATE and SENATOR: a Truth, which cannot better be evinced, than by the great and heart-impreſs'd Grief that not only attended his Loſs, but has faithfully adhered to his Memory; and which, as long as any Traces of it ſhall remain with Thoſe who had the Happineſs to know Him, will more than anſwer This, or any Other Record that can be given of Him.

His firſt Wife was the Right Honourable SARAH HENRIETTA, the only Daughter of HENRY Earl of SUFFOLK and BINDON, by PENELOPE, Daughter of the Earl of THOMOND, who was buried April 6, 1722. In 1735 He married MARY, the Widow of GEORGE GUINNET, Eſq; of Shurdington in this County, and Daughter and Heireſs of JEREMY ——— Eſq; of London.

He died on the 1ſt of October, 1763, and having no Iſſue, left his Eſtate to his Niece ELIZABETH LUCY CHESTER, Wife of WILLIAM BROMLEY CHESTER, Eſq; and only Child of his Brother RICHARD CHESTER, Eſq; who died on the 15th of July, 1760, and lies alſo near Him.

MARY CHESTER, his ſurviving Widow, deeply afflicted for his Loſs, and venerating his Memory and Virtues, took upon herſelf the Care and Direction of this Monument.

In the ſame aile are inſcriptions for others of this family, but nothing very obſervable in them.

In the ſouth croſs aile, upon a large raiſed tomb, lie the effigies, in full proportion, of a man in armour, with ſpurs on, and of a woman, in the dreſs of the age in which they lived. There is a canopy of ſtone-work over them, ſupported by ſix fluted pillars and two pillaſters, about five feet high; and againſt the wall, on a table, it is thus written, in capital letters:

HERE LYETH THE BODIES OF EDWARD VEELE ESQVIER WHO WAS BVRIED THE 9 OF SEP. 1577. AND OF KATHERINE HYS WYFE WHO DEPARTED THYS LYFE THE 7 OF NOVEM: 1575:

MAKAPIOI OI NEKPOI.

QVIS VIR ITA VIVAT VT NON VIDEAT MORTEM.

ALL FLESH YS GRASS.

Over all, on a ſcutcheon, Argent, on a bend ſable, three calves Or, for Veel, quartered with a great many other arms of families who have married with the Veels. This Edward was of the family of the Veels of Tortworth, who were ſometime lords of the manor of Over, in this pariſh.

In the ſame aile ſtands a very large pyramidal marble monument, with this inſcription:

To the Memory of JOHN BAKER DOWELL, Eſq; and ELIZABETH his Wife, whoſe Bodys are depoſited in a new Vault made for them under the middle Iſle of this Church; together with three of their Children that dyed Infants. The ſaid JOHN BAKER DOWELL, Eſq; was the Son of JOHN DOWELL, Eſq; Lord of the Mannour of Over in this Pariſh, by MARY his Wife, one of the four Daughters and Coheireſſes of Sir JOHN BAKER, Baronet, the laſt of his Family, Lord of the Mannours of Siſſingherſte, Compton, Comden, Stone, Stapleherſte, and Blithcourt, all in the County of Kent, and departed this Life the twentieth Day of October MDCCXXXVIII. The ſaid ELIZABETH DOWELL was the Daughter and ſole Heireſs of JOHN BROWNING of Coley, Eſq; by ELIZABETH his Wife, Siſter and Coheireſs of ROBERT BRIDGES of Woodcheſter, Eſq; both in the County of Glouceſter; and departed this Life the thirty-firſt Day of December MDCCXXV.

To his well-deſerving Parents, JOHN BRIDGES BAKER DOWELL, Eſq; cauſed this Monument to be erected.

The Family of the DOWELLS, Auncеſtors by the Father's Side of the ſaid JOHN BAKER DOWELL, Eſq; are depoſited in their Vault underneath this Monument. The Body of JOHN BRIDGES BAKER DOWELL, Eſq; who erected this Monument, and departed this Life March the XXXI. MDCCXXXXIIII, is alſo depoſited in the ſame Vault with his Parents.

Upon the Monument are the following arms: Argent, within a bordure, a lion rampant, ſable; for Dowell. —— Quarterly, 1ſt and 4th, Dowell, as before; 2d and 3d, On a feſs ingrailed, three roſes, between as many lures, (the colours not diſtinguiſhable) for Baker. Over all, on a ſcutcheon of pretence, Argent, three bars wavy, azure, for Browning. —— On a ſeparate ſcutcheon, the arms of Baker, as before.

On a ſtone in the church-yard is this inſcription:

Here lies alas! long to be lamented, BENJAMIN DOBINS, Gent. who left his Friends ſorrowing, Feb: 2, 1760. Aged 42.

The coſtly Marble may, perhaps, expreſs,
In lying Lines, th' Unworthy's Worthineſs:

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, when he publiſhed his account of this pariſh, there were 132 houſes, and about 530 inhabitants. The preſent ſtate of population was not received when this account went to the preſs, wherefore it muſt be given in the Addenda.

ALVESTON, vulgarly ALLISTON.

THIS pariſh lies in the vale, in the hundred of Langley and Swineſhead, eight miles and a half north-eaſt from Briſtol, two miles and a half ſouth-weſt from Thornbury, and about twenty-eight ſouthward from Glouceſter. It is bounded on the weſt by Almondſbury.

There is a ſteep deſcent, as from a hill, on the ſide next the Severn. On the top is a large, round camp, called the Old Abbey, over-looking that river, but how it obtained the name is uncertain. There are many camps in this neighbourhood, and many engagements muſt have happened hereabout, in early times, betwixt our anceſtors and their enemies; for the effects of them are ſtill viſible in the barrows thrown up in different places. About a hundred years ago, ſeveral ſtone coffins were dug out of one of thoſe barrows, near the above fortifications, in which were the bones of the chief perſons, perhaps, who fell in ſome battle. There is an account, in the preceding pariſh, of ſtone coffins, with bones, having been taken out of a tumulus at Over. In ſhort, there are few pariſhes in this county that do not exhibit ſome veſtiges of camps and barrows, but hiſtory is ſilent concerning moſt of them.

The houſes in this village ſtand a mile diſtant from the church. A turnpike-road from Glouceſter to Briſtol, leads thro' the pariſh.

In Domeſday-book the name is written Alweſtan, and Alveſtone. It is now generally pronounced Alliſton. The etymology is difficult, and uncertain. If Alfe's town, or Alve's town, (as being the property of ſome perſon of that name) be not the true explanation, I cannot give a better.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

When William the Firſt cauſed a general inquiſition to be made concerning landed property, this place was ſhared between two proprietors, of which the record gives the following account:

'Earl Herald held Alweſtan, in Langelei hundred. There were ten hides. In demean is one plow-tillage; and twenty-three villeins, and five bordars, with twenty-two plow-tillages, and two ſervi. The ſteward [prepoſitus] added two plow-tillages, and five ſervi there. It paid 12*l.* by weight.' Domeſday-book. p. 67.

All the lands which were king Harold's, at the time of the conqueſt, William ſeized for his own, and accordingly we find the above in the liſt of the king's lands. The abbey of Bath was the other proprietor.

'Saint Peter of Bath held Alveſtone, in Langelei hundred. There are five hides. Three pay taxes, [but] two of them are exempt from tax, by the grant of king Edward and king William. In demean are two plow-tillages, and nine villeins, and ſix bordars, and a prieſt, and one radcheniſter, with ten plow-tillages. There are ſeven ſervi, and meadow and wood for the ſupport of the manor. It was worth 100s. now 4*l.* The ſame church holds it now.' Domeſday-book, p. 71.

It doth not appear when this manor was alienated from the abbey of Bath, but it was in the crown in the reign of king H. 3. who reſerved his park in Alveſton when the foreſt of Kingſwood was diſafforeſted.

It ſoon after paſſed from the crown to the family of the Fitz-Warrens; for Fulk Fitz-Warren died ſeized thereof, and left it in dower to Conſtantia de Todeni, his widow, who was alſo ſeized of it, with court-leet, view of frankpledge, and waifs, and alſo of the hundred of Langley, 15 E. 1. Fulk Fitz-Warren, ſon of Fulk, died ſeized of Alveſton 16 E. 2. having given it to Walter of Glouceſter, one of his ſons. This Walter was ſucceeded by his ſon Walter of Glouceſter, in Alveſton and Urcot, 14 E. 3. who ſettled them in remainder, after the death of Peter his ſon, on Peter Corbet, of Siſton, who had married his daughter. By virtue of which ſettlement, they came to Margaret, daughter and coheireſs of Peter Corbet, who was married to ſir Gilbert Dennis, and ſettled theſe manors on her huſband and his heirs, whereby they came into the family of Dennis.

Sir Gilbert Dennis died ſeized of the manors of Alveſton and Urcot, and of Langley hundred, 10 H. 5. from whom they paſſed, in a lineal deſcent, to Richard Dennis, who ſold them to Maurice Shepard 19 Eliz.

Richard Haughton married the daughter and heir of Maurice Shepard, and joined with his wife in the ſale of Alveſton, to Robert Webb, 22 Eliz.

Webb ſold it to Nicholas Veel, from whoſe grandſon, Nicholas, it paſſed by purchaſe to Edward Hill, eſq; who was lord of the manor in the year 1712. But Miſs Jefferis, ſiſter of the late Mr. Cann Jefferis, is the preſent proprietor thereof.

Walter the ſheriff gave one yard-land in Alveſton to the abbey of Glouceſter 7 H. 1.

William Wiryot, and Margaret his wife, held lands within the manor of Alveſton and Urcot, 2 R. 2.

HAM-

HAMLETS. 1. Row Urcot, which hath been often mentioned in the account of the deſcent of the manor of Alveſton, is a hamlet containing fourteen houſes.

2. Groveſend, or Grovening, lies about three miles north-eaſt from the church, and conſiſts of about ſeven families.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Briſtol, and is annexed to Olveſton, from whence it is diſtant about three miles. The building is ſmall, dedicated to St. Helen, and hath a low tower at the weſt end.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

There are no monuments or inſcriptions worthy particular notice. Colonel Thomas Veel, who died 1663, and Nicholas Veele, eſq; who died 1703, lie buried in the chancel. And ſome of doctor Clayton's deſcendants are alſo buried there.

About the year 1712, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 42 houſes in this pariſh, and about 240 inhabitants, whereof 8 were freeholders. The yearly baptiſms were 6, and burials 6. Having examined the pariſh regiſter, I find that in a ſeries of ten years, from 1760 to 1769 incluſive, there were enter'd 63 baptiſms, and 44 burials; and the number of inhabitants are at this time about 198.

ALVINGTON,

IS a ſmall pariſh, in the hundred of Blideſloe, in the foreſt-diviſion of the county; nine miles ſouth-eaſt from Monmouth, ſix north-eaſt from Chepſtow, and twenty-two ſouth-weſt from Glouceſter. It is bounded on the north-eaſtward by Lidney, from which it is ſeparated by the brook Coln; on the ſouth-weſtward by Woolaſton, and has the river Severn on the ſouth-eaſt of it.

Mr. Camden calls it Aventone; and ſince Avon, or Afon, in the Britiſh language ſignifies a river, thinks it not improbable that it took its name from thence, becauſe it is ſtretched along the banks of the Severn. He was alſo of opinion that this place was the Abone of Antoninus, as well on account of the reſemblance of the names, as becauſe it lies exactly nine miles diſtant from Caer Went, or the Venta Silurum of the Romans; which is the diſtance Abone is ſaid to be from the laſt mentioned place, in the fourteenth Iter.

But I ſee no great reſemblance between the names Abo, or, as ſome will have it, Abone, and Alvington, as the latter ought to be, or at leaſt has been written, for the laſt five hundred years; and unleſs the learned hiſtorian had a precedent in higher antiquity, I think he hath taken an unwarrantable liberty in deviating ſo widely from that manner of writing it. As to the diſtance from Caer Went, it may anſwer well enough; but that from Abo to the Trajectus, being nine miles according to the Itinerary, is very different from the true diſtance between this place and Oldbury, the ſuppoſed Trajectus, which is not more than four miles at fartheſt. Indeed there is a manifeſt miſtake in the Iter, as to the diſtances, for at the beginning it is ſaid, Ab Iſca Callevam m. p. ciii, ſic; from Caerleion to Calleva, one hundred and three miles, thus: and then the intermediate diſtances between the various places are ſet down, which make together only ninety-eight miles, i. e. five miles ſhort of the groſs account.

But the greateſt objection ſeems to be, that, ſuppoſing the Abo to have been ſituated in the country of the Silures, (a people that gave the Romans more trouble than any of our countrymen) it muſt have been well fortified, garriſoned, and ſecured againſt the attacks of ſo hardy and active a people; and being in ſo important a ſituation, one might expect to find ruins of antient buildings, chequer'd pavements, hypocauſts, and ſuch other works as have been diſcovered in thoſe places where the Romans had ſtations; but none of all theſe have been found at Alvington; for which reaſon, among others, I am of opinion that this was not the Abo of Antoninus; and that, if Mr. Camden had ſeen the ruins in Lidney park, two or three miles higher up the river, he would rather have fixed on that place for the Roman ſtation in queſtion. See Lidney.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book are many particulars of villages and lands on the foreſt ſide of the Severn, and in Wales, as it was then reputed to be, agreeable to the diviſion of the two countries at that time; for antiently all on the north-weſt of that river was called Wales; but afterwards the Wye became the boundary between them, according to Alexander Neckham:

Inde vagos Vaga Cambrenſes, hinc reſpicit Anglos.

On this ſide, Wye the Engliſh views,
On that, the wandering Welch purſues.

Thoſe villages and eſtates are not deſcribed by their reſpective names, nor is this place any where mentioned therein; ſo that it is impoſſible to ſhew whoſe property it was at the time of the antient ſurvey. But the priory of Lanthony held the manor of Alvington, with markets and fairs, 49 H. 3. and had court-leet and waifs therein, 15 E. 1. which they proved in their anſwer to a writ of Quo warranto brought againſt them that year; and the church of Lanthony were proprietors of of it, 'till that houſe was diſſolved; for tho' it appears by the records, that Edward Blount, and Margaret his wife, were ſeized of it, 4 R. 2. it was probably either in truſt, or by uſurpation; for the priory was ſeized of it again in the 18th and 19th years of the ſame reign.

At the diſſolution of monaſteries, this manor was veſted in the crown, and the ſite of it, with divers lands, was granted, 32 H. 8. to Arthur Porter, who was a conſiderable purchaſer of abbey-lands at that time.

But ſir William Herbert had a grant of the manor 4 E. 6. and certain tithes in Alvington were alſo granted to him in the firſt year of the ſame reign.

From him it paſſed thro' various hands, 'till it came to William Compton, eſq; who was lord of this manor in the year 1608.

It came afterwards into the name of Higford, for William Higford, of Dixton, eſq; was lord of the manor in the year 1712, and from him it hath paſſed, in regular deſcent, to the reverend Mr. Henry Higford, of the ſame place, who is the preſent proprietor, and hath a good eſtate here. See Alderton and Dixton.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is called the chapel of Alvington. It is in the deanery of the foreſt, and annexed to Woollaſton.

The church is ſmall, with a tower at the weſt end, and an aile on the ſouth ſide, belonging to the lord of the manor. John Higford, eſq; died in the year 1706, and was buried in this church.

AMNEY CRUCIS.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Crowthorn and Minety, two miles diſtant eaſt from Cirenceſter, ſix north from Cricklade in Wiltſhire, and nineteen ſouth-eaſt from Glouceſter.

The name was antiently written Omenie, and Omenel, and afterwards Amney, which ſir Robert Atkyns derives from amnis, the Latin word for a river; but this etymology ſeems to be ſuggeſted by the modern, rather than by the antient manner of writing the name; however, as I have no better to offer, I ſhall govern myſelf by Horace's rule. The cognomen was given it on account of a large croſs erected in this pariſh, which ſerved to diſtinguiſh it from two other adjoining pariſhes of the ſame name. And becauſe our Saxon anceſtors called the croſs the ꝑalıȝ ꝓoꝺe, this pariſh hath ſometimes alſo been called Holy Rood Amney.

The turnpike-road from Cirenceſter to London, and another turnpike-road from Bath to Oxford, lead through this pariſh, which hath lately been incloſed, by act of parliament.

As the workmen were digging ſtone on the ſide of the laſt mentioned road, about two years ago, they found an earthen urn, containing burnt bones and aſhes, and ſome Roman coins of the latter empire. There was a ſmall ſilver coin of Honorius, with this inſcription round the head: D N HONORIVS P F AVG. On the reverſe: a Roman ſoldier holding a ſpear in one hand, and victory in the other; and round the figures, VIRTVS ROMANORVM. This Honorius was ſon of Theodoſius, whom he ſucceeded in the government of the weſtern part of the empire, when he was a boy of ten years old. When he grew up, he was active and diligent, and ſecured Britain againſt the ravages of Picts, Scots, and Saxons, but at laſt fell a victim to his ambitious views, and made a miſerable end, about the time of the expiration of the Roman empire in Britain.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

As the pariſhes of Amney Crucis, Amney St. Mary, and Down Amney were not diſtinguiſhed by different names in the antient ſurvey, it is impoſſible, with any certainty, to ſelect the particulars from Domeſday-book, proper to each place; therefore, reſpecting this pariſh, I have implicitly followed ſir Robert Atkyns.

'Turſtin the ſon of Rolf holds Omenie of the 'king. There are ſeven hides. Tovi held it of 'king Edward. In demean are three plow-til-'lages, and eight villeins, and a prieſt, with eight 'plow-tillages. There are eight ſervi. Of this 'eſtate Tovi held the land of two villeins, and a 'certain knight held the land of four villeins. 'Half a hide and four acres of meadow belonged 'to the church. It was worth 8*l.* now 6*l.* 'This Turſtin holds one hide there which Uluui 'held for a manor, and could go where he would. 'In demean are two plow-tillages, with one bor-'dar. It was worth 40*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 78.

Under Terra Hunfridi Camerarii, it is thus expreſſed:

'The ſame Hunfridus holds one hide in Ome-'nie. Æluui held it for a manor of king Edward. 'In demean are two plow-tillages, and four ſervi, 'and one bordar, and a mill of 5*s.* rent. It is 'worth and was worth 25*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 79.

'Baldwin holds of the king three yard-lands 'in Omenie, in Gerſdones hundred. Aluuin 'held it in the time of king Edward. There is 'one plow-tillage, with two bordars. It is worth 'and was worth 10*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 79.

The

The abbey of Tewkeſbury held one hide at Amney, which king H. 1. confirmed to it, reciting that it did belong to Humphry the cook, which, I apprehend, ſhould have been Humphry the chamberlain. He alſo confirmed to it the church of Amney, which belonged to Robert the chamberlain. And it was ſeized of court-leet, waifs, and felons goods in Amney Holy-rood, by the grant of W. 2. which privileges were allowed in a writ of Quo warranto, 15 E. 1.

From this time the monks of Tewkeſbury gradually improved their eſtate here, for Iſabel, daughter of Gilbert de Clare, granted to them one meſſuage and one plow-tillage in Holy Rood Amney, 1 E. 2. And the abbat purchaſed ſeven other meſſuages, four cottages, two hundred twenty-ſix acres of arable, five acres of meadow, and a rent of ten pence half-penny in Amney, of John de Boteler, 20 E. 2.

The abbey of Tewkeſbury continued ſeized of the manor and rectory of Amney Holy Rood, 'till by the diſſolution of that houſe they were veſted in the crown, by which they were granted to John Playdell, or Pleydell, of Weſtcot in Berkſhire, in the fourth year of the reign of queen Elizabeth. He was deſcended from the Playdells, antiently of Coleſhill, in Berkſhire.

Robert Playdell, fourth ſon of John, and heir to him by the death of his elder brothers without iſſue, removed from Weſtcot to Holy Rood Amney, and was lord of the manor in 1608. He married Suſanna, daughter of Edward Saunders, of Brixworth, in Northamptonſhire, eſq; and dying in 1642, was ſucceeded by his ſon and heir

John Playdell, who dying without iſſue, was ſucceeded by his brother

Robert Playdell, or Pleydell. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Saunders, M. D. and dying in 1678, was alſo ſucceeded in this eſtate by his ſon and heir

Robert Pleydell, who married Sarah, daughter of Philip Sheppard, of Minchin-hampton, eſq; by whom he had a ſon and two daughters. The ſon and one of the daughters dying without iſſue, the manor of Amney Crucis, and ſeveral large eſtates in other places, as well as in this pariſh and neighbourhood, deſcended to his youngeſt daughter Charlotte-Louiſa; with whom they went, by marriage, in 1724, to the honourable John Dawnay, eldeſt ſon of Henry lord viſcount Downe. In this name and family they continued, till about the year 1765, when John lord viſcount Downe ſold the manor and eſtate of Amney Crucis, amongſt other particulars, to Samuel Blackwell, eſq; who is the preſent proprietor, and has a large eſtate in this pariſh, and ſeveral other parts of the county. He married Anne, eldeſt daughter of James Lenox Dutton, of Sherborne, eſq; by whom he has iſſue ſeveral children. His arms are, Argent, a greyhound currant ſable, collared, compony, Or and gules; on a chief indented of the ſecond, three beſants.

Hugh le Deſpencer had an eſtate in this pariſh, for Eubulo l'Eſtrange, and Aleria his wife, levied a fine thereof to him 18 E. 2. And divers meſſuages in Holy Rood Amney, in the tenure of Richard Bye, belonged to the priory of Bradenſtoke, in Wiltſhire, which was founded by Walter earl of Saliſbury, for black canons, in the reign of king Stephen. It was dedicated to the bleſſed Virgin, and valued, at the diſſolution, at 270*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.* yearly. Theſe meſſuages were granted to James Gunter, and William Lewis, 37 H. 8.

An eſtate called the Sheep-Houſe, &c. in Amney, which belonged to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, was granted to James Woodford, and Thomas Ludwell, 2 Eliz.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Cirenceſter. It is a vicarage, improved ſince the incloſing of the common fields in the year 1769, to about 70*l.* a year. The advowſon of the vicarage formerly belonged to the nunnery of Clerkenwell, in Middleſex, and was granted to ſir William Herbert, 4 E. 6. The lord chancellor has the preſentation. William Sandeford, D. D. is the preſent incumbent.

I have ſhewn that the patronage of the church, and the impropriation, formerly belonged to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, and were confirmed to that church by king H. 2. But part of the tithes and glebe belonged to the abbey of Glouceſter, and, after the diſſolution, were granted to the biſhoprick, 33 H. 8. and confirmed 6 E. 6. Other tithes of corn and hay belonged to the abbey of Cirenceſter, and were granted to Peter Oſborn, and others, 3 Eliz. The impropriation of the corn tithes was veſted in the lord of the manor; but by the bill for incloſing the common fields in this pariſh, all the lands are exonerated from tithe, and the biſhop, impropriator, and vicar had lands allotted to them in lieu thereof.

The biſhop's allotment lies on beggar-hill.

The vicar's portion is 110 acres in the upper-field. He hath Eaſter-offerings, and ſurplus fees, as before.

The church is built in the form of a croſs, with a tower at the weſt end. In the window at the eaſt end, are the arms of the Clares, originally placed there by the abbey of Tewkeſbury, in grateful remembrance of Iſabel Clare, their benefactreſs.

Benefactions.

Robert Pleydell, eſq; hath endowed a free-ſchool for the educating, cloathing, and apprenticing of poor children in this pariſh, with 80*l.* a year, charged on Ranbury-farm. See his epitaph.

There are cottages of 50*s.* a year given to the uſe of the church. And four acres of arable land, newly incloſed, near Meurſtals, to other charitable uſes.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

There is a free-ſtone monument in the north aile, upon which are the figures of a man and woman, and twelve children, without any inſcription; but by the coat of arms upon it, 'tis ſuppoſed to have been erected for one of the Lloyds, formerly owner of this manor, and anceſtor of the Lloyds, late lords of the manor of Wheatenhurſt, in this county.

In the chancel is a white marble monument, with this inſcription:

Under, upon the ſame monument:

Againſt the ſouth wall of the chancel, is a marble table, with the following inſcription:

This STONE is erected to the MEMORY of S^r. HENRY PLEYDELL DAWNAY, Baronett, Lord Viſcount DOWNE, Whoſe Remains lie buried at MEURS near WEZEL, on the Banks of the LOWER RHINE. He was Lord of the Bed Chamber to GEORGE the third, both when KING and PRINCE of WALES; was twice elected Knight of the Shire for the County of YORK; Colonel by Brevet; Colonel of the Southern Battalion of Militia of the Weſt Riding of the County of YORK; and Lieutenant Colonel of the Twenty fifth Regiment of Foot, which he Commanded at the Battle of MINDEN, Auguſt 1ſt 1759. And again at the Battle of CAMPEN, Octob. 16, 1760, where being Mortally wounded he died the Ninth of December following, in the Thirty third Year of his Age.

There is a handſome pyramidal marble monument, on the weſt wall of the north aile, for Anne, the wife of Robert Berkeley Freeman, gent. and near it, another for Thomas Powell, M. A. vicar of this pariſh, who died Dec. 29, 1764, aged 62.

About the year 1712, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 100 houſes, and about 350 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 25 were freeholders. The yearly births were 8, and burials 7. Upon examining the pariſh regiſter, I find, that in a ſeries of ten years, from 1760 to 1769 incluſive, there were entered 103 baptiſms, and 76 burials; and there are now, by actual numeration, 357 inhabitants.

AMNEY St. MARY, or EASTBROOK.

THIS pariſh is ſituated in the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety, about three miles eaſtward from Cirenceſter, ſix north from Cricklade in Wiltſhire, and about twenty-one eaſtward from Glouceſter. The etymology of Eaſtbrook is eaſy, the principal part of the pariſh lying on the eaſt ſide of the brook which runs from Amney Crucis into the Thames or Iſis.

Ten or twelve houſes which belong to Amney Crucis lie intermixt with this pariſh, which is ſmall, and ſeems, in early times, to have been taken out of Amney Crucis. It conſiſts moſtly of meadow ground. The turnpike-road from Cirenceſter to London leads thro' this pariſh.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book, it is thus expreſt:

'Reinbaldus holds Omenie, in Gerſdones hundred, of the king. Godric held it in the time 'of king Edward. There are four hides and one 'yard-land. In demean are two plow-tillages, 'and eight villeins, and one bordar, with ſix 'plow-tillages, and a prieſt. There are eight 'ſervi, and two mills of 10*s.* and twenty acres 'of meadow. It was worth and is worth 100*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 73.

This Reinbald, or Reimbald, or Rumbald, was dean of the college of Cirenceſter at that time, and had been chancellor of England in the reign of Edward the Confeſſor. There were two other ſmall eſtates, according to the record:

'Durand [of Glouceſter] holds one hide in 'Eſbroc, and one of his knights holds it of him. 'In demean is one plow-tillage, and one bordar, 'and one ſervus. It is worth and was worth '10*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 76.

Humphry the chamberlain had alſo an eſtate here, for it is thus expreſt:

'The ſame Hunfry holds one virgate of land in 'Eſtbroce, and William holds it of him. Aluuine 'held it for a manor. There is one villein. It 'was worth and is worth 2*s.*' Dom. Book, p. 79.

It appears by an Inſpeximus of the grants to the abbey of Cirenceſter, that king H. 1. granted four hides and one yard-land in Amney to that church, which had formerly been the eſtate of Reimbald the prieſt. But the records ſhew alſo, that a manor in Eſtbrook belonged to Roger le Hore, 8 E. 1. which was probably that which Aluuine held. Other records ſhew, that Aſhbrook was held of Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford and Eſſex, and of Joan his wife, 46 E. 3.

Bur

But I do not underſtand this to be the manor granted to the abbey of Cirenceſter.

Sir Robert Atkyns hath not ſhewn to whom this manor was granted by the crown, after the diſſolution of the abbey; but John Partrige, eſq; was lord of it in the year 1608. It came afterwards into the family of the Pleydells, of Holy Rood Amney, for Robert Pleydell was lord of this manor in the year 1712; from which time, it hath paſſed in the ſame manner, and acknowledged the ſame proprietors as Holy Rood Amney, ſo that Samuel Blackwell, eſq; is the preſent lord of it.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Cirenceſter. It is an impropriation. The tithes of hay and corn in Amney St. Mary, which formerly belonged to the abbey of Cirenceſter, were granted to Peter Oſborn, and others, 3 Eliz. but the tithes of the demeans were granted to John Playdel, 5 Eliz. The incumbent received 13*s.* 4*d.* of the impropriator, beſides about 8*l.* in privy tithes. But ſince the year 1769, when the common fields and commonable places in the pariſh were incloſed, lands have been allotted to the impropriator and to the vicar, and the whole pariſh is exonerated from tithe.

The living has been twice augmented by queen Anne's bounty. Mr. Blackwell is patron; William Sandeford, D. D. is the preſent incumbent.

The church is ſmall, without any ſteeple, and is dedicated to the virgin Mary.

About the year 1712, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 20 houſes, and about 80 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 8 were freeholders. The yearly births 2, burials 2. But examining the pariſh regiſter, I find, that in a ſeries of ten years, from 1760 to 1769 incluſive, there are entered 38 baptiſms, and 17 burials, and the inhabitants being numbered, are found to be 118.

AMNEY St. PETER, or EASTINGTON,

LIES in the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety, four miles diſtant eaſt from Cirenceſter, ſix north from Cricklade in Wiltſhire, and twenty-one ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter. It is a ſmall pariſh, conſiſting chiefly of meadow and paſture land. Lying to the eaſtward of the other Amneys, occaſioned its being diſtinguiſhed by the name of Eaſtington.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book, in the account of lands belonging to the church of St. Peter of Glouceſter, it is thus expreſt:

'The brother of Reinbald holds two hides in 'Omenie, in Gerſdunes hundred. There are 'two plow-tillages, and five villeins with three 'plow-tillages, and four ſervi, and twenty-four 'acres of meadow, and a mill of 5*s.* rent. It 'was worth 40*s.* now ſcarce 20*s.*' D. B. p. 71.

'Hernulf [de Heſding] holds four hides and 'two virgates and a half of land in Omenie, in 'Gerſdones hundred. Elric and Godric held 'them for two manors. In demean are three 'plow-tillages, and ſeven villeins, and two bor-'dars, with two plow-tillages. There are four 'ſervi. The whole was worth and is worth 6*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 77.

In the account of the donations to the abbey of St. Peter at Glouceſter, p. 143, it is ſaid, that in the year 1126, Winebald de Balon, one of the great barons of the realm, and Roger his ſon, granted to that monaſtery half a hide in Amney, which Thomas an Engliſhman held, free from all payments, except the king's dane-gelt.

Now it will be difficult to prove that the above eſtates lay in this pariſh, and not in one of the others of the ſame name; but it is probable that the firſt and laſt of them did, becauſe the records ſhew, that in the ſeventeenth year of king E. 3. this manor, and the impropriation, belonged to the abbey of Glouceſter. And they continued to be a part of the poſſeſſions of that abbey 'till it was diſſolved. After the diſſolution, the manor and tithes were granted to Richard Knight, 1 Mariæ; and Robert Knight, his ſon and heir, had livery of the manor 15 Eliz.

From him it went to George Gaſcoign, eſq; who was lord thereof in the year 1608. And then paſſing to Robert Pleydell, eſq; it hath ever ſince been the property of the owners of Amney Crucis, ſo that Samuel Blackwell, eſq; is the preſent lord of this manor.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Cirenceſter. It is a curacy, in the gift of the biſhop of Glouceſter. In the thirteenth year of C. 1. it was inſtituted to as a vicarage. The reverend Mr. Thomas Smith is the preſent incumbent, who receives 1*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* from the leſſee of the appropriation. There is no houſe for the miniſter. The living has been thrice augmented by the queen's bounty, with which, lands of 14*l.* 10*s.* a year have been purchaſed, in the pariſh of South Cerney.

A portion of tithes in Farley, near Amney, antiently belonging to the abbey of Glouceſter, was granted to the biſhoprick 33 H. 8. and it hath been already ſhewn, that other tithes in this pariſh, belonging to the ſame abbey, were granted to Richard Knight, 1 Mariæ.

Ranbury

Ranbury farm, which is given to ſupport the charity ſchool at Amney Crucis, Kingſton meadow, and moſt of the pariſh, pay no tithe.

The church is ſmall, without any ſteeple. It is dedicated to St. Peter. Two acres in each common field, in the pariſh of Amney St. Mary, and one acre in Mr. Trynder's piece, were given to repair the church, before the fields were incloſed.

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, about the year 1710, there were 22 houſes, and about 100 inhabitants in this pariſh, of whom 10 were freeholders; yearly births 3, burials 2. ARLINGHAM.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Berkeley, ten miles north-weſtward from Stroud, nine north from Durſley, and nine ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter. It is peninſulated by the river Severn on the eaſt, weſt, and north ſides, and bounded by Frampton on the ſouth-eaſt. A turnpike-road leads from Stroud to a paſſage over the Severn, in this pariſh; but the paſſage-houſe is at Newnham, exactly oppoſite to Arlingham. The river, at high water, is about a mile over, or ſomething leſs. Perſons well acquainted with the river, ride, and drive a carriage over the ford at this place, at low water; but ſome have miſcarried in the attempt.

The name, reſolved into its parts, and compared with the alphabetical liſt of words for explaining the names of places, will be found to ſignify a village, or town, upon the meadows; the letter l ſerving only for the ſake of ſound. And this is exactly agreeable to the ſituation of the place, which lies in the upper level, and has 738 acres of land, more particularly ſubject to inundations from the Severn.

The air is made very unwholeſome by the copious humid exhalations from the river, and from the lands which are ſo frequently overflowed. This occaſions inveterate agues, and all thoſe topical diſorders incident to a low, damp ſituation, in which the poorer ſort of people, who live hard, have ſo manifeſtly the diſadvantage in point of health. In Holland, where agues are very frequent, ſuch as go abroad early in the morning, uſually fortify themſelves againſt the moiſt air, by taking a dram, and a cruſt of bread, a diſh of coffee, ſome gingerbread, or the like, which is thought to be a good method of preſervation.

Notwithſtanding the ſituation of this village upon the Severn, fiſh is not ſo commonly the food of its inhabitants as might be imagined, on account of the great price it uſually bears. Salmon, in the greateſt plenty of the ſeaſon, commonly ſells for three pence half penny or four pence a pound. I took ſome notice, about two years ago, of an eel, juſt taken, five feet ten inches long, and twenty-eight pounds weight, which a butcher was ſtripping at this village, and thought it a great curioſity; but ſeveral perſons informed me, that there was nothing extraordinary in it, as a man, then living in the place, had taken one which weighed ſix ſcore pounds. The fleſh of this animal was ſold to poor people at two pence a pound. It was very white, but of a ſtrong, naſty ſmell, and muſt be unwholeſome food.

There are no rare plants found here, but large quantities of wood are frequently dug out of the meadows next Frethorn, which, when dry, falls to pieces on touching it. This wood muſt have been carried thither at a very early period of time, when the ground was in a boggy ſtate, ſo as to ſuffer the logs to ſink down to the depth whence they are now taken.

There is a good proſpect over the Severn, from Barrow-hill, in this pariſh, ſo called, perhaps, from the reſemblance it bears to a large tumulus, or barrow.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Arlingham was antiently a member of the great lordſhip of Berkeley. In the liſt of eſtates belonging to that lordſhip, entered in Domeſday-book, it is ſaid, that nine hides in Erlingham belong to Berchelai. Hence I conclude, there were other lands beſide the nine hides, which belonged to one or more freeholders at that time; and the ſubſequent records, taking early notice of various proprietors of manors in this pariſh, ſerve to juſtify the concluſion. The following particulars are drawn from the records:

Maurice lord Berkeley died ſeized of the manor of Erlingham 9 E. 1. and left it to ſir Robert Berkeley, his ſecond ſon; whoſe ſon and heir, John Berkeley, died ſeized thereof, 14 E. 2. leaving four daughters coheireſſes.

The abbat of St. Auguſtin in Briſtol was ſeized of the manor of Erlingham, with court-leet, and of lands called Kern and Bethlea, in Erlingham, 15 E. 1. and his right was allowed in a Quo warranto the ſame year.

Walter de Thornhall, in the right of Elizabeth his wife, was ſeized of the third part of the manor of Arlingham, and of a fiſhery in the Severn. They jointly levied a fine of their eſtate, and ſettled it on themſelves in fee-tail, the remainder on James, the ſon of Elizabeth by her former huſband, 29 E. 3.

Geoffery le Mareſchal held Erlingham 32 E. 3.

John At-Yate was ſeized of the manor of Erlingham, 41 E. 3. This is the ſame perſon who, by by the name of John de Yate, was aſſigned, with four others, to view and repair the banks and drains of the lands bordering on the Severn, betwixt Briſtol and Glouceſter, 33 E. 3.

Agnes, widow of ſir Thomas Bradeſtone, was poſſeſſed of a manor here, 43 E. 3. And Thomas Bradeſtone, grandſon of Thomas, died ſeized of it, 48 E. 3. and left Elizabeth his only daughter and heireſs, married to ſir Walter de la Pool.

Richard Seimour was probably a truſtee of the Bradeſtones, as he was ſeized of this manor, together with Stinchcombe and Horton, both belonging to the Bradeſtones, 2 H. 4. which ſoon after reverted to them again; for

Sir Walter de la Pool, and Elizabeth his wife, daughter and heireſs of Thomas Bradeſtone, were ſeized of one meſſuage and one yard-land in Erlingham, 12 H. 6. and ſir Edward Ingoldſthorp was ſeized of this manor, and of the other eſtates mentioned before, as belonging to the Bradeſtones, 35 H. 6. After this time, I find nothing more of that family in Arlingham.

I now return to the family of the Berkeleys, who were lords of the manor of Arlingham. Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, married Elizabeth, the only child of Thomas lord Berkeley, with whom he had this manor, and died ſeized of Arlingham 17 H. 6. He had three daughters, of whom, Margaret, the eldeſt, married to John Talbot, the firſt earl of Saliſbury, died ſeized of Erlingham, 7 E. 4.

William marquis of Berkeley having no iſſue, and taking a diſlike to his brother Maurice, who ſhould have ſucceeded him, levied a fine of the manor of Arlingham, and of other lands in that pariſh, to Edward Willoughby, and Robert Legg, 3 H. 7. and granted them to the king and his heirs male, with remainder to the right heirs of the ſaid marquis; ſo that at the death of king E. 6. (who was the laſt male heir of king H. 7.) this manor reverted to Henry lord Berkeley, who had livery thereof 1 & 2 P. & M.

But there was another reputed manor in this pariſh, part of the poſſeſſions of the abbey of Flaxley, and after the diſſolution of that houſe, was granted to ſir Anthony Kingſton, 36 H. 8. and is mentioned in the grant to be of the clear yearly value of 5*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.*

The manor of Arlingham came afterwards into the family of the Weſtwoods; for Robert Weſtwood, on the death of his father, had livery of [illegible], 1 Eliz.

From them it paſſed to the family of the Yates, who came into England at the Norman conqueſt, and have reſided in Glouceſterſhire ever ſince. They had eſtates, ſoon after their coming, at Purſley, Flaxley, Cam, &c. and particularly at Erlingham, as appears by antient deeds, wherein —— de la Yate grants lands in Erlingham, in the reign of king John; and one of their anceſtors gave part of the ground on which the church is built, and the parſon, at this time, pays a yearly rent to the proprietor of the manor, in acknowledgement thereof.

John at Yate married Margaret, the youngeſt daughter of John Berkeley, (who died, as already obſerved, 14 E. 2.) and in her right became ſeized of an eſtate in Erlingham; and dying, was ſucceeded by his ſon John. He alſo left a ſon John, who died ſeized of the bailiwick of Abbenhall, in the foreſt of Dean, and of lands in Walmore, and Littlemore, in the pariſh of Weſtbury, and of lands in Durſley, Hatherley, and Arlingham, 41 E. 3. William Yate was his ſon, who had two ſons, Richard and Walter. Richard dying without iſſue, Walter ſucceeded his brother, and married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Wye, eſq; by whom he had a ſon Thomas Yate, whoſe ſon was Richard Yate, who had a ſon Richard, whoſe ſon Walter Yate was high-ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire in the year 1696.

Richard Yate ſucceeded Walter, and married Elizabeth, one of the daughters and coheireſſes of Thomas Price, eſq; mayor of Glouceſter, by whom he had two ſons, Charles and John; and three daughters, Elizabeth, Joyce, and Mary, the two laſt dying infants; which John ſettled at Colthorp, in the pariſh of Standiſh, in this county.

Charles Yate, ſon and heir of Richard, married Mary, daughter and coheireſs of —— Hickes, eſq; by whom he had iſſue one only child, John, and died in the year 1738; whereby this manor and eſtate devolved to his ſon, who alſo dying unmarried in the year 1758, the male line of this antient family is extinct. The widow of Charles Yate, eſq; is the preſent proprietor of this manor, who hath a handſome houſe called the Court, with pleaſant gardens, and a park, and a large eſtate in this pariſh. The arms of Yate are, Azure, a feſs Or, in chief two mullets of the ſecond.

Of the other eſtates, the records ſhew, that Elianor, dutcheſs of Somerſet, married to Thomas lord Rouſe, was ſeized of lands in Arlingham, formerly belonging to Thomas lord Berkeley, 7 E. 4. Thomas Baker levied a fine of lands in Arlingham to John Eſterfield, John Walch, and others, 9 H. 7. And Thomas Pany, and Catherine his wife, levied a fine of lands in Arlingham, 16 H. 7. William Warner alſo levied a fine of lands in Arlingham, in the 17th year of the ſame reign. Lands in Arlingham which belonged to the abbey of St. Auguſtin in Briſtol, were granted to the dean and chapter of that place, 34 H. 8.

HAMLETS. 1. Overton, which lies a mile from the church.

2. Milton End, of two or three families.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Glouceſter, worth 76*l.* a year. Roger lord Berkeley gave this church to the priory of Leonard Stanley. The rectory and church of Arlingham were granted to ſir William Rider, 7 Jac. Mr. Bridgman

Bridgman hath lately ſold the advowſon of the vicarage, and the impropriation, to Mrs. Elizabeth Rogers, who hath a good eſtate in this pariſh, purchaſed of the family of Bycke. Mr. Davis is the preſent incumbent. The impropriation pays 15*l.* a year to the crown. The church is a long building, with a tower at the weſt end, and ſix muſical bells. It is dedicated to the virgin Mary. Lands let for 40*s.* a year are given to adorn the church.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

Againſt the wall, between the body of the church and the chancel, ſtands a grey marble monument, in the form of an obeliſk, over which are the arms of Yate, with quarterings, pretty much defaced. The motto, QUO VIRTUS VOCAT. There is an urn in front, with feſtoons, and other decorations, and a table beneath bears the following inſcription:

Near this Place lyeth the Body of Charles Yate, Eſq; who died the 11th of Nov. 1738, aged 46.

He was one of his Majeſties Juſtices of the Peace, likewiſe Deputy Lieutenant of this County: He diſcharged with Juſtice & Equity to all, and with Honour and Reputation to himſelf, the Offices of a Magiſtrate and a Chriſtian: His Authority might have made him reſpected whilſt alive; but it was the peculiar ſweetneſs and affability of his Manners, his great kindneſs and humanity to all, his agreeable Chearfulneſs of Diſpoſition, annexed to a virtuous Mind, which could alone render him ſo truly regretted when dead.

Againſt the north wall of the church ſtands another marble monument, with the coat armour of Yate, and motto, as before. In front, a female figure, kneeling, holds an anchor in her right hand, in her left a heart inflamed. Upon a table it is thus inſcribed:

Here lyeth the body of John Yate, Eſq; Lord of this Manor, the laſt Heir Male of his Family, and only Son of Charles Yate, Eſq; He was in the Commiſſion of the peace, one of the Deputy Lieutenants of this County, and Deputy Conſtable of St. Briavell's Caſtle. Deſcended from a long Race of worthy Anceſtors, He improved his native Virtues with every amiable Qualification that gains the Love and Veneration of Mankind. A lively Senſe and uniform Practice of Religion, accompanied with Candor, Affability, and Sweetneſs of Temper, filled him with Joy and inward Satisfaction. Charity, Compaſſion, and univerſal Benevolence, chiefly directed and diſpoſed of his ample Fortune. Of pureſt Morals, of an irreproachable Life, of filial Affection, of Sincerity in Friendſhip, of true Honour, of Integrity of Heart, He was an uncommon Example. With this admirable Aſſemblage of Virtues, joined to a polite Taſte of Literature, the Scholar in him perfected the Gentleman, as the Chriſtian perfected the man.

In the Flower of Youth, expecting, but not fearing Death, He willingly reſigned his Soul to God on the 24th of May, 1758, aged 27. To whoſe ever dear and honoured Memory, this Monument is erected, by his moſt truly affectionate and much afflicted mother, M. Y.

On flat ſtones are memorials for Richard Yate, eſq; who died Nov. 2, 1661, aged 78; for Colonel Richard Yate, who died June 17, 1701, aged 41; for his wife, Elizabeth, daughter of major Price, who died July 14, 1705, aged 40, and two of their daughters, Joyce and Mary, both infants; and for Charles Yate, eſq; who died Nov. 11, 1738, aged 46.

Benefactions.

Here is a free-ſchool endowed with 40*l.* a year, of which the following inſcription, on a table in the front of the ſchool-houſe, exhibits the particulars:

John Yate, Eſq; by Virtue of his Will, endowed this School, which charity was carried on by his parent, who ſurvived him. And in the year 1768, ſhe erected this building at her own Expence for the Benefit of the ſame. And by the Authority that was inveſted in her, ſhe compleated the Endowment in her Life-Time.

Thomas Liſton, merchant, has given 10*s.* a year to the poor, paid out of Woolcroft, in this pariſh.

The inhabitants of Arlingham, in their turn with other pariſhes, have a right of ſending two perſons to a hoſpital at Warwick, founded 13 Eliz. by Robert Dudley, earl of Leiceſter, of the Berkeley family; who founded the hoſpital for twelve poor men hurt in the wars, and if no ſuch, then Erlingham to have the benefit.

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, when he publiſhed his account of this pariſh, there were 80 houſes and about 400 inhabitants, of whom 25 were freeholders. The yearly births were 14, burials 11. But in a ſeries of ten years, from 1700 to 1709 incluſive, there appear to be entered in the pariſh regiſter 161 baptiſms and 121 burials, and in a like ſeries, from 1760 to 1769, there were entered 116 baptiſms and 110 burials. The number of inhabitants is 372, i. e. nearly in the proportion of 34 to 1 of the annual burials; which ſhews the declining ſtate of population.

ASHCHURCH.

THIS pariſh is ſituate in the vale, in the lower part of the hundred of Tewkeſbury, diſtant two miles eaſtward from the town which gives name to the hundred; about ſeven weſt from Winchcombe, and eleven northward from Glouceſter. It is bounded on the eaſt by Teddington in Worceſterſhire, and by Beckford in this county; on the weſt by Tewkeſbury; on the north by the river Caran, or Carant; and on the ſouth by the pariſhes of Cleeve and Tredington. It conſiſts of rich meadow and paſture, with a conſiderable proportion of deep arable land. The turnpike-road from Tewkeſbury to London leads thro' it; before the gates were erected it was almoſt impaſſable.

This pariſh was antiently, and ſtill is, divided into tithings, or hamlets, diſtinguiſhed by the names of Eſtone, or Eſſetone, Pamintonie, Fiterstone, and Natone, ſomething different in orthography graphy from the modern names. In the time of king Edward the Confeſſor, they were members of the great manor of Tewkeſbury. Eſtone was ſo called, becauſe it was ſituate in the eaſt part of the pariſh; and the pariſh obtained the name of Eſtchurch, or Eaſtchurch, becauſe the church lay eaſtward from the town of Tewkeſbury; but in proceſs of time, by a vicious pronunciation, the name hath been corrupted to Aſhchurch, as we now write it.

In the tithing of Northway and Newton there is a ſpring of purgative mineral water, which, about thirty years ago, the town of Tewkeſbury endeavoured to improve to its advantage. They erected a pump over the well, and ſome of the water was uſed medicinally; but it ſoon fell into neglect, as being too near to Cheltenham ſpaw to ſucceed at the ſame time. The properties of both waters are ſaid to be nearly alike.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

In the time of king Edward the Confeſſor, the lands in this pariſh were held by ſeveral tenants, under the great but unfortunate Brictric, the ſon of Algar, except only a ſmall portion which belonged to the church of Tewkeſbury. At the time of the conqueſt, they were taken from Brictric by W. 1. and given to his queen; and were afterwards poſſeſſed by the ſame proprietors who held the manor of Tewkeſbury, down to the reign of king E. 6. But the particulars will beſt appear under the heads of the ſeveral tithings.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. Northway and Newton. The records ſhew that William de Valentia was ſeized of this manor, by the gift of Robert de Pont de Larch, 36 H. 3. But it reverted afterwards to the lords of Tewkeſbury[a]. George duke of Clarence, in right of Iſabel his wife, daughter of Anne counteſs of Warwick, was ſeized of Northy, 18 E. 4. And Anne counteſs of Warwick levied a fine of this manor, and of all her eſtates, to the king, 3 H. 7.

The manor of Northy was granted to Robert earl of Leiceſter, and to John Morley, 23 Eliz. and afterwards in the ſame reign, Thomas Cox, of Cleeve, eſq; became the proprietor of it. His grandſon, ſir John Cox, had a ſon and daughter, to whom this eſtate deſcended, who dying without iſſue, it went, by the gift of the daughter, to her mother. She ſettled it on Elianor, niece of ſir John Cox, married to John Stafford, eſq; from whom it deſcended to his ſon Henry Stafford; from whom whoſe family it paſſed by purchaſe to Thomas Hayward, of Quedgley, eſq; who is the preſent lord of the manor of Northway and Newton.

Lands in Northy were granted to Francis Maurice, and Francis Philips, in truſt for ſir William Rider and others, 7 Jac.

2. Pamington, containing about 22 houſes. Domeſday-book ſhews that there were eight hides in Pamintonie, belonging to the manor of Tewkeſbury, in the reign of king Edward the Confeſſor.

King W. 2. granted court-leet, waifs, and felons goods in Pamington to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, which privileges were allowed them in a writ of Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. but yet notwithſtanding, the manor was afterwards in the lords of Tewkeſbury. George duke of Clarence was ſeized of it in right of Iſabel his wife. And Anne the great counteſs of Warwick, levied a fine of it to the king, 3 H. 7. This manor was granted from the crown to Anne Forteſcue, widow of ſir Adrian Forteſcue, and to the heirs male of ſir Adrian, 5 Mariæ. Lord Craven is the preſent owner of it.

3. Fiddington, containing about 20 houſes. It is ſaid in Domeſday-book, that there were 'ſix hides 'in Fitentone belonging to the manor of 'Teodecheſberie. A radecheniſter held two hides 'in Fitentone, now Bernard holds them.'

'The underwritten lands belong to the church 'of Teodecheſberie. In Fitentone two hides. 'There is one villein, and two coliberti, with two 'plow-tillages. It was worth and is worth 10*s*. 'One of theſe hides was quit from tax.' Domeſday-book, p. 68.

Fiddington, Aſhton in Clifford Chambers, and Porton, were held by knight's ſervice of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Glouceſter and Hertford, 8 E. 2. Roger de Acton held Fiddington 35 E. 3. But the lords of Tewkeſbury were afterwards proprietors of this manor, 'till Anne counteſs of Warwick levied a fine of it to king H. 7. in the third year of his reign. Sir Thomas Seimour obtained a grant of the manor of Fiddington, lately the earl of Warwick's, 1 E. 6. and this manor and other lands, were granted to John earl of Warwick, in exchange for Warwick-caſtle, 3 E. 6.

There was another manor in Fiddington, which belonged to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, from before the conqueſt, 'till that houſe was diſſolved. And this laſt mentioned manor was granted to Daniel Perte and Alexander Perte, 7 E. 6.

Robert Aſhton levied a fine of the manor of Fiddington to Henry Moody, 2 Mariæ. Thomas Cluterbuck, in right of his wife Elizabeth, died ſeized of the manor of Fiddington, 15 Car. Thomas Kemble, eſq; is the preſent lord of this manor.

The records ſhew that John Coal died ſeized of Hall's Court in Fiddington, 16 H. 8. And that James Gunter, and Anne his wife, levied a fine of lands in Fiddington, to Thomas Berew, and Margaret his wife, 1 Mariæ.

Natton lies in this tithing. Domeſday-book ſhews, that three hides and a half in Natone were held of the manor of Tewkeſbury. The capital meſſuage of Natton, with divers lands, meadows, and paſtures in Natton, parcel of the poſſeſſions of the late monaſtery of Tewkeſbury, were granted to John Bellow, and Robert Biggot, 38 H. 8. Stevens's App. p. 9.

[a] What ſir Robert Atkyns hath ſaid of the abbeſs of Iſwis, the knights Templers, and of John de Berkeley, being ſeized this manor, was occaſioned by his having miſtaken ſeveral different places for this, on account of the reſemblance of name; as Newington Bagpath, Newington in Winchcombe, and the pariſh of Naunton.

4. Aſton, or Aſton upon Caran, containing about 22 families. The manor, and capital meſſuage and lands called Aſhchurch, late belonging to Richard earl of Warwick, were granted to ſir Ralph Fane, 1 E. 6. but they were afterwards in the crown, for other records ſhew, that the manor and farm of Aſhchurch were granted to William Hawtree, 7 E. 6. John Harrington had livery of this manor, 20 Eliz. Thomas Hughes, eſq; was lord of it in the year 1608. But Aſton is now the eſtate of Henry Wakeman, of Beckford, eſq; The manor court has been diſcontinued time out of mind.

John Pullen and Alice his wife were ſeized of lands in Aſton upon Carent, 1 R. 2. And John Karante was likewiſe ſeized of lands in Aſton Karante, 6 R. 2. A meſſuage called Caran's Place and Caran's Mill, in Aſhchurch, was granted to Dorothy Darel, and to George Treſham, 36 H. 8. Lands in Aſton upon Carent, which belonged to the alien priory of Belbeck, and afterwards to the college of Fotheringhay, were granted to ſir Edward Lee, 1 E. 6.

Haman's Downs, (ſo called from Robert Fitz-Haman, lord of Tewkeſbury, and proprietor of a vaſt eſtate in this country) is a ſmall hamlet in this pariſh. Livery of the manor of Homeſdown, and Nether Homeſdown, was granted to Thomas Lane, 3 E. 6. Hamand Downs in Aſhchurch, lately belonging to Thomas lord Seimour, were granted to Chriſtopher Hatton, in exchange for lands in Hampſhire, 18 Eliz.

Each of the four tithings has a diſtinct overſeer, tithing-man, and ſurveyor.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Winchcombe. John Parſons, eſq; patron; the reverend Mr. John Dark is the preſent incumbent, who at viſitation is ſtiled rector of Aſhchurch.

Tithes in Aſhchurch, Northway, Newton, Cardiff, Pamington, and Aſhton, formerly belonging to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, were granted to Thomas Stroud, Walter Earl, and James Paget, 36 H. 8.

The rectory of Aſhchurch, and tithes of hay in Northy, and tithes in Aſton upon Carent, were granted to Daniel Perte, and Alexander Perte, 7 E. 6. And other tithes in Aſton upon Carent, which belonged to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, were granted to Francis Mauricé, and Francis Philips, in truſt for ſir William Rider, and others, 7 Jac.

Tithes of hay in the meadows called Tenants Meadow, and Pamington Doles, which belonged to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, were granted to Roger Manners, eſq; 18 Eliz.

The tithes which belonged to the college of Fotheringhay were granted to ſir Richard Lee, 1 E. 6.

The impropriator of Northway and Newton pays 8*l.* a year to the curate. The living has been augmented by queen Anne's bounty, and Mr. William Ferrers, by his will, gave 5*l.* a year to the curate, who ſhall ordinarily and weekly reſide in the pariſh, and preach; the payment of which is charged on his manor of Shellingthorpe, in Lincolnſhire. Mr. Scrimſhire has alſo given 12*l.* a year to the curate, charged on the impropriations of Tredington, and of Fiddington in this pariſh, of which a more particular account may be ſeen under Tewkeſbury. A ſmall houſe, and a little piece of paſture ground belong to the curacy.

The church is large, with battlements on the ſouth ſide. It hath a large aile on the north ſide, formerly called St. Thomas's chapel, and a handſome tower at the weſt end, adorned with pinnacles and battlements, and ſix ſmall bells in it.

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, about the year 1710, there were 77 houſes in this pariſh, and about 308 inhabitants, whereof 10 were freeholders. The yearly births 14, burials 13. But the following particulars are carefully extracted from the pariſh regiſter. In a ſeries of ten years, from 1700 to 1709 incluſive, there are entered 113 baptiſms and 94 burials. In a like ſeries from 1760 to 1769 incluſive, are 120 baptiſms and 108 burials. And there are about 436 inhabitants, ſo that the people have been increaſing in this pariſh ſince the beginning of this century.

ASHELWORTH,

IS a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Berkeley, though diſtant ten or twelve miles from any other part of that hundred. This is one of the ſeveral inſtances, occaſionally to be taken notice of in the courſe of this work, of the unnatural and inconvenient allotment of pariſhes to hundreds, which, by their ſituation, they have no connexion with. As to Aſhelworth, this irregularity aroſe in very early times, when the pariſh was firſt made a member of the great lordſhip of Berkeley, whoſe tenants were obliged to attend at the court of that hundred. It is ſeven miles eaſt from Newent, ſeven ſouthward from Tewkeſbury, and five northward from Glouceſter; ſituate on the weſt ſide of a gentle riſing ground called Cookſhill, which joins to Corſe; is watered by the Severn, on the eaſt; bounded by Hasfield, on the north; and on the ſouth by the pariſh of Hartpury.

The lands are chiefly meadow and paſture, with much clay in their compoſition, very ſuitable to orcharding, for which the pariſh hath formerly been diſtinguiſhed; but it is far otherwiſe at preſent.

The plantations remaining are old and decayed, and the nature of the tenure, (being leaſehold under a fluctuating proprietor) is unfavourable to planting, and every kind of improvement. The cottages and farm-houſes are ſuch as might be expected, miſerable hovels, generally covered with ſtraw, and in ruinous condition. The courſe of huſbandry, for they have ſome tillage land, is three crops, i. e. wheat, beans, wheat, and then fallow.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book it is expreſt, that three hides in Eſceleuuorde belong to Berchelai; and they were part of that lordſhip in the time of king Edward the Confeſſor.

Robert Fitz-Harding founded the monaſtery of St. Auguſtine, in Briſtol, and endowed it with this manor, which continued in that abbey 'till it was diſſolved in the reign of king H. 8. and the lands and poſſeſſions belonging to it, among which were the manor, the rectory, and the advowſon of the vicarage of Aſhelworth, were granted to the biſhop of Briſtol, at the firſt erection of that ſee, 34 H. 8. Thomas Hayward, of Quedgley, eſq; is the preſent leſſee under the biſhop, of the manor and impropriation; and holds a court-leet here.

HAMLETS. There are places or hamlets in this pariſh, of the following names. — 1. Longbridge. — 2. Knight's Green. — 3. Nupping-end. — 4. White-end. — 5. High Croſs. — 6. Wickeridge. — 7. Mare-end.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage in the deanery of Glouceſter, worth 40*l.* a year. The biſhop of Briſtol is patron and impropriator, and Mr. Edwards is the preſent incumbent. The vicar, who has a ſmall portion of the great tithes, repairs one part of the chancel.

The church hath two ailes, and a chancel by the ſide of the greater chancel, with a ſpire ſteeple at the weſt end. It is dedicated to St. Andrew.

ASTON-BLANK, or COLD ASTON,

IS a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Bradley, five miles north from Northleach; ſix ſouth-weſtward, upon the turnpike-road, from Stow; and twenty-two eaſtward, upon the ſame road, from Glouceſter.

Aſton, or Eaſton, is a name very commonly given to pariſhes and hamlets ſituated eaſtward from places which they have ſome relation to, or dependance upon. Sir Robert Atkyns's notion of its being derived from the aſh-trees growing here, is chimerical. The place lies on the eaſtern extremity of the hundred, and was therefore called Eſtone, as I find it written in the moſt antient record of the kingdom. Lying high, and much expoſed to the weather, gave riſe to the appellation of Cold; but I can render no account how it obtained the additional name of Blank. The air is good and healthy, and the lands are chiefly arable.

In the Camp-field, on the right hand of the road leading to Bourton on the Water, are intrenchments, now pretty much levelled, and a tumulus, or barrow, at a ſmall diſtance from them, which hath not been opened. I am informed that Roman coins have been found there, which indicate the works to be of that people; and probably ſerved as an advanced poſt to their ſtronger fortifications at Bourton.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

At the time of the general ſurvey, 'Drogo 'held ten hides in Eſtone, of the biſhop of Wor-'ceſter. Domeſday-book, p. 70.

There is another pariſh, near Marſhfield, called Cold Aſton, or Cold Aſhton, which, on account of the ſimilarity of name, ſir Robert Atkyns hath confounded with this, to which the following extracts from the records undoubtedly belong, as they can have no relation to the other, becauſe the abbey of Bath held that manor from before the Norman conqueſt, 'till that houſe was diſſolved.

Walter Baſkervil was ſeized of Cold Aſton, and dying 16 John, left Ralph Fitz-Nicholas his heir; whoſe ſon Robert died ſeized of it 1 E. 1. Ralph de Pipard was his heir and ſucceſſor, whoſe ſon Robert Pipard died ſeized of Cold Aſton 3 E. 2. And John Pipard levied a fine of the manor of Cold Aſton 4 E. 2.

Edmund le Boteler married the heireſs of this family of Pipard, and had with her the manor of Cold Aſton, which he held, with free warren, 9 E. 2. James Boteler, his ſon, was created earl of Ormond, and was ſeized of this manor 2 E. 3. In this name and family it continued down to James Boteler earl of Ormond, who was created earl of Wiltſhire, and was ſeized of the manor of Cold Aſton 1 E. 4. but being attainted, the manor was forfeited to the crown, and was granted to ſir Walter Devereux, and to his heirs male, the ſame year.

Sir Walter Devereux had married Anne, daughter and heireſs of William lord Ferrers of Chartley, and for his eminent ſervices againſt the houſe of Lancaſter, was advanced to be lord Ferrers by king E. 4. but was afterwards ſlain in Boſworth field, fighting for king R. 3.

Following the fortune of the crown, the manor of Cold Aſton reverted to the Botelers, on the ſucceſs of king H. 7. Thomas earl of Ormond, the laſt of that name who was proprietor of this manor, left no iſſue male, whereby it deſcended to his two daughters. Anne, the eldeſt, was married to ſir George St. Leger, and ſurviving her huſband, ſhe and her ſiſter Margaret Boteler had livery of it, 7 H. 8. The lady Anne dying, 24 H. 8. livery of the manor was then granted to ſir John St. Leger, her ſon and heir.

John Carter, eſq; was lord of this manor in the year 1608, in whoſe name and family it continued above a hundred years; but lady Doily is the preſent proprietor of it.

Lands lying in Aſton Little, within the pariſh of Cold Aſton, formerly belonging to the priory of Weſtwood in Kent, were granted by the crown to Robert Acton and Charles Acton, 30 H. 8.

Little Aſton farm, now let for 160*l.* a year, was the property of George Townſend, eſq; which he gave to Pembroke college, in Oxford.

Of

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Stow. The lord Chancellor is patron. Mr. James is the preſent incumbent. Edmund Waller, eſq; has the impropriation. The vicarage was worth about 30*l.* a year, but Mrs. Dorothy Vernon gave 200*l.* to augment the living, and a few years ſince, queen Anne's bounty was obtained for it, and the money is laid out on lands in the pariſh of Bourton on the Water. The vicar hath the tithes of hay, and the leſſer tithes.

The priory of Malvern formerly preſented to this church, which priory was founded by Aldwin a monk, 11 W. 1. for Benedictine monks, and was valued at the diſſolution at 98*l.* 10*s.* 9*d. ob.*

The church is dedicated to St. Mary, and hath a low tower, adorned with battlements, with five bells in it.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

There is a monument in the church againſt the wall, over which are the following arms: Party per pale, baron and femme. 1. Sable, two lions rampant combatant Or, armed and langued gules. 2. Or, two bendlets azure; between them in the dexter chief an eſchalop gules, for Tracy. Upon a table below, it is thus inſcribed:

In Memoriam Cl. Viri Ægidij Carter, olim de Swell Inferiori in hoc Comitatu Armigeri, Qui probitate Morum, fide et pietate in divinis, necnon erga principem inſignis, inter paucos quâ ſenectute vitam claudens, Deceſſit anno Ætatis ſuæ octogeſimo, viceſimo quarto die Martij Annoq; Dom. 1664.

Et præivit octo ante menſibus chariſſima ejus uxor Elizabetha, honeſtâ et ſplendidâ familiâ de Tracy orta, quæ una cum illo exaginta annos matrimonio vixit, uterq; cœleſtis regni, ne rurſus ſeparentur, participes.

Gyles Carter was the eldeſt Sonn of John Carter, of Nether Swell in the County of Glouceſter, Eſq; his two Brethren being John Carter of Charlton-Abbats, and William Carter of Breeſ-orton, in Oxfordſhire. He married Elizabeth the Daughter of ir Paul Tracy of Stanwell, & died without Iſſue.

In the chancel is this memorial:

In Memory of Samuel the Son of Joſhua Elyott, Clerk, and Elizabeth his Wife, daughter unto Edward Aylworth of Aylworth, in the county of Glouceſter, eſq; He died Aug. 1st, 1667. She died Ian. 17, 1672.

The Lord hath called Samuel hence,
Who Joſhua did ſucceed.
He feaſteth now on Joys divine,
Who here his Flock did feed.

Under the table is a ſcutcheon, parted per pale, he baron's ſide blank. On the ſiniſter ſide, rgent, a feſs ingrailed, between ſix billets gules, or Aylworth.

Within the rails of the chancel, upon a flat tone,

About the year 1710, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 25 houſes and about 120 inhabitants, whereof 6 were freeholders, in this pariſh; the yearly births 3, and burials 3. But examining the pariſh regiſter, I find that in a ſeries of ten years, from 1760 to 1769 incluſive, the baptiſms were 45, the burials 34; and the inhabitants having been numbered are found to be 171, ſo that population increaſes in this place; and the proportion of ſouls to the average number of yearly burials is as 50 to 1.

ASTON, or COLD ASTON,

IS a village in the hundred of Pucklechurch, bounded on the ſouth by Somerſetſhire; three miles weſt from Marſhfield, five north from Bath, five ſouth-eaſt from Sodbury, and thirty-four ſouth from Glouceſter. That part of the village where the church ſtands lies high, and much expoſed to the violence of the winds. The great road from London, through Marſhfield to Briſtol, leads thro' this place, at a ſmall diſtance from the church.

Sir Robert Atkyns's derivation of the name from the aſh trees growing here, is not founded on fact. The place is not remarkable for that kind of tree, nor indeed is Aſhton the proper name of it. The true and ſignificant name is Eaſton, or Aſton. In Domeſday-book it is written Eſcetone. It was ſo called from its ſituation in the hundred of Pucklechurch, being the moſt eaſterly village in that hundred. The prenomen Cold was given it on account of its expoſed ſituation, and to diſtinguiſh it from Eaſton near Briſtol, and another Eaſton in the neighbourhood of Bath.

The pariſh is about three miles in length, and a mile and a half in breadth. It conſiſts principally of arable land, with ſome paſture and woodland, but produces no remarkable plants nor foſſils. Part of Lanſdown is in this pariſh. Five ſprings, viz. Hameſwell, Bridewell, Romewell, Clintonſwell, and another large ſpring riſing in Monkwood, after joining their waters together, empty themſelves into the Avon; but none of them runs into the Boyd, as mentioned by ſir Robert Atkyns.

The following account is taken literally from that learned hiſtorian. About fourteen years ſince, [i. e. 1698] in this pariſh, as a perſon was plowing with oxen, one of the oxen faultered in a hole, which when the earth was removed from it, appeared like the tun of a chimney, through which ſeveral perſons have been let down, where they found a cavity in which one might walk above half a mile one way, and it is not known how far the other; and as they walked with candles, candles, they obſerved ſeveral ſuch tunnels aſcending towards the ſurface of the earth.

It is not ſaid what depth or what figure this cavity was of, particulars which might have given ſome light as to the uſe of it. Being on the ſpot, I was informed that the paſſage was from north-eaſt to ſouth-weſt, but the holes were all carefully ſtopt up to prevent accidents, ſo that I could not deſcend to view the place myſelf.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The particulars of the manor and other eſtates are as follow.

In Domeſday-book, under the head Terra Eccle' de Bade, it is expreſt after this manner:

'The ſame church holds Eſcetone, in Polcre-'cerce hundred. There are five hides, of which 'two are quit from geld, by the grant of king 'Edward and king William; but three are taxed. 'In demean is one plow-tillage, and three villeins, 'and three bordars, and one radcheniſter, having 'amongſt them three plow-tillages. There is one 'colibert, and a mill of fifty pence, and ſix acres 'of meadow. It is worth and was worth 4*l.* Domeſday-book, p. 71.

The abbey of Bath continued to enjoy this manor 'till that houſe was diſſolved; ſo that neither the Baſkervilles, nor any other of thoſe perſons mentioned by ſir Robert Atkyns as ſucceſſive lords of it, from the beginning of his account down to the 24th year of king H. 8. had the leaſt property here. The truth is, all that we find in that gentleman's hiſtory, concerning this manor, down to the thirty-ninth line of p. 229, relates to Aſton Blank, ſometimes alſo called Cold Aſton, and was placed to this pariſh by miſtake. This confuſion of names led ſir Robert into another miſtake of the ſame nature, for in his liſt of clerks and patrons of this church, four of them belong to Aſton Blank.

This manor, with the manor of Tatwick, and ſeveral woods in Hameſwell, Tatwick, and Cold Aſhton, and the advowſon of the church, were granted, after the diſſolution of the abbey of Bath, to ſir Walter Dennis, 32 H. 8.

John Stratford, eſq; died ſeized of this manor 7 E. 6. and livery of it was granted to his ſon Henry Stratford, who ſoon afterwards conveyed it to Mr. Pipwell, mayor and alderman of Briſtol, who died about the 15th year of queen Elizabeth; and his ſon Michael Pipwell had livery of the manor granted to him. John Pipwell, ſon of Michael, was lord of it in 1608, and ſold it to Mr. Gunning, mayor and alderman of Briſtol.

From him it deſcended to his ſon ſir Robert Gunning, who dying without iſſue, it came to his ſiſter and heir. She was married to ſir Thomas Langton, mayor and alderman of Briſtol, whoſe ſon Thomas Langton, eſq; was lord of this manor in 1712.

William Whittington, eſq; is the preſent proprietor, and has a ſeat here. He is deſcended from the Whittingtons of Pauntly, under which head are the arms and pedigree of that family.

HAMLET. Hameſwell is a hamlet in this pariſh, formerly belonging to the prior of Bath, who had free warren therein 5 E. 1. It was afterwards the property of the Pipwells, and is now the ſeat of Mr. Whittington, who has a good houſe there.

Turner's Court is a handſome old houſe, which had antiently a conſecrated chapel, now converted to prophane uſes. This ſeat formerly belonged to the Strouds, and by marriage became the property of Mr. Wyndham, of whom it was purchaſed by M. Gunning, the preſent proprietor.

The records ſhew that William Cheltenham was ſeized of lands in Abbot Eſton 40 E. 3. Sir Robert Atkyns places this abſtract under Abſton, but I apprehend it ſhould ſtand under this pariſh, the true name of which is Eaſton, and belonged to the abbat of Bath. The ſame author was alſo miſtaken in repreſenting Tatwick to be in this pariſh, whereas it is in that of Swanſwick, in Somerſetſhire.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Hawkeſbury. The priory of Bath formerly preſented to it. It is a rectory, worth 120*l.* a year. Mr. Whittington is patron, Mr. Caſwell the preſent incumbent. The glebe is above a hundred acres.

The church, which hath an aile on the ſouth ſide, and a low tower at the weſt end, is adorned with pinnacles and battlements. It has a flat roof, and was built by Thomas Key, rector thereof, and dean of Durham, who was buried in or near the chancel, where, on a braſs plate againſt the wall, is the following inſcription for him:

Egregius Rector Thomas cognomine Keius
Conditur hac celebri pertumulatus humo:
Qui totam hanc ſacram propriis ex ſumptibus Ædem
Conſtruxit, ſummi motus Amore Dei.
Obſecro concedat tali pro munere ſanctus
Trinus et unus ei celice Regne Deus.

The ſame perſon built the preſent parſonage houſe in 1509, but it has the appearance of greater antiquity. There is a confeſſionary in it, and it is ſaid, ſeven of the friars belonging to the abbey reſided there. Sir Bevil Granville, who was mortally wounded at the battle of Lanſdown in the civil wars, was carried to the parſonage houſe of this place, and died there.

About the year 1710, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 33 houſes in this pariſh, and about 142 inhabitants, whereof 4 were freeholders; yearly births 4, burials 3. But upon examining the pariſh regiſter, I find that in a ſeries of ten years, from 1700 to 1709 both incluſive, there were regiſtered 43 baptiſms and 31 burials; and in a like ſeries, from 1760 to 1769, were 73 baptiſms and 55 burials; and by actual numeration, there are now 38 houſes and 213 inhabitants; ſo that the people are increaſing in this pariſh, and the proportion of the living inhabitants to the average of yearly burials is nearly as 40 to 1.

ASTON SOMERVILE.

THIS pariſh lies in the lower part of the hundred of Kiftſgate, four miles diſtant ſouth from Eveſham in Worceſterſhire; ſeven north from Winchcombe, and twenty-four north-eaſt from Glouceſter. It is ſituated in the vale, about two miles weſt from the Cotſwold-hills above Buckland, with Hinton to the north-weſtward, Child's Wickham to the north-eaſt, and Wormington to the ſouthward of it.

Aſton or Eſtune is a relative name, given to this place from its ſituation in the old hundred of Greteſtan, and Somervile is the name of an antient proprietor of the manor, ſerving to diſtinguiſh the pariſh from two others of the ſame name, in this neighbourhood.

Serpentine-ſtones, Belemnites, petrifications of the nautulus, and of the cockle, with other foſſil ſubſtances, are commonly plowed and dug up in the fields and other parts of the pariſh, of which Mr. Reynalds, the late rector, ſhewed me ſeveral curious ſpecimens. And lately a ſalt-ſpring broke out here, which in future time may be worked to advantage, but as yet lies neglected. A brook running from this place falls into the Avon, at Hampton, near Eveſham.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book are the following particulars: 'The ſame Haſcoit [Muſard] holds Eſtune in Greteſtan hundred. There are ſix hides taxed. Erneſi held it. In demean are three plow-tillages, and twelve villeins with four plow-tillages, and nine ſervi and ancillæ. There is a mill of 8s. [value] and twenty acres of meadow. It was worth and is worth 6*l*.' Domeſday-book, p. 78.

The records ſhew that ſir John de Aſton Somerile held the manor of Aſton Somervile 35 H. 3. that this manor had obtained the name, and belonged to the family of Somervile ſoon after the Norman conqueſt.

Ralph Muſard held the manor of Eſton, 1 E. 1. and Maſculine Muſard, in truſt for the abbat of Eveſham, was ſeized of the manor of Aſton Somervile, with the advowſon of the church, 31 E. 1. But the manor ſoon reverted to the family who had been the former proprietors; for William Somervile, ſon of ſir John Somervile, gave a hundred marks fine, and was admitted lord of the manor of Somervile Aſton, with the advowſon of the church, 5 E. 2. and his ſon ſir William Somervile was ſeized of this manor 1 & 11 E. 3. They reſided in a large houſe moated round, near the ſouth ſide of the church, which has been long ſince demoliſhed, and there are ſcarcely any traces of it remaining.

Sir John Somervile, ſon and heir of the laſt ſir William, was ſucceeded by his ſon Robert, high ſheriff of this county in the year 1401. Thomas Somervile, a deſcendant of Robert, married Joan, daughter and heir of John Aleſbury, eſq; of Edſton in Warwickſhire, and died 16 H. 7. and from that time the family reſided in Warwickſhire.

Robert Somervile, ſon of Thomas, married Mary, daughter of John Grevil, of Milcot, and dying 29 H. 8. was ſucceeded by his ſon John, who married Elizabeth, daughter of William Corbet; and dying 20 Eliz. was alſo ſucceeded by his ſon John Somervile, who was ſeduced by his confeſſor to kill queen Elizabeth, and condemned for the attempt, in the twenty-fifth year of that reign, but was found ſtrangled in Newgate before the time appointed for his execution.

Sir William Somervile, brother to John, married Elizabeth, daughter of ſir Humphry Ferrers, of Tamworth caſtle; and dying in 1616, this eſtate deſcended to his ſon ſir William Somervile, who married Cicely, daughter and coheir of ſir John Shirley, of Iſfield in Suſſex. He died in 1628, and was ſucceeded by his ſon and heir William Somervile, who married Anne, daughter of Robert lord viſcount Tracy, of Todington. Robert Somervile was his ſon and ſucceſſor, whoſe ſon William Somervile, eſq; author of that well known and ingenious poem the Chaſe, ſold the reverſion of this eſtate to the late lord Somervile, who became poſſeſſed of it in the year 1742. His lordſhip dying in 1765, was ſucceeded in honour and eſtate by his eldeſt ſon, now lord Somervile, the preſent owner of this manor.

Sir Walter de Somervile, an anceſtor of this family, was of Norman extract, and came to England with the Conqueror. Roger de Somervile was ſummoned as a baron to parliament, and died 1 E. 3. Sir Philip de Somervile, ſon of Roger, was obliged by tenure to give a flitch of bacon, in his hall at Wicknore in Staffordſhire, to all who had been married a year, and would make oath that they had not repented of their marriage. He died 29 E. 3. and with him the barony was extinct.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden. It was worth 80*l.* a year. The glebe was forty acres; but in the year 1746, the rectory was conſiderably improved by incloſing the common fields and commonable places, when a rent-charge and a portion of land were ſet apart for the rector in lieu of tithes, by the common concurrence of the biſhop, the lord of the manor, (the only freeholder) and the rector. It is valued at 9*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* in the king's books. Lord Somervile is patron, Mr. William Somervile is the preſent incumbent. It antiently belonged to the abbey of Eveſham, whereby the demeans of the manor paid no tithes; and there was a ſmall impropriation, which belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe, granted to ſir Thomas Seimour, 1 E. 6.

The church was rebuilt in 1688, with a tower at the weſt end, adorned with pinnacles and battlements, and had four bells in it; but three being ſplit, were ſold ſome time ſince, and a church-clock, and a ſmall library of books for the uſe of the rector, purchaſed with the produce of them. Four ſmall parcels of land were given to repair the church. In the chancel window are the Somerviles arms, Argent, on a feſs between three annulets gules, as many leopards heads caboſhed Or.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

On the ſouth ſide of the old church was an aile, where the Somerviles had a burying-place, and there is now, in a niche on that ſide, a very antient figure, in ſtone, of a knight in armour, as large as life, repreſenting one of that family, who lived about the time of king Edward the Third, as may be judged from the ſculpture. This monument has been ſhamefully violated by the country people, who at ſheep-ſhearing have been ſuffered to whet their knives and ſhears againſt old Somervile's noſe, as they uſed to ſay, ſo that almoſt half the face is whetted away.

In the chancel is a memorial for John Parry, A. M. rector of the church fifty-four years, who died in 1714; and for his wife Rebecca, daughter of Thomas Fullwood, gent. of an antient family in Warwickſhire. Over the tablet are their arms, Baron and femme, 1. Argent, a feſs between three lozenges ſable, for Parry. 2. A chevron between three mullets, for Fullwood.

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 12 houſes and about 60 inhabitants, whereof 4 were freeholders, in this pariſh, when he compiled his account of it; yearly births 2, burials 1. But the pariſh regiſter ſhews, that in a ſeries of ten years, from 1700 to 1709 incluſive, there were 18 baptiſms and 18 burials; and in a like ſeries, from 1760 to 1769 incluſive, there are entered 15 baptiſms and 10 burials, beſides five or ſix more from Clifford, and other places; and there are 51 inhabitants, ſo that population appears to be decreaſing.

ASTON SUBEDGE.

THIS pariſh lies in the upper part of the hundred of Kiftſgate, ſix miles ſouth-eaſtward from Eveſham in Worceſterſhire, two north-weſtward from Campden, and thirty-one north-eaſt from Glouceſter. It derives its name from being ſituated eaſt from the neighbouring pariſh of Weſton, and lying under the edge of a hill adjoining to Campden. The pariſh conſiſts chiefly of arable lands, which were much in common field, 'till about three years ago they were incloſed by act of parliament. It produces no remarkable plants nor foſſils.

Mr. Endymion Porter, ſo much eſteemed in the courts of king James and king Charles the Firſt, was born in this pariſh, and died in the year 1652.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'The church of St. Mary de Lanheie holds 'Eſtune in Celfledeſtorn hundred. Goda the 'counteſs held it in the time of king Edward. 'There are four hides. In demean are three 'plow-tillages, and ſix villeins, and one knight 'with three plow-tillages and a half. There are 'ſix ſervi and three ancillæ. It was worth 100*s.* 'and is now worth 4*l.*' [b] Domeſday-book, p. 72.

Subſequent records ſhew that Margaret de Cormeiles held Eſton and Begſoure, 10 H. 3.

Sir Richard Stafford died ſeized of the manor of Aſton-under-edge, and of the advowſon of the church, 4 R. 2. and Maud his widow was ſeized thereof, 1 H. 4. Edward earl of Stafford held Aſton, 4 H. 4. Edward Stafford, biſhop of Exeter, was ſeized of the manor of Aſhton-under-edge, 7 H. 5.

Sir Chriſtopher Savage died ſeized of this manor 4 H. 8. and was ſucceeded by Chriſtopher his ſon and heir, whoſe ſon Francis Savage had livery of it, 37 H. 8.

The manor was in the crown in the year 1608, and was afterwards purchaſed by Richard Graves, eſq; and by him ſold to William Morgan, one of the ſix clerks in chancery, who married the daughter of Richard Graves. Richard Morgan the grandſon of the ſaid William, by his will bearing date May 29, 1740, bequeathed this manor, and others in this county to Morgan Graves, of Mickleton, eſq; whoſe ſon, Walwyn Graves, eſq; is the preſent lord of the manor. See Mickleton.

The hundred court for the upper part of Kiftſgate hundred is held here by Mr. Graves, to whom the royalty of that extenſive hundred deſcended with this manor. The common fines iſſuing out of each pariſh, ſpecified in the grant of royalty, are paid by the lord to the crown.

Thomas Freeman and Joan his wife levied a fine of lands in Aſhton-under-edge to Nicholas Cowley, 32 H. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, which was worth about 80*l.* a year; but is ſuppoſed to be much improved by the incloſing of the common fields a few years ago. It is valued in the king's books at 10*l.* 2*s.* 3½*d.* The reverend Mr. Feild is the preſent incumbent.

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 24 houſes, and about 104 inhabitants, whereof 10 were freeholders, in this pariſh; yearly births 4, burials 3. But in the laſt particular his account is erroneous, for in a ſeries of ten years, from 1700 to 1709 incluſive, there are regiſtered only 21 baptiſms, and 7 burials. In the year 1751, there were 31 houſholders, and 80 inhabitants; but the lands are now let into four farms, which made ſeven before the incloſing, and at this time (1773) there are only 20 houſholders, and 63 inhabitants.

ASTON-UNDER-HILL, or ASHTON-UNDER-HILL.

ONE part of this pariſh lies in the hundred of Tibbleſton, the other in the upper diviſion of that of Tewkeſbury. It is ſeven miles diſtant north-weſtward from Wichcombe, ſix north-eaſt from Tewkeſbury, five ſouth from Eveſham, and ſixteen north-eaſtward from Gloucester.

It was antiently a member of the manor of Beckford, and was called Eſtone, (and by corruption Aſton, and ſo in length of time deviating further from the true reading, Aſhton) from its ſituation to the eaſtward of that place. The additional name has alſo a local meaning, too obvious to need an explanation.

The pariſh conſiſts of a due proportion of paſture and arable land, with ſome wood-land. It hath lately been incloſed by act of parliament. Here is a ſpring of water pretty ſtrongly impregnated with iron; but the pariſh produces no remarkable plants, and only a few foſſils of the oiſter and muſcle kinds.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book, the account of this village ſtands under the title Terra Regis, and may be thus tranſlated:

'Turbertus, a thane of earl Harold, held Eſtone 'in Tetboldeſtane hundred. There are eight 'hides, and four plow-tillages in demean, and 'ten villeins, and four bordars, with ſix plow-'tillages. There are eight ſervi, and three ancillæ.

'Of theſe two vills [i.e. Beceford and Eſtone] 'earl William made one manor, and they were 'not put to farm 'till Roger de Lurei let them for '30*l.* The ſame earl gave the tithe and the 'churches, with two villeins, and three virgates 'of land to the abbey of Cormeile.' D. B. p. 69.

Sir Robert Atkyns places here, by miſtake, ſome abſtracts from the early records concerning Aſton Carant, in the pariſh of Aſhchurch.

King Henry the Eighth granted this manor to ſir Richard a Lee, who had two daughters coheireſſes, who made a partition of their eſtates; and the manor of Beckford, of which Aſton was a part, was ſold to ſir Richard Franklyn and Edward Wakeman. Sir Thomas Glover having purchaſed Franklyn's eſtate in Aſhton-under-hill, he, with Mr. Wakeman, took a freſh grant of the manor from the crown, in the reign of king James the Firſt, and afterwards by deed, reſerving to himſelf and his heirs certain manerial rights over his own lands, conveyed all other manerial rights over the reſidue of the manor, to Mr. Wakeman. Henry Wakeman, of Beckford, eſq; a deſcendant of that Mr. Wakeman, is the preſent lord of the manor, from whoſe ſon I received this account of the deſcent of it. See Beckford.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Campden. It is an impropriation, annexed to Beckford. In the biſhop's viſitation-book it is ſtiled the chapel of Aſhton, or Aſton-under-hill. Joſeph Biddle, M. A. is patron and incumbent. The impropriation pays 20*s.* a year to the crown.

The church hath a handſome tower, with pinnacles at the weſt end, and an aile on the north ſide.

AVENING.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Longtree, It is three miles ſouth from Hampton, three north from Tetbury, nine weſt from Cirenceſter, and fourteen ſouth from Glouceſter. A bourn runs through the middle of it, weſtward and north-weſtward, towards Horſley and Woodcheſter, and ſo on 'till it falls into the Froome, or Stroud river, and is carried with it into the Severn. Hence the name of Avening, from Afonig, the Britiſh word for a bourn.

The pariſh conſiſts chiefly of arable, with ſome wood lands and paſture ground. The clothing buſineſs furniſhes employment for the lower claſs of the inhabitants.

Edward Sheppard, eſq; has lately built a handſome houſe at Gatcombe in this pariſh, where he reſides, and has a large eſtate, and a park, called Gatcombe-park, one part of which lies in this pariſh, and the other in Hampton.

The antiquities of this place conſiſt of ſome tumuli, thrown up by the Danes or Saxons, or both, between whom there have certainly been various engagements hereabout, tho' hiſtory has not pointed out the preciſe ſpots where they happened. Two of thoſe tumuli, called the Barrow Tumps, are not far from Mr. Sheppard's houſe, and I have been informed that an old ſword was taken out of one of them, about twenty years ago. Two other tumuli, or barrows, lie on the road from this place to Hampton, with a ſtone placed on the top of each of them. The country people call them Long-ſtone, and Tangle-ſtone, and ſuppoſe them to bear the reſpective names of two generals who fell in battle in the Daniſh wars. They are undoubtedly monumental; the latter name ſeems to be no other than a corruption of Angle's-ſtone, i.e. the Engliſhman's ſtone, or monument; whilſt that erected upon the other barrow obtained the preſent appellation on account of the form of it, and was probably a memorial for the Daniſh captain. But the reader will obſerve that Long-ſtone is in the pariſh of Hampton.

The timber-wood of this pariſh and neighbourhood is chiefly beech, intermixt with oak and aſh. The beech wood is manufactured into gun-ſtocks, card-boards, and ſaddle-trees; and the refuſe converted into charcoal, or uſed for common fire wood. But there is no ſcarce plant nor remarkable foſſil found here.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

At the time of the general ſurvey, ſoon after the Conqueſt, this manor belonged to the king, and accordingly in Domeſday-book it ſtands under the title Terra Regis. It was a part of the large poſſeſſions of Brictric, who fell under the Conqueror's diſpleaſure, as will be ſhewn more largely under Tewkeſbury. After mentioning ſome other eſtates that formerly belonged to that unfortunate nobleman, it is expreſſed after this manner in the record:

'The ſame Brictric held Aveninge in Langetreu 'hundred: In the reign of king Edward there 'were ten hides, and eight plow-tillages in demean; 'and twenty-four villeins, and five bordars, and 'thirty ſervi, with ſixteen plow-tillages. There 'were four mills of [the rent of] nineteen ſhil-'lings and two-pence. The ſteward hath now 'added one mill of forty-pence. There is a wood 'two miles long, and half a mile broad. There is 'an hawk-aiery. It is worth 27*l.*' D. B. p. 69.

King William the Firſt probably gave this manor to the nuns of the abbey of Caen in Normandy, not long after he gave them Hampton, for they were the antient proprietors of it, and enjoyed it 'till the ſuppreſſion of alien monaſteries, in the ſecond year of the reign of king Henry the Fifth; after which it was given to the abbey of Sion, or Sheen in Middleſex, which was founded by that king for ſixty nuns of the order of St. Bridget, thirteen prieſts, four deacons, and eight lay brethren. It was dedicated to St. Saviour, St. Mary, and St. Bridget, and was the richeſt nunnery in England, being valued at the diſſolution at 1731 l. 8 s. 4½ d. When king Henry the Seventh built his palace at Sheen, he gave it the name of Richmond, which it has retained ever ſince.

At the general diſſolution of monaſteries, Avening fell to the crown, and king Henry the Eighth, in the 34th year of his reign, granted it to Andrew lord Windſor, in exchange for the manor of Stanwell near Windſor, which had been in the family of the Windſors ever ſince the Norman conqueſt. Walter their anceſtor aſſumed the name of Windſor on his being conſtituted conſtable of the caſtle of that place, in the reign of king Henry the Firſt. William lord Windſor, ſon and heir of Andrew, had livery of this manor 35 H. 8. Thomas lord Windſor was proprietor of it in the year 1608. Thomas lord Windſor (grandſon to the former by his eldeſt daughter married to Dixey Hickman) ſold it to

Mr. Samuel Sheppard, who was ſucceeded by his ſon Philip Sheppard, of Hampton in this county, eſq; from whom it deſcended to his ſon and heir Samuel Sheppard. Samuel Sheppard, ſon of the laſt Samuel, ſucceeded to this eſtate, whoſe ſon Samuel Sheppard, eſq; dying in the year 1770, without male iſſue, this manor came to his only brother Edward Sheppard, eſq; the preſent proprietor of it. His arms are, Ermine, on a chief ſable three battle axes argent.

As to other eſtates, the records ſhew, that John Hewet levied a fine of lands in Avening to William Webb, 1 E. 6. And ſome lands in Avening, which belonged to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, were granted granted by the crown to Daniel Pert and Alexander Pert, 7 E. 6. in truſt for other perſons.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. Nailſworth, about a mile and a half weſtward from the church, is a populous tithing containing upwards of 60 houſes. Catherine, the widow of Thomas Leach, was ſeized of the manor of Nailſworth 8 H. 5.

2. Aſton, ſo called on account of its being ſituated eaſtward from the church, is a conſiderable eſtate, formerly for many generations belonging to a family of the name of Driver. It came afterwards to Richard Breresford, eſq; and then by purchaſe to Mr. Matthew Sloper of Tetbury, who ſold it to Thomas Eſtcourt of Shipton, eſq; the preſent poſſeſſor.

Loſemore farm is a reputed manor. It was granted by king Henry the Eighth to Andrew lord Windſor. William lord Windſor had livery of it, 35 H. 8. It came afterwards into the Driver family, then to Mr. Richard Breresford; and was purchaſed by the before-mentioned Mr. Sloper, whoſe executors are the preſent proprietors.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory in the deanery of Stonehouſe, worth upwards of 200*l.* a year. There was formerly a chapel at Nailſworth, and another at Aſton. Edward Sheppard eſq; is patron, —— Saluſbury Heaton, A. M. the preſent incumbent. It is ſaid in chancellor Parſons's ſurvey of the dioceſe of Glouceſter, (a manuſcript in the Bodleyan library) that the rector pays 25*o*l. to the patron, I ſuppoſe he means at his preſentation, but of this matter I have had no further information. Eight acres of meadow and paſture, and 123 acres of arable land, with ten cottages, belong to the glebe.

The abbeſs of Caen in Normandy formerly preſented to this church, as did the abbeſs of Sion in the year 1488.

The church ſtands on the ſide of a riſing piece of ground. It is built in the form of a croſs, with a low embattled tower in the middle, having five bells.

Dr. Frampton, rector of this church, was made biſhop of Glouceſter: and Dr. Bull, alſo rector of this church, was made biſhop of St. David's.

Sir Robert Atkyns, whoſe Hiſtory of Glouceſterſhire was publiſhed in the year 1712, reckons 160 houſes, and about 600 inhabitants in this pariſh, and ſets down the yearly births at 16, and the burials at 15; but it appears by the pariſh regiſter, that in a ſeries of ten years, from 1706 to 1715, there were 179 baptiſms and 127 burials; and in a like ſeries, from 1760 to 1769 incluſive, there were regiſter'd 241 baptiſms and 214 burials; and reckoning the proportion of the number of living inhabitants to the number of annual burials, as 40 to 1, which will be found to be a moderate computation in healthy ſituations, the whole number of ſouls in this pariſh will then be 856. But this account, drawn from the pariſh regiſter, falls ſhort of the true number of births and burials, for there are three diſſenting meeting-houſes in the pariſh and neighbourhood, at which ſome of the inhabitants are buried, and at two of them there is adminiſtration of baptiſm. From theſe circumſtances it appears that population is greatly increaſed here ſince the beginning of the laſt century.

A W R E.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Blideſloe, in the foreſt diviſion, ſituate on the north-weſt bank of the Severn; four miles ſouth-weſtward from Newnham, ſeven ſouthward from Mitchel-Dean, and ſixteen ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter. It is about four miles in length, and nearly as much in breadth, conſiſting of arable, paſture, and ſome woodland. A rivulet ſeparates it on one ſide from Newnham, and Linch-brook divides it on the other from the pariſh of Lidney. It lies in the upper level.

The ſoil in many places is of a reddiſh yellow, which gave occaſion to the name, for Aure in the Britiſh language ſignifies yellow.

At this place the Severn is above two miles over, tho' a little higher not more than half ſo wide. Oppoſite the church, lies the bar of ſands called the Nooſe, which formerly rendered the navigation ſo difficult, that nobody durſt attempt it without a pilot. Upon the tide's firſt approach to theſe ſands, it foams and makes a hideous noiſe. The air is not very good, becauſe of the frequent irruption of the tides, which have ſometimes flowed over the ſea-wall three feet perpendicular.

There is a common near the river, called the Old Warth, above a mile long, and about half a mile broad.

This is an antient village, formerly much more conſiderable than at preſent, for tradition will have it that there was once a large town of the name of Pomerton within it, of which there is ſcarce any thing left but the name. Domeſday-book mentions Pontune and Peritone, in Bliteſlau hundred, to which it is ſaid earl William joined the manor of Neſt. Now as Pirton and Naſs are contiguous to this pariſh, it ſeems not unlikely that Pontone was ſituated near them, and was very probably the ſame with the above deſolated town of Pomerton, with only a little variation in the name; but more of this matter under the tithing of Blakeney.

Thomas Sternhold, who verſified ſome of the Pſalms, was a native of this place. It is ſaid that his poſterity turned papiſts.

The names of Adeane, Bathern, Keddick, and Berkin are of great antiquity in this neighbourhood.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Awre was part of the antient demeſnes of the crown. Domeſday-book furniſhes the following particulars:

'King

'King Edward held Aure in Bliteſlau hundred. There are five hides, and in demean one plow-tillage, and twelve villeins, and eight bordars, with fourteen plow-tillages. There is one ſervus, and a mill of 30*d.* and a ſalt-work of [the rent of] thirty ſeams of ſalt, and a church with one yard-land.

'This manor paid half a night's farm in the time of king Edward, and it does the ſame now.

'Half a hide of this manor lies waſte, and ſo pays only 12*l.* to the ſheriff, but nevertheleſs it pays all the farm.

'There are three members ſeparated from the manor, which were, and ought always to be within it, as the men of the county ſay, i. e. Peritone, Eteſlau, Bliteſlau. In theſe are ſeven hides, and in demean one plow-tillage, and twenty villeins, and three bordars, with thirteen plow-tillages, and two ſervi, and a fiſhery.

'Peritone is in fee to earl William. Roger de Berchelai holds Etelau. William the ſon of Baderon holds Bliteſlau. Aluui the ſheriff put theſe out of farm.' Domeſday-book, p. 67.

It appears by an inquiſition 4 E. 1. that the manor of Aure was in the crown in the reign of king Henry the Firſt. But there have been ſeveral diſtinct manors in this pariſh, of the ſame name, otherwiſe the records are contradictory. Henry de Bohun held Awre 1 John, and releaſed all his right therein to the king.

In the fifth year of the ſame reign, Walter de Awre had a grant of the manor of Awre for his life. This family took their name from the place, and continued poſſeſſed of a manor here 'till the end of the reign of Edward the Third.

Yet other records ſhew, that William earl of Saliſbury was ſeized of Awre 3 H. 3.

Richard Marſhal earl of Pembroke had a grant of the inheritance of the hundred of Awre 17 H. 3. by which it ſhould ſeem that this place gave name to a hundred, nevertheleſs I ſuppoſe it to have been no other than the hundred of Blideſlow, which was a member of the manor of Awre.

Philip Baderon was ſeized of Awre 6 E. 1. and of one yard-land in Awre 15 E. 1. and of one meſſuage and thirty acres of land 30 E. 1. John Baderon was ſeized of Awre, and of a fiſhery in the Severn, 6 E. 3.

In obedience to the king's writ, the ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire returned, that Thomas Berkeley, ſen. Maurice Berkeley, and Margaret Mortimer had the lordſhip of Awre, 9 E. 1. Roger de Mortimer earl of March died ſeized of Awre 1 E. 1. William de Valentia, and Joan his wife, and Maud de Mortimer were ſeized of the manor of Awre, and of the hundred of Blideſlowe, with return of writs, 15 E. 1. And their right was then allowed in a writ of Quo warranto. Upon the death of Maud de Mortimer, 29 E. 1. her eſtate in the manor deſcended to Edmond, ſon and heir of earl Roger her huſband; but he did not enjoy it long, for he died of a wound given him in battle againſt the Welch, 31 E. 1. whereupon Margaret his widow, a Spaniſh lady, near kinſwoman to queen Elianor, was ſeized of Awre.

Sir Maurice, ſon of Thomas de Berkeley, held the manor of Awre, with its members, Etlowe and Blakeney, and the hundred of Blideſlow, 42 E. 3. and Elizabeth the widow of ſir Maurice Berkeley, was ſeized of all thoſe particulars, 13 R. 2. Sir Thomas de Berkeley, and Margaret his wife, were ſeized of them 5 H. 5. And Richard de Beauchamp earl of Warwick, in right of Elizabeth his wife, daughter and heir of Thomas lord Berkeley, died ſeized of Awre, Etloe, Blakeney, and the hundred of Blideſloe, 17 H. 6. leaving three daughters, of whom Elizabeth was married to George Neville lord Latimer, and carried this manor into that family. Richard Neville lord Latimer died ſeized of the manor of Awre and Purton 22 H. 8. and his ſon John lord Latimer had livery thereof the ſame year.

Sir Edward Wintour was lord of the manor of Awre in the year 1608.

Sir Thomas Rich, of Sunning in the county of Berks, baronet, among other things, gave 6000*l.* to the corporation of Glouceſter in truſt, to be laid out in lands, for the endowment and ſupport of the blue-coat hoſpital in that city; with which money they purchaſed the manor of Awre and Blakeney, worth about 200*l.* a year. See p. 198. The corporation are the preſent lords of this manor, and hold court leet here.

Of the other eſtates the records ſhew, that Walter de Awre held one yard-land and ſix acres in Awre, and a meadow called Hundins, and one yard-land called Haworth, 5 John. Robert de Awre held one meſſuage and one yard-land in Awre 19 E. 2.

Robert Badderon was ſeized of a fiſhery in Awre 36 E. 3.

John Sabin and others, for the abbey of Flaxley, were ſeized of one meſſuage, two plow-tillages, and a yearly rent of 100*s.* in Awre 10 R. 2.

Robert Badderon was ſeized of a tenement called Handomere in Awre 3 H. 4.

John Berew levied a fine of lands in Awre, Etloe, Blakeney, and St. Briavel's, and of a fiſhery in Severn, to ſir Alexander Baynham and others, 10 H. 7. Lands formerly belonging to the abbey of Flaxley, of the value of 4*l.* 4*s.* 11*d.* a year, were granted, by the name of the manor of Newnham, Awre, and Poulton, to ſir Anthony Kingſton 36 H. 8. of which grant I have a copy. Edward Berew died ſeized of lands in Awre, Etloe, Blakeney, Gatcomb, and Poulton, and of a woodwardſhip in the foreſt of Dean, 12 Eliz. and was ſucceeded by James his ſon.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. Hagloe is a tithing, about a mile from the church, not mentioned in Domeſday-book.

2. Blideſlow, or Bliteſlau, is another diſtinct tithing, which gives name to the hundred. It appears appears by Domeſday-book, that this was a member of the manor of Awre at the time of the general ſurvey, and that it was then in the tenure of William the ſon of Baderon.

John Tiptot earl of Worceſter was ſeized of Blideſlow, 9 & 10 H. 6. He married Elizabeth, the only daughter of Robert Grender, lord of the manor of Abbenhall, in this county; which Robert Grender was ſeized of Blideſlow 22 H. 6. and his daughter the counteſs of Worceſter was alſo ſeized thereof 31 H. 6. After whom, this eſtate deſcended, like Abbenhall, to John Grender, and was carried by his daughter in marriage into the family of Walwyn. Thomas Baynham of Clowerwall marrying the heireſs of the Walwyns, became poſſeſſed of this eſtate; and their ſon ſir Chriſtopher Baynham died ſeized of it 32 H. 8. and was ſucceeded by his ſon ſir George Baynham, whoſe ſon Chriſtopher died ſeized of the manor of Blideſlow 5 Mariæ. Richard Baynham, his brother, had livery of it the ſame year; and Thomas Baynham, ſon of Chriſtopher, had alſo livery of this manor granted to him 16 Eliz. The Baynhams had antiently a ſeat here, which has long ſince been converted to a farm houſe. This is a reputed manor, belonging to Mr. Robert Boy.

3. Etloe, or Eteſlau, lying more than two miles from the church. It is now a diſtinct tithing, and is mentioned in the abſtract from Domeſday-book, at the beginning of the account of this pariſh, to be then a member of the manor of Awre. Patrick de Chaworth was ſeized of Etloe, which, according to ſir William Dugdale, was part of the barony of Kennesford, 11 E. 1. His daughter Maud was married to Henry, nephew to king Edward the Firſt, afterwards earl of Lancaſter. Henry his ſon ſucceeded him, and was afterwards created duke of Lancaſter. Richard Mortyn levied a fine of the manor of Etloe, and of other lands belonging to the dutchy of Lancaſter, to the king, 15 E. 4. to the uſe of Richard Mortyn for one month, the remainder to Elizabeth the queen, to the archbiſhop of Canterbury, and others. This manor was granted in truſt to the archbiſhop of Canterbury, and other great perſons, 3 H. 5. Etloe-dutchy is a reputed manor, the property of Charles Barrow, eſq.

The tithings of Blideſlow, Etloe, and Hagloe, (antiently written Bliteſlau, &c.) were probably ſo called from the antient barrows in thoſe tithings. It was uſual with the Romans, and with the northern nations after their example, to raiſe heaps of earth over the corps of thoſe that were ſlain in the field, when every ſoldier brought his turf, or turfs, to be placed together in the form of a little hill, as a memorial for the defunct. Thoſe tumuli, in different parts, have obtained different names, as barrows, and lawes, loes, or lows. The latter names are ſuppoſed to be derived from the old Britiſh word Llehau, which Dr. John Davis explains by locare, collocare: So that lau ſignifies a little hill made by art, and it is ſaid by ſir William Dugdale, in his Antiquities of Warwickſhire, that it is uſed in the ſame ſenſe by the Scots at this day.

4. Blakeney, a diſtinct tithing, lying more than two miles from the church. No mention is made of it in Domeſday-book, but it is now become the moſt conſiderable tithing in the pariſh, containing above fifty families. The earlieſt period in which this place is mentioned in the records is 8 R. 2. when Elianor de Haresfield was ſeized of one meſſuage and one plow-tillage in Blakeney. This hamlet has two yearly fairs, originally fixt on May-day and All-ſaints-day, for horned cattle and hogs; but ſince the alteration of the ſtyle, thoſe fairs are kept on the twelfth day of April, and the twelfth day of November. This place is diſtinguiſh'd in ſome maps and topographical books as a market-town, whoſe market is kept on wedneſdays, but at preſent it has none. The inhabitants of the tithing maintain two bridges over a trout-river, which runs from this place into the Severn at Bream's-pill, where pentagonal ſtones are found. It is probable that from theſe bridges Pontune took its name. And why may not that Pontune or Pomerton be the ſame place which is now called Blakeney, eſpecially as there is no hamlet of the name of Pontune or Pomerton in the pariſh or neighbourhood; and there are many inſtances of places loſing, by diſuſe, their antient names, and taking others in their room; thus, the antient name of Miſerden was Grenhamſtede, the preſent Batsford was Beceſhore, and the name of Strigoil gave place to that of Chepſtow.

At Blakeney is a chapel of eaſe, of which the particulars will be given under the account of the church of Awre, on which it is dependant.

5. Hayes is a reputed manor, the property of Mr. Savage.

6. Gatcombe is a place in this pariſh, ſituate on a little cove of the river Severn. A ſmall ſloop in the Iriſh trade, and ſome ſmall craft, are fitted out from, and belong to this place, which is ſaid to have been heretofore a port of conſiderable trade; but I confeſs, there ſeems to be little ground for ſuch a notion.

7. Poulton-court is a reputed manor in this pariſh. Sir Robert Atkyns obſerves, that Adeliza de l'Iſle, widow of Reginald de Dunſtanville, gave the lordſhip of Poulton to the abbey of Tewkesbury, in the reign of king H. 1. but I apprehend this is to be underſtood of ſome other place of the name of Poulton; for the records ſhew that John de Willington held Poulton 12 E. 3. with ſeveral other eſtates in this county, particularly Frampton Cotterel, to which head the reader is referred for an account of the deſcent of this manor, which acknowledged the ſame proprietors with Frampton down to 20 H. 7. It was afterwards granted to Edward duke of Somerſet, upon whoſe attainder it reverted to the crown. Another grant was made of it to William Bridgman, and Richard

Richard Wilſon, 5 Mariæ. And within a few years ſince, it was the property of Samuel Blackwell, eſq; who, about the year 1766, ſold it to Mr. James Thomas, of Oatfield, the preſent proprietor. Sir William Poulton ſeems to have taken his name from this place, whoſe eſtate it was in the reign of king Henry the Fourth, by the marriage of an heireſs of the family of Wrath, deſcended by the female line from the Willingtons. Here was antiently a chapel, long ſince demoliſhed.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage in the Foreſt deanery, worth 120*l.* a year, in the gift of the company of haberdaſhers in London, but valued in the king's books at 10*l.* 5*s.*

Edmund de Mortimer and Margaret his wife were ſeized of the advowſon of Awre 32 E. 1. One of the lords of Berkeley gave the advowſon to the priory of Lanthony, and the monks of that houſe procured the tithes to be appropriated. The rectory of Awre and Purton, with certain tithes and fiſheries in the Severn, late belonging to that priory, were granted to Thomas James, in truſt for Thomas Erſkyn, viſcount Fenton, 5 Jac.

Mr. Hammond, who was of the company of haberdaſhers, purchaſed the great tithes, which pay 13*l.* 15*s.* 1*d.* to the crown, and divided them between the vicarage of Awre and the curacy of Blakeney. The vicar of Awre has the vicarial tithes of both. Mr. John Sargeaunt is the preſent incumbent. The chancel of Awre is kept in repair out of the great tithes.

The miniſter of Blakeney is ſtiled the chaplain or aſſiſtant preacher at the chapel of Blakeney. There is no houſe for the miniſter, nor any chapel-yard at Blakeney. By Mr. Hammond's will both the miniſters muſt reſide, and not be at any time abſent more than forty days.

The church of Awre is a large double building, ſupported by pillars in the middle, with a handſome embattled tower at the weſt end. It is dedicated to St. Andrew; but the chapel at Blakeney is dedicated to All Saints.

Two tenements in Awre, and a ſmall parcel of land near the Severn, are given towards the repair of the church. The church houſe is aſſigned to the uſe of the poor.

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 139 houſes and about 700 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 44 were freeholders; yearly births 20, burials 19. But his numbers are too high. In a ſeries of ten years, from 1700 to 1709 incluſive, there are regiſtered 163 baptiſms, and 173 burials. In a like ſeries, from 1760 to 1769, the baptiſms are 247, and burials 236; whence it appears that the inhabitants have increaſed ſince the beginning of this century, notwithſtanding the burials exceed the baptiſms in the firſt ſeries, occaſioned by a great mortality in the year 1700. If we reckon the number of living inhabitants to bear a proportion to the annual burials, as 32 to 1, making allowance for the leſs healthy ſituation of this pariſh on the banks of the Severn, the preſent number of inhabitants will be 755.

BADGWORTH.

THIS pariſh is ſituated in the vale, in the hundred of Dudſton and King's-barton, three miles ſouth-weſtward from Cheltenham, twelve ſouth from Tewkeſbury, and ſeven north-eaſtward from Glouceſter. The greateſt part of the pariſh is fine rich paſture ground, and the reſt very good arable land; but there are no remarkable vegetables nor foſſils, except a few petrifications of the bivalve kind, and of the echinus marinus, or ſea-hedge-hog.

There is a ſpring of mineral water at a place called Cold Pool, in the hamlet of Badgworth, the properties of which are nearly the ſame with thoſe of Cheltenham water.

It is alſo worthy obſervation, amongſt the great works of nature, that in the year 1772, Priſcilla the wife of Thomas Bullock, the pariſh clerk, was delivered of three boys, who are all living.

From the hill above Crickley, in this pariſh, is a moſt beautiful and extenſive proſpect over the vale, not to be equalled in many parts of this kingdom.

As to the etymology of the name of this pariſh, whether we conſider the antient or modern way of writing it, there can be little certainty concerning it. It is conjectured, that the former part of the name carries in it that of ſome antient proprietor; the latter part hath been already explained under Aldſworth.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

From Domeſday-book we learn the following particulars:

'The ſame William [i. e. William de Owe] 'holds Beiewrde in Dudeſtanes hundred. Aleſtan 'held it. There are eight hides. In demean are 'ſix plow-tillages, and twenty villeins, and four-'teen bordars, with twenty-four plow-tillages. 'There are ſeventeen ſervi, and a mill of 12*d.* '[rent.] a wood two miles long and one broad. 'It was worth 15*l.* and is now worth 13*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 73.

This William de Owe, or de Ewe, was earl of Ewe, in Normandy, and was rewarded by king William, with one hundred and fifteen manors in ſeveral parts of the kingdom, of which, eleven were in Glouceſterſhire, as may be ſeen by turning to the above page of this book. He took up arms againſt William the Second, in behalf of Robert Curthoiſe, the king's elder brother, and very much ravaged Glouceſterſhire; but was gained over to the king by large promiſes, and again proved treacherous to him. He was afterwards taken, and demanding to juſtify himſelf in a duel, was vanquiſhed, and impriſoned at Saliſbury, where he was caſtrated, and had his eyes put out, 9 W. 2. and all his eſtates were ſeized by the crown. He was accuſed of treaſon before the conſtable and marſhal of England, before whom the court of Chivalry was held. In this court, judgment was always given againſt the vanquiſh'd, whether appellant or defendant; for according to the law of arms, the accuſer being overcome, incurred the ſame puniſhment that the defendant ought to have done, if he had been vanquiſhed.

It is to be obſerved, that trial by duel was introduced here by the conqueror, and remained long after the reign of Henry the Third; yet this, as well as ordeal, was forbidden by the popes. The people were led to appeal to the firy trial and the teſt of arms, by the ſame abſurd notion which obtained in the dark ages that produced them, that divine providence would miraculouſly interpoſe in favour of innocence. Thus duelling, in certain caſes relative to war, became a due proceſs of law, and by degrees came into uſe to terminate little diſputes of every nature. And notwithſtanding this barbarous practice hath been long ſince forbidden by our laws, and condemned upon the principles of religion, morality, and good policy; yet, to the opprobrium of the Britiſh nation, it prevails at this day as much as ever. A deteſtation of this fooliſh, this wicked practice, hath carried me out of my line; but I return.

This manor was afterwards granted to Gilbert Marſhal, who was ſo called from his exerciſing the office of marſhal to the king. To him ſucceeded John his ſon, who had likewiſe John his ſon and heir, who dying without iſſue in the laſt year of king Richard the Firſt, was ſucceeded by his brother William earl of Pembroke, and hereditary marſhal. He died 3 H. 3. and was ſurvived by Iſabel his wife, the daughter and heireſs of Richard earl of Strigul or Strigoil, now called Chepſtow; ſhe had the manor of Badgworth in dower 3 H. 3. which, at her deceaſe, deſcended ſucceſſively to William, Richard, Gilbert, Walter, and Anſelm, ſons of William earl of Pembroke, who all dying without iſſue, left five ſiſters their heireſſes; Maud, married to Hugh Bigod earl of Norfolk, and afterwards to John de Warren earl of Surry; Joan, the ſecond daughter, married to Warin de Monchenſy; Iſabel, the third daughter, married to Gilbert de Clare earl of Glouceſter, and afterwards to Richard earl of Cornwal; Sibil, the fourth daughter, married to William de Ferrers earl of Derby; and Eve, the fifth and youngeſt daughter, was married to William de Braoſe.

The manor being divided among ſo many heireſſes will account for the great variety of owners at the ſame time, who, notwithſtanding they are generally ſaid in the records to hold Badgworth, were ſeized of a part of it only.

Thus the records ſhew, that Gilbert de Clare earl of Glouceſter and Hertford held it 8 E. 2.

Hugh de Audley the elder was ſeized of it in the ſame reign, but taking part with the barons againſt the king to expel the Spencers, was impriſoned, and his lands ſeized, and this manor was granted to Hugh le Diſpencer the younger 15 E. 2. but Iſolda, the widow of Hugh de Audley, was reſtored to the lands of her huſband 1 E. 3. Hugh de Audley earl of Glouceſter, and Margaret his wife were ſeized thereof 21 E. 3. as was ſir James de Audley, 9 R. 2. Sir Nicholas lord Audley died ſeized of a fourth part of the manor of Badgworth, 15 R. 2. John lord Audley died ſeized of one ſhare of this manor 10 H. 4. John, the ſon of ſir James Audley had livery of it 23 H. 8.

John Giffard of Brimpsfield, in right of Maud de Long Eſpee his wife, was ſeized of the manor of Badgworth, and obtained free warren therein 9 E. 1. He left two daughters his heireſſes, of whom, Elianor was married to —— le Strange, deſcended from Guy, ſon of the duke of Britain, who came into England in the reign of king Henry the Firſt, and obtained the name of Leſtrange becauſe he was a ſtranger. John le Strange, ſon of —— le Strange, was ſeized of a moiety of the manor of Badgworth, in right of his mother, 23 E. 3. and was ſucceeded by Fulk his eldeſt ſon, who left this eſtate to his brother John, who was alſo ſucceeded by Elizabeth his daughter and heir, married to Thomas Mowbray earl of Nottingham; after whoſe death, this moiety went to Ankaret her aunt and heir, daughter to John lord Strange of Blackmere, who was then married to ſir Richard Talbot; which ſir Richard had livery of all the lands that deſcended to her, 7 R. 2.[b] Gilbert Talbot died ſeized of it 7 H. 5.[c]

John Troutbeck and Margaret his wife levied a fine of a moiety of a moiety of Badgworth, to the uſe of themſelves in tail, the remainder to the heirs of Margaret, 23 H. 6. and ſir William Troutbeck held it in the thirty-eighth year of the ſame reign.

John earl of Shrewſbury was ſeized of this manor 38 H. 6. and of the ſame and of Hunthouſe 13 E. 4. Catherine counteſs of Shrewſbury was ſeized in dower of a moiety of the manor of Badgworth, and of a meſſuage called Hunt-thorns, 15 E. 4. Livery of this manor was granted to John Talbot and Margaret his wife, daughter of Adam Troutbeck of Mobberley in Cheſhire, and couſin and heir of ſir William Troutbeck, 3 H. 8. and John Talbot had alſo livery of it 7 Eliz.

Other records ſhew, that John Muſgroſe was ſeized of this manor 3 E. 1. and that John Calew levied a fine of lands in Badgworth to the uſe of

John

John Maltravers the younger, 4 E. 3. and ſir John Maltravers held this eſtate 38 E. 3. I apprehend theſe records relate to Little Shurdington in Badgworth, which came afterwards to the Arundels, as did ſeveral other eſtates in this county held by the Muſgroſes in the reign of king H. 3. and the three firſt Edwards.

John lord Chandos died ſeized of Badgworth 4 Mariæ; and it appears by the eſcheator's inquiſition, that Edmund lord Chandos died ſeized of Badgworth, and of the grange and tenements in Badgworth called Crippits, worth 34*l.* 15*s.* 10*d. ob. per ann.* 15 Eliz. and that Giles Bridges his ſon had livery thereof the ſame year.

Mr. Gwinnet was lord of the manor of Badgworth in the year 1712. Mrs. Cheſter is the preſent proprietor. See Almondſbury.

HAMLETS, &c. 1. Badgworth, where the church ſtands, conſiſts of 20 houſes and 113 inhabitants.

2. Little Shurdington, above a mile from the church, is a hamlet of 13 houſes and 106 inhabitants. Roger Maltravers was ſeized of Little Shurdington in the manor of Badgworth, 25 E. 3. as was John Arundel of Arundel 9 H. 5. and John Fitz-Alan earl of Arundel was ſeized thereof 13 H. 6. It is now the property of Robert Lawrence, eſq; who has an elegant ſeat called the Greenway, in this hamlet, and a fine eſtate of rich paſture land round it. His arms are, Argent, a croſs raguly gules.

Mr. Edwards has alſo a good houſe and eſtate here.

3. Bentham, is a large hamlet, conſiſting of 38 houſes and 160 inhabitants, near two miles from the church. Fulk Fitz-Warren held lands in Bentham of Thomas lord Berkeley of Brimpsfield, by the ſervice of carrying a horn in Brimpsfield park, between the feaſts of the Aſſumption and the nativity of the bleſſed Virgin, whenever the king ſhould hunt there, 23 E. 3. Fulk Fitz-Warren was alſo ſeized of this manor 1, 6, and 5 R. 2. which manor was held of Hugh, Thomas, and William, ſucceſſive earls of Stafford, by the fifth part of a knight's fee, 10, 16 & 22 R. 2. Edward earl of Stafford was ſeized of the manor of Bentham 4 H. 4. and Fulk Fitz-Warren was ſeized of the ſame 9 H. 4. Fulk Fitz-Warren alſo held this manor, with divers knight's-fees thereto belonging, 8 H. 5. Sir John Berkeley held forty acres in Bentham 6 H. 6. Maurice Berkeley of Beverſtone was ſeized of the manor of Bentham 38 & 39 H. 6. and 14 E. 4.

Hunt's-court is a capital meſſuage in this hamlet. Sir Richard Haukeford and Anne his wife were ſeized of Hunt-court in Bentham 9 H. 6. and Elizabeth, one of his daughters and coheirs, was ſeized of the ſame 12 H. 6. A fine was levied of the manor of Bentham called Hunt-court, to the uſe of William Bircher and Thomaſia his wife, and to the heirs of their bodies, the remainder to the right heirs of William, 21 H. 6. Livery of the manor of Hunt's-Court was granted to William earl of Bath 20 Eliz. Mr Hinſon was the proprietor of it about the beginning of this century; it was afterwards ſold to Charles Hyett, of Glouceſter, eſq; whoſe ſecond ſon Nicholas Hyett, eſq; is the preſent owner of it. His arms are, Argent, a lion rampant ſable, a chief of the laſt ſurmounted by another indented of the firſt.

4. Little Witcombe, containing 24 houſes and 117 inhabitants.

5. Crickley, is the name of an eſtate belonging to William Prinne, of Charlton, eſq; where was formerly a good houſe, now occupied by the tenant of the farm.

6. Part of Great Shurdington, containing 11 houſes, and 53 inhabitants. Mrs. Cheſter has a good houſe and fine eſtate here; and Thomas Randell, eſq; has alſo a neat houſe here.

7. Buckland's-place, is an eſtate which Richard Buckland granted to John Cook, alderman of Glouceſter, 3 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage in the deanery of Winchcombe, worth about 80*l.* a year. The manor of Badgworth, with the rectory and advowſon of the vicarage, belonged to the nunnery of Uſk in Monmouthſhire, and were granted to James Gunter and Walter Lewis 37 H. 8. Other tithes in Badgworth, belonging alſo to the ſame nunnery, were granted to — Bergavenny, 34 H. 8. and again others were granted to John Fernham, 22 Eliz. That nunnery, at the diſſolution, was valued at 69*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.* The priory of Chepſtow, for black monks of the Cluniac order, had tithes and rents in Badgworth 7 R. 2.

The glebe-lands, formerly belonging to the nunnery of Uſk, are divided between Mrs. Tracy, daughter and heireſs of the late ſir William Dodwell, and Mr. Burroughs; 1*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* a year is paid out of them to the crown.

Jeſus College in Oxford hath the greateſt part of the impropriation, worth 130*l.* a year, for the maintenance of a ſchool at Abergavenny. The college pays 16*l.* a year out of it to Chriſt College in Cambridge, in lieu of tithes belonging to them. The rector of Oddington receives 5*l.* a year for great tithes in Great Shurdington. Mrs. Tracy is patroneſs, the reverend Mr. John Baghot Delabere the preſent incumbent. The chapel of Shurdington is annexed to this church.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It hath a neat embattled tower at the weſt end, ſixty-nine feet high, with ſix excellent bells in it, and a chapel on the north ſide, dedicated to St. Margaret, who, according to the legends, was of noble birth, and being compelled by her parents to marry, eſcaped from her huſband on the wedding night, in man's apparel, became a monk, and afterwards, by order of the monaſtery, was made governor vernor of a nunnery; one of the nuns of which place proving with child, it was concluded that St. Pelagius (for ſo St. Margaret called herſelf) was the father. Upon this ſhe was immured, and did not diſcover herſelf 'till juſt expiring, and after her death was found to be a chaſte virgin of the female ſex.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

There is a handſome monument in the church, with the following memorial:

Near this place is interr'd George Gwinnet Gough, who departed this life the 27th day of May, 1756, deſcended on his father's ſide from an antient family of the Gwinnets in North-Wales, who came to ſettle in this pariſh in the beginning of the reign of queen Elizabeth.

His afflicted mother, daughter of Jeremy Gough, of London, eſq; erected this monument in memory of her moſt beloved and truly worthy ſon.

There is alſo another handſome monument, whereon is inſcribed,

READER! Let this marble be a monitor to the Living, as well as a memorial of the Dead: And when thou readeſt the name of LYTTLETON LAWRENCE, Eſq; be inſtructed not to place thy confidence in the moſt perfect corporeal excellencies, which like his muſt undergo the deformity of corruption. And let his virtues excite thy imitation, particularly his parental affection, inflexible honeſty, and chriſtian benevolence, which, through a ſtedfaſt faith in thy Redeemer, will advance thee to a life immortal and full of glory.

He died the 5th day of April, 1740, aged 54.

Benefactions.

Mr. Stanſby, late vicar of Badgworth, left an eſtate, which lets at 14*l.* a year, for apprenticing of boys of this pariſh, Churchdown, and Cheltenham; whereof Badgworth is to receive 5*l.* a year, Churchdown 3*l.* and Cheltenham the remainder. The vicar of the pariſh for the time being is a truſtee to this charity, with power to end all diſputes that may ariſe concerning it.

Giles Cox, of Upton St. Leonard's, gent. gave 6*l.* a year in lands in that place, for the uſe of the poor of this pariſh.

William Mills, of this pariſh, gent. gave four nobles yearly, charged on lands in Little Witcomb, to the uſe of the poor.

Katherine Talbot, of Droitwich in the county of Worceſter, in the year 1698, gave 4*l.* a year, to be paid on the firſt day of May, to the uſe of the poor.

Lyttleton Lawrence, eſq; of this pariſh, gave a purple pulpit-cloth and cuſhion, with a cover of the ſame for the communion-table.

Benjamin Hyett, eſq; of Hunt-court in this pariſh, in the year 1757, gave the tapeſtry and two tables of the commandments at the altar; which tapeſtry was an altar-piece in the cathedral church of Glouceſter.

The ſtate of population given by ſir Robert Atkyns muſt have been very erroneous. He reckons Badgworth to contain 25 houſes, Bentham 24, Little Witcombe 26, part of Great Shurdington 8; which by miſtake in caſting up he makes 104 in all, and ſets the inhabitants down at 500, the yearly births 16, burials 15. —— At preſent there are 109 houſes, and 549 inhabitants. In a ſeries of ten years, from 1700 to 1709 inclusive, there are entered in the pariſh-regiſter 143 baptiſms and 106 burials; in a like ſeries, from 1760 to 1769, 213 baptiſms, and 160 burials. Comparing the numbers together, we find that population is greatly increaſed here ſince the beginning of this century, and that ſir Robert's eſtimate for the inhabitants was much too high. Perhaps 360 would have been near the truth, as I conclude from the average of yearly burials in the firſt ſeries, which bear a proportion in this place to the number of the living inhabitants as 1 to 34.

BADMINTON (GREAT,)

LIES in the upper diviſion of the hundred of Grumbald's-aſh. It is ſituate in the hill-country, on the confines next Wiltſhire, nine miles ſouth-weſtward from Tetbury, ſix north-eaſt from Chipping Sodbury, and twenty-eight ſouthward from Glouceſter. It is bounded on the north by Little Badminton, on the ſouth by Acton Turville, on the eaſt by Alderton in Wiltſhire, and on the weſt by Old Sodbury. The air is healthy, and the ſoil more ſuitable to corn than paſture. There is no river, nor ſtream of water running through it.

The etymology of the name is difficult and uncertain, wherefore I decline giving, as my own, an explanation of it. Some people, however, have conjectured, that it is compounded of two Anglo-Saxon words, bedan, to pray, and moigne, a monk; and ſo make it to ſignify the ſame as the prieſt's town; but the antient manner of writing it [Madminton] as it is in Domeſday-book, is an argument againſt that notion.

It hath been aſſerted of this village, as of Lindley in Leiceſterſhire, that no adder, ſnake, nor lizard hath ever been found in it, notwithſtanding they are frequent in the neighbouring places: but, as to Badminton at leaſt, this is a vulgar error, yet the inhabitants affirm, that thoſe animals were very rarely ſeen 'till within theſe few years. Here are found ſome foſſils of the oiſter and periwinkle kinds, and that round ſtone called the bullet-ſtone, which doctor Plot ſeemed ſo deſirous of examining into the nature of, had his intended journey thro' England, in ſearch of natural curioſities, taken place. In my viſit to this place I could not procure the ſight of one, nor any further account of it, than that it is a round ſtone of a very compact texture.

But that from which this village derives its greateſt conſequence, is the fine ſeat which has been the chief reſidence of the princely houſe of Beaufort, ever ſince the deſtruction of Ragland-caſtle in the great civil wars. It is called Badminton-Houſe, and was formerly the ſeat of the antient family of the Botelers. The front next the grand avenue has two wings; the centre conſiſting of three ſtories, of which the ſecond is ornamented with pillaſters and capitals of the Corinthian order. At the top of the Attic ſtory are the Beaufort arms, with ſupporters, well executed in freeſtone.

This noble ſtructure ſtands not far from the centre of a large tract of ground, incloſed by a wall about ten miles in circumference, within which are ſeveral diſtinct parks for red and fallow-deer, full of large and beautiful plantations of firs and other foreſt-trees.

The grand approach is through the park from Worceſter-lodge, which ſtands at the diſtance of two miles and three quarters from the houſe, and is itſelf a fine, lofty freeſtone building, with iron gates.

It was neceſſary to give ſome general account of this noble ſeat; but it would be difficult by words to convey a tolerable idea of the beautiful plantations belonging to it, which have been raiſed from time to time at a vaſt expence, and are continually improving under the direction of the preſent noble proprietor. Indeed this ſubject is more proper for the pencil and engraver. I ſhall however obſerve, for the information of thoſe who have ſeen them in their former ſtate, that the labyrinth, and all that profuſion of figures in box and yew, which came firſt into uſe in this country about the reign of William the Third, are taken away, and give place to the modern taſte, and leſs conſtrained method of planting.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Domeſday-book, under the title Terra Ernulfi de Heſding, gives the following particulars:

'The ſame Hernulfus holds Madmintune in Grimboldeſtou hundred. There are four hides taxed. Edricus held it. In demean are two plow-tillages, and ſix villeins, and eight bordars, with a prieſt having thirteen plow-tillages. There are nine ſervi, and eight acres of meadow. It is worth and was worth 10*l.*' Dom. B. p. 77.

Ralph Boteler died ſeized of Badminton and of the hundred of Grumbald's-aſh 3 E. 1. He was deſcended from Ralph Boteler, or Radulphus Pincerna, ſo called from his bearing the office of butler to Robert earl of Mellent and Leiceſter, in the reign of king Henry the Firſt.

Thomas Boteler, ſecond ſon of Ralph, and brother to William, ſucceeded in Badminton, which deſcended to his ſon ſir Thomas Boteler. He married a near relation of Edmund Fitz-Alan earl of Arundel, who taking part with the Spenſers, was put to death at Hereford with many other adherents to the cauſe of the royal favourites.

Alan Boteler, ſon of ſir Thomas, had a ſon and heir ſir Alan, whoſe ſon Thomas was ſeized of this manor 41 E. 3. He was ſucceeded by his ſon ſir Ralph Boteler, whoſe ſon John was knighted, and had a ſon John; whoſe ſon Ralph died before his father. Sir John Boteler, ſon of Ralph, married Sylveſtra, daughter of ſir Anſelm Guyes, of Elmore, and died 5 E. 6. leaving a ſon William, who married Theophila, daughter of ſir John Newton, of Bar-Court. Nicholas Boteler, ſon of William, married Margaret, daughter of ſir John Young, and was lord of this manor in the year 1608. He left three ſons, John, Robert, and Alan.

Thomas Somerſet, third ſon of Edward earl of Worceſter, was created viſcount Somerſet of Caſhel in Ireland. He purchaſed this manor of Nicholas Boteler, the laſt proprietor of that family, and left an only daughter Elizabeth, who dying unmarried, gave it to Henry Somerſet, lord Herbert, afterwards duke of Beaufort. His grace the preſent duke of Beaufort is lord of this manor, and proprietor of the hundred of Grumbald's-aſh.

This noble duke derives his genealogy from Geoffry Plantagenet, earl of Anjou, ſon of Foulk, king of Jeruſalem, by Maud the empreſs his wife, daughter of Henry the Firſt king of England; being lineally deſcended from John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaſter, who cauſed all his natural children by Catherine the widow of ſir John Swinford, knight, who became afterwards his third wife, to be called Beaufort, from the caſtle of that name in the county of Anjou, the place of their nativity, and part of the inheritance of the houſe of Lancaſter. By the ſaid Catherine he had three ſons, John, Henry, and Thomas; and one daughter, Joan. Thomas was created earl of Dorſet, and afterwards duke of Exeter; Henry was made biſhop of Wincheſter, in the year 1405, alſo one of the cardinals, and lord chancellor of England; John the eldeſt was created earl of Somerſet 20 R. 2.

Which John died in the year 1410, and was buried in the cathedral at Canterbury; having married Margaret, ſiſter and coheir to Edmund Holland earl of Kent, by whom he had iſſue four ſons, Henry, John, Edmund, and Thomas; and two daughters, Joan, married firſt to James the Firſt king of Scotland, afterwards to ſir James Stuart, anceſtor to the preſent duke of Athol; and Margaret, married to Thomas Courtney, the ſixth earl of Devonſhire of his family. Henry the eldeſt ſon dying unmarried, left his inheritance to his brother John, who ſucceeded him as third earl of Somerſet, and was created duke of Somerſet 1443. Dying the year following, he was buried at Winbourn-abbey in Dorſetſhire, leaving iſſue by Margaret his wife, daughter of ſir John Beauchamp, knight, an only daughter Margaret, married to Edmund of Hadham, called alſo Edmond Tudor, earl of Richmond, by whom ſhe was mother of king Henry the Seventh.

To him ſucceeded Edmund his next brother, who was earl of Mortein, or Moreton, in Normandy, of which he was made regent. He was created marquis of Dorſet in the year 1443, and duke of Somerſet 26 H. 6. He was ſlain in the battle of St. Albans in 1455, leaving iſſue by Eleanor, ſecond daughter and coheir to Richard Beauchamp earl of Warwick, four ſons, of whom hereafter, and five daughters, viz. 1. Eleanor, the ſecond wife of James Butler earl of Ormond and Wiltſhire; 2. Joan, firſt married to ſir Robert St. Lawrence, baron of Howth in Ireland, and ſecondly to ſir Richard Fry, kn^t. 3. Anne, married to ſir William Paſton, of Paſton in Norfolk, kn^t. 4. Margaret, married to Humphry Stafford earl of Stafford, and ſecondly to ſir Richard Darrel, kn^t. by whom ſhe had a daughter Margaret, wedded to James Touchet lord Audley, anceſtor to the preſent earl of Caſtlehaven; and 5. Elizabeth, married to ſir Henry Lewis, kn^t. — The ſons of Edmund the ſecond duke of Somerſet were Henry, Edmund, John, and Thomas.

Henry, the eldeſt ſon, had the title of earl of Moreton in his father's life-time. He was knight of the garter, and third duke of Somerſet, and gained great honour in the wars with France. He took the caſtle of Anjou by aſſault, and put 300 Scots to the ſword, and hanged all the French that were in it. Adhering to the houſe of Lancaſter, he was taken priſoner at the battle of Hexham, by John Nevil marquis of Montacute, and there beheaded, in the year 1463, leaving iſſue by Joan Hill, or de la Montaign, an only natural ſon of the name of Charles, who aſſumed the ſurname of Somerſet; whereby the honour devolved upon Edmund his next brother, who was taken priſoner and beheaded at the battle of Tewkeſbury in 1471, without iſſue; and John and Thomas, his third and fourth brothers, alſo dying without children, in them terminated the male iſſue of John of Gaunt.

Which Charles Somerſet being a perſon of great abilities, arrived to high honours and great employments. He was made privy counſellor to king Henry the Seventh, and admiral at ſea; created banneret, elected knight of the garter, and made captain of the guards; was ſent on ſeveral important embaſſies, and employed by the king on arduous affairs. He married Elizabeth, ſole daughter and heir to William Herbert earl of Huntingdon, lord Herbert of Ragland, Chepſtow, and Gower; and in her right bore the title of lord Herbert. He was advanced to the dignity of earl of Worceſter by patent, 5 H. 8. by reaſon of his noble deſcent, and near alliance to the king in blood, as the patent imports. And dying in the year 1526, was privately interred, agreeable to his will, in Beaufort chapel, in the church within the caſtle of Windſor, leaving iſſue by his firſt wife Elizabeth, Henry his heir and ſucceſſor. His ſecond wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Weſt lord De-la-War, by whom he had iſſue ſir Charles Somerſet, kn^t. captain of the tower of Ryſebank, in the haven of Calais; and ſir George Somerſet, of Bedmundesfield in com. Suff. kn^t.

Henry the ſecond earl of Worceſter, for his ſignal exploits in the wars of France, had been knighted, during his father's life-time, by Charles Brandon duke of Suffolk; and ſhortly after his father's death, was appointed one of the commiſſioners for concluding a peace with the French. He married Elizabeth, daughter to ſir Anthony Browne, kn^t. and by her had iſſue four ſons, 1. William, his heir and ſucceſſor; 2. Thomas, who died in 1587, in the tower of London; 3. Sir Charles, who died in 1529; 4. Francis, ſlain in Muſſelborough-field by the Scots: Alſo four daughters, 1. Eleanor, married to ſir Edward Vaughan, of Tretour, in com. Brecon, kn^t. 2. Lucy, to John Nevil lord Latimer; 3. Anne, to Thomas Percy earl of Northumberland; and 4. Jane, to ſir Edward Manſel, kn^t. This earl Henry dying in the year 1549, was buried at Ragland.

Which William, the third earl, was knight of the garter, and one of the peers that ſat on the trial of Mary queen of Scots. He married Chriſtian, daughter to Edward North, lord North of Carthlege; by whom he had Edward his only ſon and heir; and two daughters, Elizabeth, married to William Windſor, eſq; youngeſt ſon of William lord Windſor; and Lucy, to Henry Herbert, eſq; ſon and heir of ſir Thomas Herbert, of Wyneſtone in com. Monmouth, kn^t.

Edward, the fourth earl, was made maſter of the horſe to queen Elizabeth, being the beſt horſeman and tilter of the times, which were then the manlike and noble recreations of the court, and ſuch as caught the applauſe of men, and the commendation of the ladies. He continued in that office 'till the 13 J. 1. when he was appointed lord privy ſeal, of which he had afterwards a grant for life, with the fee of 1500*l.* a year. He was alſo knight of the garter, and dying in the year 1627-8, was buried in St. Mary's chapel at Windſor, leaving iſſue by Elizabeth, daughter of Francis earl of Huntingdon, eight ſons and ſeven daughters; viz. 1. William lord Herbert, who died unmarried in his father's life-time;—2. Henry lord Herbert;—3. Thomas, who having been ſent, with ſir Charles Percy, to notify to king James the demiſe of queen Elizabeth, and his majeſty's being proclaimed her ſucceſſor, was made knight of the Bath with prince Charles, who being afterwards king, in the ſecond year of his reign, promoted him to the dignity of viſcount Somerſet, of Caſhel in Ireland. He married Eleanor, daughter of David lord Barry, and viſcount Buttevant of Ireland, relict of Thomas Butler earl of Ormond, by whom he had iſſue only one daughter Elizabeth, who died unmarried. —4. Charles; and —5. Francis, both died infants;—6. Charles, made knight of the Bath, who who married Elizabeth, the daughter and heir of ſir William Powel, of Lanpylt com. Monmouth, by whom he had three daughters, Elizabeth, Mary, and Frances.—7. Chriſtopher, who died young;—8. Sir Edward Somerſet, knight of the Bath, who married Bridget, daughter and heir of ſir William Whitmore, of Leighton com. Ceſtr. kn^t. but died without iſſue. The daughters were,—1. Elizabeth, married to ſir Henry Guildford, of Hempſted-place in Kent;—2. Catherine, to William lord Petre, of Writtle;—3. Anne, to ſir Edward Winter, of Lidney in Glouceſterſhire, kn^t.—4. Frances, to William Morgan, of Lanternan com. Monmouth, eſq;—5. Mary, who died an infant;—6. Blanch, married to Thomas lord Arundel, of Wardour; and—7. another Catherine, married to Thomas lord Windſor. He was ſucceeded by his eldeſt ſurviving ſon,

Henry, the fifth earl, who was created marquis of Worceſter, by patent, in the year 1642. He was a nobleman of great parts and ample fortune, which was much impaired by the large ſupplies of men and money ſpent in the royal cauſe, which he powerfully aſſerted during the whole courſe of the civil war, in the reign of King Charles the Firſt. He maintained his caſtle of Ragland, againſt the parliament, with a garriſon of 800 men, from 1642, to Aug. 19, 1646, without receiving any contribution from the country; and then yielded it to ſir Thomas Fairfax, who beſieged it in perſon, upon honourable terms; but the conditions of capitulation being baſely violated, the marquis was taken into the cuſtody of the parliament's black-rod, in which he died in December following, and was buried at Windſor. His caſtle, after the ſurrender of it, was demoliſhed, and all the timber in the three parks near the houſe ſold, to the amount of 100,000*l.* Add to this, as large a ſum at leaſt lent to the king, and the further expence of ſupporting the above-mentioned garriſon, and of raiſing and maintaining two ſeveral armies, commanded by his ſon Edward earl of Glamorgan, at his own expence, together with the ſequeſtration from 1646; and laſtly, the loſs of that whole eſtate, which was ſold by the parliament, amounting, as appears by that year's audit, to about 20,000*l.* a year, which was not reſtored 'till the year 1660; and then ſome judgment may be formed of the loſs ſuſtained by this noble family in the royal cauſe. His lordſhip married Anne, the only child of John lord Ruſſel, and by her had iſſue nine ſons and four daughters. 1. Edward lord Herbert, of whom hereafter;—2. lord John Somerſet, who married Mary, daughter of Thomas lord Arundel, of Wardour;—3. lord William, who died an infant;—4. lord Henry, who died unmarried;—5. lord Thomas, who died at Rome in 1676;—6. lord Charles died a canon of Cambray in Flanders;—7. 8. 9. lords Frederick, Francis, and James, all died young. His lordſhip's daughters were,—1. lady Elizabeth, who died an infant;—2. lady Anne died a nun;—3. lady Mary died unmarried;—4. lady Elizabeth was wedded to Francis Brown viſcount Montague.

Edward Somerſet, lord Herbert, ſucceeded his father in the year 1646, to whom, in his father's life-time, the king had directed ſeveral letters by the title of earl of Glamorgan, which he uſually bore. He was a perſon very highly eſteemed by the king, who made him generaliſſimo of his armies, and granted him, by patent,[d] ſeveral very extraordinary priveleges, which the peers took ſo ill, that, on the 18th of Auguſt, 1660, they appointed a committee to take that patent into conſideration. Accordingly, on the 23d of the ſame month, they reported, that the marquis was willing to deliver it to his majeſty; and it was delivered up on the 3d of September following. His lordſhip ſtands in the honourable Mr. Walpole's liſt of royal and noble authors, for two pieces, the one intituled, A Century of the Names

[d] The commiſſion ran as follows:—'Charles, by the grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. To our right truſty, and right well-beloved couſin, Edward Somerſet, alias Plantaginet, Lord Herbert, Baron Beaufort, of Caldicote, Griſmond, Chepſtow, Ragland and Gower, Earl of Glamorgan, ſon and heir apparent of our entirely beloved couſin, Henry Earl and Marquis of Worceſter, greeting. Having had good and long experience of your proweſs, prudence, and fidelity, do make choice, and by theſe nominate and appoint you, our right truſty, and right well-beloved couſin, Edward Somerſet, &c. to be our Generaliſſimo of three armies, Engliſh, Iriſh, and Foreign, and Admiral of a fleet at ſea, with power to recommend your Lieutenant-general for our approbation, leaving all other officers to your own election and denomination, and accordingly to receive their commiſſion from you: willing and commanding them, and every of them, you to obey, as their General, and you to receive immeditate orders from ourſelf only. And leſt, through diſtance of place, we may be miſinformed, we will and command you to reply unto us, if any of our orders ſhould thwart, or hinder any of your deſigns for our ſervice. And there being neceſſary great ſums of money, to the carrying on ſo chargeable an employment, which we have not to furniſh you withal, we do by theſe empower you to contract with any of our loving ſubjects of England, Ireland, and Dominion of Wales, for wardſhips, cuſtoms, woods, or any our rights and prerogatives; we by theſe obliging our Selves, our Heirs and Succeſſors, to confirm and make good the ſame 'accordingly. And for perſons of generoſity, for whom Titles 'of Honour are moſt deſirable, we have entruſted you with 'ſeveral patents under our Great Seal of England, from a Marquis to a Baronet, which we give you full power and authority 'to date, and diſpoſe of, without knowing our further pleaſure; 'ſo great is our truſt and confidence in you, as that, whatſoever 'you do contract for, or promiſe, we will make good the 'ſame accordingly, from the date of this our commiſſion forwards; which for the better ſatisfaction, we give you leave to 'give them, or any of them, copies thereof, atteſted under your 'hand and ſeal of arms. And for your own encouragement, 'and in token of our gratitude, we give and allow you hence-'forward ſuch fees, titles, preheminences, and privileges, as 'do, and may belong unto your place and command above-'mentioned, with promiſe of our dear daughter Elizabeth to 'your ſon Plantaginet in marriage, with three hundred thouſand 'pounds in dower or portion, moſt part whereof we acknow-'ledge ſpent and diſburſt by your father and you, in our ſervice; 'and the title of Duke of Somerſet to you and your heirs male 'for ever; and from henceforward to give the Garter to 'your Arms, and at your pleaſure to put on the George 'and Blue Ribbon: and for your greater honour, and in 'teſtimony of our reality, we have with our own hand affixed 'our Great Seal of England, unto theſe our commiſſion and 'letters, making them patents. Witneſs our ſelf at Oxford, 'the firſt day of April, in the twentieth year of our reign, and 'the year of our Lord one thouſand ſix hundred and forty-four.' Collins's Peerage, V. 1. p. 209. 4th Ed.

Henry his only ſon, who, on the reſtoration of king Charles the Second, was conſtituted lord lieutenant of Glouceſterſhire; and in 1672, lord preſident of the council in Wales, and lord lieutenant of the ſeveral counties in that principality; and of the county and city of Briſtol, having the ſame year been inſtalled one of the knights of the garter. He was, by letters patent dated Dec. 2, 1682, advanced to the title of duke of Beaufort, with remainder to the heirs male of his body. His grace exerted himſelf againſt the duke of Monmouth in 1685; and afterwards endeavoured to ſecure Briſtol againſt the adherents of the prince of Orange, upon whoſe elevation to the throne, refuſing to take the oaths, he lived in retirement 'till his death, in the 70th year of his age, 1699. His grace had iſſue by Mary his wife, daughter of Arthur lord Capel, and widow of Henry lord Beauchamp, five ſons, Henry, who died young; Charles, his ſucceſſor; another Henry, Edward, and Arthur; and four daughters, the ladies Elizabeth, Mary, Henrietta, and Anne. Charles the ſecond ſon, ſurviving his elder brother, was ſtiled marquis of Worceſter after his father was created duke of Beaufort. He married Rebecca, daughter of ſir Joſiah Child. Unhappily leaping out of his coach, to avoid the danger he was expoſed to by the horſes running down a ſteep hill, he received a violent bruiſe, and broke his thigh-bone, of which he died in the 38th year of his age, 1698, during his father's life-time; leaving iſſue three ſons, Henry, Charles, and John; and three daughters, lady Mary, and lady Elizabeth, who died infants; and lady Henrietta, married to Charles duke of Grafton. Lord Charles Somerſet died on his travels in 1710; and lord John died in the year 1704.

Henry the eldeſt ſon ſucceeded his grandfather as duke of Beaufort. In the year 1711-2, his grace was conſtituted captain of the band of penſioners, lord lieutenant of Hampſhire and Glouceſterſhire, and cities of Briſtol and Glouceſter, and counties of the ſame. He was inſtalled knight of the garter in 1713, and departing this life on the 24th of May the next year, left iſſue by his lady, daughter and coheir of the earl of Gainſborough, Henry marquis of Worceſter, born in 1707; lord John, who died ſoon after he was born; and lord Charles-Noel, born in 1709, of whom his mother died in child-bed the next day. His grace had a former wife, lady Mary, only daughter of Charles Sackville earl of Dorſet; and alſo a third wife, lady Mary, youngeſt daughter to Peregrine Oſborne duke of Leeds, but had no iſſue by either of them.

Henry his eldeſt ſon ſucceeded as third duke of Beaufort. He wedded Frances, only child of ſir James Scudamore, of Home-Lacy in Herefordſhire, baronet, and viſcount Scudamore in the kingdom of Ireland; from whom his grace was divorced in the year 1743-4, upon account of her incontinence. His grace died without iſſue in 1745-6, and was ſucceeded in dignity and eſtate by his brother

Charles-Noel Somerſet, fourth duke of Beaufort, who diſtinguiſhed himſelf in the ſenate by a ſteady oppoſition to unconſtitutional and corrupt meaſures, and endeared himſelf to mankind by his ſocial virtues. His grace married Elizabeth, daughter of John Berkeley, of Stoke-Giffard in Glouceſterſhire, eſq; and ſiſter of the late Norborne lord Botetourt, by whom he had iſſue Henry, now duke of Beaufort, born in the year 1744; and five daughters, viz. lady Anne, married to Charles earl of Northampton; lady Elizabeth, who died in 1760; lady Rachel, who died an infant; lady Henrietta, and lady Iſabella.

Henry, the fifth duke of Beaufort, having accompliſhed his ſtudies at Oxford, where he received the degree of LL. D. embarked in the year 1764, for his travels in foreign parts, whence he returned in 1766, and the ſame year married Elizabeth, daughter of the late admiral Boſcawen, and niece of the viſcount Falmouth, by whom he

His grace's arms are, Quarterly, France and ngland, within a bordure compone argent and azure. reſt, On a wreath, a portcullis Or, nailed azure, hains pendent thereto of the firſt. Supporters, on he dexter ſide, A panther argent, ſpotted with arious colours, fire iſſuing out of his mouth and ears roper, gorged with a collar and chain pendent Or; n the ſiniſter ſide, A wyverne vert, holding in his outh a ſiniſter hand coupé at the wriſt proper. Motto, MUTARE VEL TIMERE SPERNO.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage in the deanery of Hawkeſbury, worth 13*l.* a year. It formerly belonged to the abbey of Perſhore. The duke of Beaufort is patron and impropriator. The living s further augmented by two donations from the ate patron and his brother, making together 50*l.* year.

The church joins to the houſe of the duke of Beaufort, and accommodation is made in it for he inhabitants of Little Badminton, in the pariſh f Hawkeſbury, who, by an agreement and order nade in the year 1750, are to be for the future, s to eccleſiaſtical matters, under the miniſter of his pariſh.

The ſeat belonging to his grace the duke of Beaufort is an aile on the north ſide of the chancel, nder which is the veſtry room. On the ſouth ide is another aile, and under it the vault belonging to that noble family.

BADMINTON (LITTLE,)

IS a ſmall place in the upper diviſion of the hundred of Grumbald's-aſh, eight miles ſouth-weſtward from Tetbury, ſix north-eaſt from Chipping Sodbury, and twenty-ſeven ſouthward from Glouceſter. It is bounded on the ſouth by Great Badminton. The greateſt part of it lies within the duke of Beaufort's park.

This was not a diſtinct vill at the time of the general ſurvey, wherefore no mention is made of it in Domeſday-book. It is now conſidered as a tithing belonging to the pariſh of Hawkeſbury. The air is healthy, and the ſoil more ſuitable to tillage than paſture; but the place furniſhes nothing remarkable in natural hiſtory.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The manor formerly belonged to the abbey of Perſhore, after the diſſolution of which, it was granted to John Boteler, 37 H. 8. and hath ever ſince had the ſame proprietor as the manor of Great Badminton, ſo that his grace the duke of Beaufort is the preſent lord of it.

Richard Urdle levied a fine of lands in Little Badminton to the uſe of John Young and William Lypiat, 18 R. 2.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Hawkeſbury, worth 5*l.* a year to the curate. It formerly belonged to the abbey of Perſhore. After the diſſolution, the chapel of Badminton Little, with tithes, were granted with the manor, as above, and have deſcended together down to the preſent time.

The chapel is gone to decay, and accommodation hath been made for the inhabitants, in the church of Great Badminton, ever ſince the year 1750, as already obſerved under that pariſh.

BAGENDON,

IS a ſmall village, about three miles and a half long, and one mile broad, ſituate in the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety, in the cotſwold country, three miles northward from Cirenceſter, nine ſouth-weſtward from Northleach, and fourteen ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter. The church and houſes, for the moſt part, ſtand in a narrow dale, through which a little rivulet runs, and falls into the Churn about a mile below the church.

A little ſouth-eaſtward of the church, in the fields, are two very conſiderable intrenchments fronting each other, one of which extends for above a quarter of a mile down to a place called Barrow's-bridge in this pariſh, with the rampire and graff intire in ſome parts; and two or three large barrows, (near which have been found ſeveral ſpear-heads and other warlike weapons) ſtand not far diſtant from them. Theſe bear inconteſtible evidence of ſome battle having been fought here.

Now whether this Barrow's-bridge be the ſame with Beranbyrig, mentioned in the Saxon Chronicle, where Cinric king of the Weſt-Saxons, and Ceaulin his ſon, fought a bloody battle againſt the Britons, with doubtful ſucceſs, in the year 556, is a matter worthy inquiry. Hiſtorians differ in opinion concerning this Beranbyrig; Dr. Howell fixing it at Banbury in Oxfordſhire, on account of the ſimilarity of the name, and antiquity of the place; but Mr. Camden thinks it improbable that the Saxons could carry their conqueſt ſo far as the borders of Northamptonſhire by that year; wherefore he gives the preference to Barbury-caſtle in Wiltſhire, as a place more likely on ſeveral accounts, ſuch as the large barrows and fortifications found there, the ſimilitude of names, and the courſe of the time of the Saxon victories. Theſe arguments, I think, are good againſt Banbury, whilſt they point out this place, in the ſtrongeſt manner, for the ſcene of that action: for, as to ſituation, it lies in the country where the Britons and Saxons had frequent ſkirmiſhes about that time; the fortifications and barrows ſhew that a battle was fought here; and laſtly, what two names can agree better in ſound than that mentioned in the Chronicle, and our Barrow's-bridge? As to the latter being derived either from a bear-herd's killing a woman at this place, or from its being the bearer's way from Biſley, for the inhabitants to bury at Bibury, they ſeem to be ſilly conceits, not worth the trouble of confuting. But I would not determine too abſolutely in a matter of ſo uncertain a nature.

The kind of ſtone called Dagham-down ſtone is found in the fields of this pariſh, for the particulars of which ſee Daglingworth.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Benwedene is a manor ſet down in Domeſday-book, as lying in the hundred of Cirenceſter. It is probably the ſame place which was afterwards called Bagendon. Of that manor it is thus recorded:

'The ſame Hugo [i. e. Hugo Laſne] holds 'Benwedene in Cireceſtre hundred, and Gille- 'bertus holds it of him. There are three hides 'taxed. Wluuard held it. In demean are three 'plow-tillages, and five villeins with three plow- 'tillages, and ſix ſervi, and a mill of 10*s.* and 'eight acres of meadow. It is worth and was 'worth 4*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 78.

This was a hamlet or portion of ſome adjoining pariſh at the time when the ſheriff of the county, in obedience to the king's writ, made a return of all the vills therein, 9 E. 1. for there is no mention in his return of any ſuch place as Bagendon, if my copy of it be perfect; and the preciſe time when it became a diſtinct pariſh is uncertain. However it is mentioned in a record of 4 E. 3. by which it appears that Richard de Bagendon and Agnes his wife levied a fine thereof to Reginald Pedewardine, to the uſe of themſelves and the heirs of their bodies. And a fine of the third part of this manor was levied 11 E. 3. by Richard ſon of Richard de Bagendon, which Lucy his widow then held in dower.

This manor was afterwards conveyed to Robert Plain and others 6 R. 2. for the uſe of the chantry of the holy Trinity, in the pariſh church of Cirenceſter Cirenceſter. Trinity-mill in this pariſh obtained that name becauſe it belonged to that chantry. And a ſpring of fine water is ſtill known by the name of Trinity-well for the ſame reaſon, to which many virtues are attributed, particularly that of curing ſore eyes.

After the diſſolution of chantries, the manor was granted to ſir John Thynn and Chriſtian his wife, 3 E. 6. and it hath continued in that family ever ſince, ſo that the lord viſcount Weymouth is the preſent lord of the manor. His lordſhip's arms are, Barry of ten, Or and ſable. Creſt, On a wreath, a rein-deer Or. Supporters, on the dexter-ſide, A rein-deer Or, gorged with a plain collar ſable; on the ſiniſter-ſide, A lion gules. Motto, J'AY BONNE CAUSE.—It is remarkable of his lordſhip's family, that their antient name was Botevile, deſcended of ſir Geofry Botevile, who came out of Poictou into England in the reign of king John, and ſettled at Stretton in Shropſhire. They loſt their original name in the reign of king Edward the Fourth, when John Botevile was firſt called John of the Inne, from his manſion in Stretton, and thence came the ſurname of Thynne, as it is now uſed. Collins's Peerage, V. 6. p. 257.

William Nottingham and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of lands in Bagendon to the uſe of themſelves and the heirs of their bodies 20 H. 6.

Other lands in Bagendon belonged to the knights hoſpitallers of St. John of Jeruſalem, after whoſe diſſolution, they were granted to John Walter and Thomas Carpenter, 1 Mar.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory in the deanery of Cirenceſter, worth about 60*l.* a year. Lord viſcount Weymouth is patron, Mr. Timothy Mereſith the preſent incumbent. John Young, chaplain to the chantry of St. Trinity and St. Mary, in the church of St. John Baptiſt in Cirenceſter, preſented to it in the year 1403.

About ſeventeen acres of meadow and paſture, and forty-ſeven of arable, belong to the glebe.

The church is ſmall, with a very low tower, and ſome painted glaſs in the windows, but nothing further worth notice in it.

Sir Robert Atkyns reckons 13 houſes and 60 inhabitants in this pariſh; yearly births 2, burials 2. I could not get a ſight of the regiſter-book in uſe at the time when he collected thoſe materials; but in a ſeries of ten years from 1760 to 1769, both incluſive, there are regiſtered 67 baptiſms, and 24 burials; and the inhabitants having been numbered, are found to be 139, which ſhews a very great increaſe in this pariſh ſince the beginning of the preſent century. And the proportion of the whole number of inhabitants to the average of annual burials is nearly as 58 to 1, which accounts for that increaſe from the great healthineſs of the place, hardly to be equalled.

BARNSLEY.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Britwel's-barrow, four miles north-eaſt from Cirenceſter, and eighteen miles eaſtward from Glouceſter. The turnpike-road from Cirenceſter to Oxford runs through it.

The antient name of this place is Barneſleis, as in Domeſday-book. Barnwell in Cambridgeſhire is explained by Mr. Campden to ſignify the wells of children or barns; for young men and boys met there once a year upon St. John's eve, for wreſtling, and the like youthful exerciſes, and alſo to make merry with ſinging and other muſick. And it is poſſible that Barnſley may have taken its name from young people aſſembling in like manner, for their diverſion, upon the lays or paſture-grounds of this place at ſtated periods.

The air is healthy, and the ſoil good. There are large quarries, on the north-eaſt ſide of the village, adjoining to Bibury, where they raiſe a very excellent kind of white freeſtone, almoſt equal to that of Bath. The pits are fifty or ſixty feet deep, out of which they get the blocks of ſtone by means of a wheel and axis.

About twenty years ago, a vein of coal was found in one of thoſe pits, which gave hopes to the country of being ſupplied from thence at an eaſy rate, with that uſeful fuel, which came ſo expenſive to them by reaſon of long carriage; but thoſe hopes were ſoon fruſtrated, and the proprietor diſappointed. Indeed I am told that the matter was never examined into with that diligence and perſeverance which the importance of it required.

Miſs Perrot has an elegant houſe in this pariſh, built of freeſtone. It ſtands at a proper diſtance from the turnpike-road, with a park and plantations about it. The cielings are done by the beſt Italian maſters.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

At the time of the general ſurvey, the manor of Bibury, on which this of Barnſley depended, was the property of the church of Worceſter. The

The paſſage in Domeſday-book relating to Barnſley may be thus tranſlated:

'Durandus holds three hides and one yard-land 'in Berneſleis [in Becheberie hundred] of the 'biſhop [of Worceſter] as a manor depending on 'Becheberie; and Eudo holds ſeven yard-lands 'there for a manor.' Domeſday-book, p. 70.

Under Bibury may be read other particulars from this record, which are in common to both pariſhes.

Not long after the conqueſt, this manor came into the family of the Fitz-Herberts. Peter Fitz-Herbert was ſeized of it in the reign of king Henry the Third, who married the third daughter and coheir of William de Braos baron of Brecknock, and dying 19 H. 3. was ſucceeded by his ſon, called Herbertus fil' Petri, whoſe brother Reginald ſucceeded him as heir, and died ſeized of this manor 14 E. 1. leaving John his ſon and heir, the laſt of that name who were owners of Barnſley; for Hugh le Diſpencer the elder had a charter of free-warren in Barndeſly 28 E. 1. which manor he afterwards ſettled on his ſon Hugh le Diſpencer the younger, who being attainted of high treaſon, his eſtate was forfeited to the crown, and granted 1 E. 3. to Edmund earl of Kent, grandſon to king Edward the Firſt. He was ſucceeded by his brother John earl of Kent, who died ſeized thereof 26 E. 3. without iſſue; whereby this manor came to Joan his ſiſter and heir, commonly called the Fair Maid of Kent, at that time married to ſir Thomas Holland, who in her right was created earl of Kent by king Edward the Third, and died in the thirty-fourth year of that king's reign. She was afterwards married to the Black Prince, and by him was mother to king Richard the Second. It is very remarkable that ſhe had been twice married before, and twice divorced. She died in the ninth year of her ſon's reign, and the right of the manor of Barnſley deſcended to Thomas Holland earl of Kent, her ſon by her firſt huſband, who dying 20 R. 2. was ſucceeded by her ſon Thomas Holland earl of Kent and duke of Surry, beheaded at Cirenceſter 1 H. 4. as will be related more at large under that place. Leaving no iſſue, he was ſucceeded by his brother Edmund earl of Kent, who alſo died without iſſue. But this manor was held in dower fifty-eight years by Elizabeth, widow of the forementioned John earl of Kent, who died ſeized thereof 10 H. 4.

After her death the manor deſcended to Elianor Holland, ſiſter and coheir to the family of the Hollands. She was married to Roger Mortimer earl of March, whereby this eſtate was carried into that name and family; for Edmund Mortimer, their ſon and heir, died ſeized of it 3 H. 6. without iſſue; and Richard duke of York, ſon of Anne his ſiſter, and heir to the crown of England, became his heir. But this prince was ſlain at the battle of Wakefield in the laſt year of king Henry the Sixth, whereupon Cicely dutcheſs of York, his widow, had the grant of this manor the ſame year, and a confirmation of it 1 E. 4. She died in the year 1495, and king Henry the Seventh having married the heireſs of the houſe of York, became heir to this manor in right of his queen.

It was ſoon after granted to Thomas Moreton, upon whoſe death it deſcended to ſir Robert Moreton his ſon, who died ſeized of it 6 H. 8. William his ſon ſucceeded him, and died at thirteen years of age 14 H. 8. whereupon it came to his ſiſter Dorothy, married to Ralph Johnſon, who had livery of the manor of Barnſley granted to them 16 H. 8.

From them it paſſed by purchaſe to William Bourchier, eſq; ſon of Anthony Bourchier, and of Thomaſin, ſiſter of ſir Walter Wildmay, and daughter of ſir Miles Mildmay; which William married Suſan the daughter of —— Brown, and dying 6 Eliz. Thomas Bourchier, his ſon and heir, had livery of this eſtate granted to him the ſame year. He dying, left two daughters coheireſſes, whereof Anne was married to Thomas Rich, of North Cerney, eſq; but Walter Bourchier, brother to Thomas, ſucceeded in the manor of Barnſley, of which he had livery 4 Jac. He married Mary the daughter of — Brown, of Shingleton in Kent, and was lord of this manor in the year 1608. William Bourchier, his ſon and heir, married Martha, daughter of Randall Brereton, eſq; and was ſucceeded in this eſtate by his ſon Brereton Bourchier, eſq; who married firſt, Elizabeth, daughter and heireſs of Thomas Hulbert, of Corſham in Wiltſhire; ſecondly, Catherine the youngeſt daughter of James lord Chandois.

From the Bourchiers this eſtate went by marriage to Henry Perrot, eſq; who left two daughters coheireſſes, the younger of whom died unmarried in the year 1773, whereby the manor of Barnſley, and a large eſtate in this pariſh, became ſolely veſted in Mrs. Caſſandra Perrot, the ſurviving ſiſter. Her arms are, Gules, three pears Or; on a chief argent, a demy lion rampant ſable.

There were ſeveral lands in this pariſh belonging to the priory of Lanthony near Glouceſter, moſt of which, after the diſſolution of that priory, were granted to William earl of Southampton and his heirs male, 31 H. 8. And others of them were granted to John Pope 37 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory within the peculiar of Bibury, worth about 140*l.* a year. Mrs. Perrot is patroneſs; Mr. Charles Coxwell the preſent incumbent. There were fifty acres of arable land belonging to the glebe, but they were exchanged for other lands, when the common fields were incloſed in the year 1762, and the glebe now conſiſts of about twenty computed acres, which are let for 16*l.* a year.

Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford and Eſſex, in right of Joan his wife, was ſeized of the advowſon of this church 46 E. 3. which paſſed in marriage, with Elianor one of their daughters, to to Thomas duke of Glouceſter; and Elianor ſurviving her huſband died ſeized of it 1 H. 4. from whom it deſcended to Anne, one of her daughters and coheireſſes, married to Edmond earl of Stafford, who, in her right, died ſeized of the advowſon of this church 4 H. 4.

The church hath an aile on the north ſide, and a ſmall tower at the weſt end. It was built by ſir Giles Tame, who alſo built the inn at this place for his own accommodation in the road from his houſe at Fairford to Rendcombe, where he was then building the pariſh church of that place.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

In the chancel, againſt the north wall, is a white marble monument with the following inſcription:

There is alſo a ſmall marble monument for Sarah, widow of William Bourchier, M. A. late rector of Hatherop in this county; and daughter of Robert Brereton of Cirenceſter, gent. with the Bourchiers arms, as before, impaling thoſe of Brereton, i. e. Barry of five pieces, argent and ſable. She died in 1762, aged 93.

Alſo a Latin memorial on a flat ſtone for Richard Payne, M. A. rector of this church forty-two years, who died in 1739. And for Anne his wife, who died in 1742. Their arms are palewiſe, 1. Azure, three beſants; on a chief embattled argent, as many as in the field, for Payne. 2. The arms of Perrot.

BARNWOOD.

THIS is a ſmall pariſh in the united hundreds of Dudſton and King's-Barton. It lies in the vale country, one mile eaſt from Glouceſter, upon the turnpike-road from that city to London; and conſiſts of rich paſture, with ſome arable land. A ſmall brook runs from Prinknaſh thro' this place to Glouceſter.

The name of this village ſhews that it was antiently over-run with wood, which indeed was the caſe with two or three other little hamlets adjoining to it, for Wotton is nothing more than the wood town, or woody town; and Hucklecot ſignifies the high wood, from the Britiſh Ukel high, and coed a wood.

The old Roman road from Glouceſter to Cirenceſter runs through this place, but it is ſo worn out and deſtroyed as not to be diſcoverable, by a ſlight obſerver.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

It hath been already ſhewn from Domeſday-book, p. 206, that the church of St. Peter of Glouceſter held Berneuude in Dudeſtanes hundred, as a member of the manor of Bertune, in the reign of king Edward the Confeſſor. See alſo Domeſday-book, p. 71.

This manor, with all its appurtenances, was confirmed to the abbey of Glouceſter by William the Conqueror, when Serlo was abbat; and king Edward the Third granted to the abbey free-warren in all their demean lands at Bernewode, in the twenty-eighth year of his reign. In ſome papers relating to the abbey, are the following particulars concerning this eſtate in the ſeventeenth year of the laſt mentioned reign. The abbey had then four carucates of land of 20*s. per ann.* each; two mills of 30*s.* 6*d. per ann.* and, as it is there expreſſed, relaxationem operum et cenſuum per ann. 13*s.* 4*d.* the ſum being 6*l.* 3*s.* 10*d.*

The abbey continued ſeized of this manor 'till the diſſolution of religious foundations, when it was granted by king Henry the Eighth, in the thirty-third year of his reign, to the chapter of Glouceſter, by the charter of endowment, and is part of the revenues of the dean and chapter of that cathedral.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy in the deanery of Glouceſter, worth 35*l.* a year. The impropriation pays 12*l.* a year to the curate. The dean and chapter of Glouceſter are patrons and impropriators.

The church, which is dedicated to St. Lawrence, hath an aile on the north ſide of the nave, and a handſome handſome tower, with battlements, at the weſt end. It was built by abbat Parker, of St. Peter's in Glouceſter.

BARRINGTON (GREAT.)

THE principal part of this pariſh lies in Glouceſterſhire, in the lower diviſion of the hundred of Slaughter; but there are twenty-three houſes in Berkſhire, and ſome lands are reputed to be in the county of Oxford. It is three miles weſt from Burford in Oxfordſhire, ſix eaſt from Northleach, and twenty-ſix eaſt from Glouceſter; bounded on the north by Bledington, on the ſouth by Little Barrington, and on the eaſt by Tainton in Oxfordſhire.

It gave denomination to the hundred of Bernitone, now compriſed in that of Slaughter, for that was the antient manner of writing the name of this place, as in Domeſday-book. If there had been ſome Saxon or other antient proprietor of the manor of the name of Bernard or Berni, the etymology would have been eaſy; but we have no account of the names of the proprietors in thoſe early times.

That part which belongs to Berkſhire is many miles diſtant from the body of that county. In the preſent ſtate of things, this diviſion of the pariſh is ſo unſuitable and inconvenient, that one is at firſt diſpoſed to think it originally directed by whim and caprice; but it may be far otherwiſe, for as there are ſeveral more inſtances of the ſame nature, in this county, and as the abolition of the feudal ſyſtem hath ſo materially altered many things concerning the internal government of our country, we have loſt ſight of the reaſon of ſome eſtabliſhments, under that ſyſtem, which are continued down to us. Having already touched upon thoſe irregularities in the introductory part of this work, I ſhall not repeat what is there ſaid of them, as the reader, by turning to the 45th page, may ſee the moſt probable conjectures upon them which I have any where met with.

Lady Talbot has a fine ſeat in this pariſh, upon an eaſy elevation on the north ſide of the river Windruſh, which winds its courſe thro' the meadows in a beautiful manner, about two hundred yards below the houſe. Her ladyſhip, according to her accuſtomed generoſity, hath given a plate of her ſeat, which will convey a better idea of it than verbal deſcription.

The houſe is in Glouceſterſhire, but part of the offices in Berkſhire.

The air of this place is reckoned healthy, and the ſoil good, but it produces no ſcarce plants nor foſſils. The river I have mentioned has very fine trout, and other fiſh of leſs conſequence. Here is alſo a quarry of freeſtone remarkable for its durableneſs, and therefore, it is ſaid, much of the ſtone hath been uſed in repairing of Weſtminſter abbey; and Blenheim-houſe was built with it.

The broad cloth manufacture hath been carried on here, but there is very little done at preſent.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The Domeſday account of this village may be thus tranſlated:

'Tovi Wideneſa, a domeſtick ſervant (buſcarle) 'of earl Harold, held Bernitone. There are four 'hides. In demean are three plow-tillages, and 'ten villeins, and five bordars with five plow-til-'lages. There are four ſervi, and a mill of 5s. '[value.] It is worth 8*l.* and was worth 7*l.* 'Elſi de Ferendone holds it in farm of the king.

'Eilmer held four hides in Berniitone for a 'manor in the time of king Edward. There is 'one plow-tillage in demean, and ſeven villeins 'and three bordars, with four plow-tillages. 'There are ſix ſervi, and a mill of 5s. It was 'worth 100s. now 60s. Godwin de Stantone 'holds it in farm of the king.' Dom. Book, p. 67.

This manor afterwards belonged to the priory of Lanthony near Glouceſter. The prior purchaſed a charter of free-warren in Berinthon and ſeveral other manors, 21 E. 1.

At the diſſolution of that monaſtery it was veſted in the crown, and the manor, with the tithes of the demeans, were granted to John Gyſe, anceſtor of ſir William Guyſe of Rendcombe, in exchange for Aſple-Gyeſe in Bedfordſhire, 32 H. 8.

It was afterwards purchaſed, with the fiſhery, free warren, and frank-pledge, by Richard Mo[rd]nington, eſq; who levied a fine thereof 1 Mar.

He had an only child Anne, married to Reginald Bray, eſq; and ſo this eſtate came into the family, which continued in poſſeſſion of it above two hundred years. About the year 1734, it was purchaſed, together with the manor of Great Riſſington in this county, and thoſe of Tainton and Fifield in Oxfordſhire, of Reginald Mo[rd] Bray, eſq;* in the name of the late lord chan[cellor] Ta[lbot]

* This family is of very antient extraction. Le ſeigneur de Bray, lord of Braie, or Bray, in Normandy, came into England with the Conqueror, of whom mention is made in the Hiſtoriarum of Matthew Weſtminſter. Ralph de Braye, [lord] Cu[rtenay]

Talbot, but principally with a part of the fortune of the preſent Mary counteſs Talbot, wife of William earl Talbot, lord ſteward of his majeſty's houſhold, and ſole daughter and heireſs of Adam de Cardonnel, eſq; ſecretary at war in the reign of queen Anne. This purchaſe was made in her ladyſhip's minority; but on her coming to age, about ſix years afterwards, ſhe ſold her eſtates in Hampſhire, Suſſex, and Yorkſhire, and bought the whole of thoſe four manors abovementioned, and her ladyſhip is the preſent proprietor of them. Her coat of arms is, Gules, a lion rampant, within a border engrailed Or; a creſcent for difference.—Supporters, On either ſide a talbot argent, collared with a double treſſure flory counter flory gules.—Motto, HUMANI NIHIL ALIENUM.

Other lands in Barrington belonged to the priory of Burton, and were granted to Edmund Hermor 35 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage in the deanery of Stow, worth 75*l.* a year. Lady Talbot is patroneſs, and has the impropriation, which pays 6*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* yearly to the crown. It formerly belonged to the priory of Lanthony.

The lady of the manor pays one acre of wheat, and another of barley, in lieu of tithe-corn of the demeans; and a modus in money for ſheep and mills.

Mr. Bradley, ſometime vicar of this pariſh, built a vicarage-houſe, which ſtood in Berkſhire; but that was exchanged, ſome years ago, with lord Talbot, for another houſe which ſtands in the ſame county.

The church is dedicated to St. Peter. It is a handſome building, with a tower, adorned with battlements and pinnacles, at the weſt end, and an aile on the north ſide, which was the burying-place of the family of the Brays. There are ſix bells.

Cumtone, was ſheriff of the counties of Northampton, Southampton, Somerſet, Dorſet, Oxford, Leiceſter, Bedford, and Bucks, in the reigns of John and Henry the Third. There was a ſir James Bray of the county of Northampton, from whom the deſcent of this family is regularly deduced in Vincent's book in the heralds office.

Thomas Bray was great grandſon of ſir James; William was ſon and heir of Thomas, and Edmund Bray, of Eton Bray, in the county of Bedford, was ſon and heir of William. He had a ſon Richard, who was privy-counſellor to king Henry the Sixth, and was buried in Worceſter cathedral. By his ſecond wife he had iſſue ſir Reginald, and another ſon, John.

Sir Reginald was receiver-general to ſir Henry Stafford, who married Margaret counteſs of Richmond, mother to king Henry the Seventh. When the duke of Buckingham had concerted, with Morton biſhop of Ely, the union of the houſes of York and Lancaſter, by the marriage of the earl of Richmond with the princeſs Elizabeth, ſir Reginald, by the biſhop's recommendation, was employ'd to tranſact that affair with the counteſs, and other principal perſons, which he manged with great dexterity and ſucceſs.

King Henry was ſo ſenſible of his ſervices, that he made him knight of the Bath at his coronation, and, in the firſt year of his reign, appointed him joint chief juſtice with lord Fitz-Walter, of all the foreſts ſouth of Trent, and to be one of the privy-council. He was afterwards appointed high treaſurer, choſen knight of the garter, made chancellor of the dutchy of Lancaſter, and high ſteward of the Univerſity of Oxford; and he was alſo made knight banneret. Theſe and many other honours and great emoluments are mentioned by our hiſtorians to have been conferred upon him by the king, particularly by Hall, Hollinſhead, Anſtis, and Aſhmole. He died in the year 1503, without iſſue, and was buried in the chapel at Windſor. He had a younger brother, John, who had three ſons, Edmund, Edward, and Reginald.

Edmund, the eldeſt ſon, ſucceeded to a large part of ſir Reginald's eſtate, and in 1530, had ſummons to parliament as baron of Eton Bray. He married Jane, daughter and heir of ſir Richard Haleighwell, who brought many great eſtates into his family, and had iſſue by her one ſon, John, and ſix daughters. John lord Bray died without iſſue, whereby his ſix ſiſters became his coheireſſes.

I return now to ſir Edward Bray, ſecond ſon of John, who married Elizabeth, daughter and coheir of Henry Lovell, from whom he was divorced, and afterwards married Beatrice, daughter of Ralph Shirley, of Wiſtenton in Suſſex, by whom he had three two ſons, Edward and Owen, and one daughter. She dying, he married Jane, daughter of ſir Matthew Brown, of Betchworth caſtle in Surry, (and widow of Francis Poyntz, eſq;) by whom he had no iſſue; which laſt marriage was a very unfortunate one for his family; for dying, he gave all his fee-ſimple eſtate to his wife Jane for life, with all his woods and underwoods, and willed that if his ſon Edward interrupted her, ſhe ſhould have them in fee.

Sir Edward Bray ſucceeded his father in the ſettled eſtates, but diſagreeing with lady Jane, ſhe ſold all the lands in her power by her huſband's will, whereby the paternal eſtate was greatly diminiſhed. He married firſt, Magdalene, daughter of ſir Thomas Cotton, by whom he had iſſue Reginald his ſon and heir. He had alſo a ſecond wife Mary, by whom he had three daughters. In the latter part of his life he reſided at Shere in Surry, which has been the reſidence of his deſcendants ever ſince.

Reginald Bray, eſq; only ſon of ſir Edward, married a daughter of Richard Covert, of Haſcomb in Surry, eſq; by whom he had three ſons and one daughter.

Edward, his eldeſt ſon, married Jane, daughter of Edward Covert, of Twynham in Suſſex, eſq; by whom he had ſeven children; and by a ſecond wife he had one daughter.

Edward, his eldeſt ſon and heir, married Suſanna, daughter of William Heath, of Pedinghoe, eſq; by whom he had ſeven children.

Edward, the eldeſt, married Frances, daughter of Morgan Randyll, of Chilworth in Surry, eſq; by whom he had nine children; and by this marriage his deſcendants have a claim of founder's kin at All Souls college, Oxford.

Randyll, his eldeſt ſon, dying without iſſue, Edward, the ſecond ſon, became his father's heir. He married Anne, eldeſt daughter of George Duncombe, rector of Shere, by whom he had four ſons, of whom

George, his eldeſt ſon, ſucceeded him, and entered into holy orders in the year 1752. — Edward, his ſecond ſon, was bred a ſurgeon, and was appointed ſurgeon to the thirty-fifth regiment of foot. — Charles, the third ſon, died an infant. — William, the fourth ſon, was bred an attorney, had an employment at the board of green cloth, and was afterwards appointed, by the lord ſteward, clerk of the verge. He married Mary, daughter of Henry Stevens, of Wipley in Surry, gent. by whom he has iſſue ſeveral children.

But the branch of this family to whom Barrington belonged, ſprung from Reginald Bray, third ſon of John, and youngeſt nephew of the firſt ſir Reginald. This Reginald the nephew married Anne, daughter and heir of Richard Monnington, of Barrington, eſq; and ſettled there. He was ſucceeded by Edmond his eldeſt ſon, who married Agnes, daughter and heir of Edmund Harman, of Taynton in Oxfordſhire, by whom he had Edmond his ſon and heir, who married Dorothy, daughter of ſir John Tracy, of Toddington. He was a captain in queen Elizabeth's time, of whom further mention is made under Monuments and Inſcriptions.

Sir Giles, ſon and heir of the laſt Edmond, married Anne, daughter of Richard Chetwood, and was ſucceeded by his ſon and heir ſir Edmond, who was an active royaliſt, and was forced to compound for 1191*l.* 15*s.* 9*d.* He died about 1684, and was ſucceeded by Reginald his ſon and heir, who alſo died in 1688. Edmond his fourth ſon became his heir, and married Frances, daughter and coheir of ſir John Morgan, of Lantarnam in Monmouthſhire, bar^t. with whom he had a great eſtate. Reginald Morgan Bray was his eldeſt ſon and heir, who ſold Barrington, as above related, and died without iſſue.

Monuments

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

Lord chancellor Talbot is buried in the chancel without any memorial.

There is a handſome marble monument in the church, againſt the wall of the north aile, for captain Edmund Bray, with the figures of him and his wife well executed.

And in the ſame aile is a handſome freeſtone monument, without any inſcription. It repreſents a man in armour, lying at length, with his ſword girt on the right ſide, and is ſaid to be for another captain Edmund Bray, father of ſir Giles Bray, who had unhappily killed a man, and was pardoned by queen Elizabeth at Tilbury camp. He ever afterwards wore his ſword on the right ſide, and never uſed his right hand, in token of his true ſorrow, and ſincere repentance. The arms of the family are in a ſcutcheon over the monument, viz. Argent, a chevron between three eagles legs erazed ſable.

There is an inſcription for Reginald Bray, eſq; who died in the year 1692. And another for James Stephens, eſq; who married Barbara, daughter of Reginald Bray, eſq; and for James and John two of their children, who died young. The arms of Stephens, impaling thoſe of Bray, are on the monument, viz. Per chevron, azure and argent, in chief two eagles diſplay'd Or.

There is a memorial, on a flat ſtone in the chancel, for Philip Parſons, M. D. preſident of Hart-hall in Oxford, who died in 1653, with his arms, Gules, two chevronels, in the dexter canton an eagle diſplay'd.

There are four-'teen ſervi, and a mill of 10*s.* [rent] and twenty 'acres of meadow. It is worth and was worth '8*l.* Domeſday-book, p. 77.

The maſter of the knights-templers was ſeized of court-leet, waifs, and felons goods in Little Barrington, by the grant of king Henry the Third.

The prior of Lanthony held another manor in Little Barrington, which had been granted by Maud the Empreſs, 15 E. 1. and ſeveral privileges were allowed the ſame year in a writ of Quo Warranto.

One of theſe manors, probably the firſt, was held of William de Clinton earl of Huntingdon, 28 E. 3.

Other lands in Little Barrington belonged to the abbey of Bruern in Oxfordſhire, and were granted to Edward Powell, 36 H. 8.

This manor was the joint property of Thomas Smith, eſq; of London, and Mr. Joſeph Ellis of Ebley, in the year 1768; but ſince the death of the latter, his nephew Mr. Thomas Ellis hath purchaſed purchaſed Mr. Smith's moiety, and is the preſent proprietor of the manor.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage in the deanery of Stow, worth about 35*l.* a year before the incloſing; which has conſiderably improved it. The priory of Lanthony near Glouceſter had formerly the preſentation to this church, which is now in the lord chancellor.

A portion of tithes formerly belonging to Lanthony priory, was granted to Lawrence Baſkerville and William Blake, 3 Jac. The impropriator hath now an eſtate allotted him in lieu of tithes.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary, and has an aile on the north ſide, and a tower at the weſt end, adorned with battlements.

There is an eſtate in this pariſh, which now lets for 22*l.* a year, for the repairs of the church, and relief of the poor.

This pariſh is rated in the public tax with Great Barrington.

At the beginning of this century, according to Mr. Robert Atkyns, there were 18 houſes, and about 82 inhabitants in this pariſh. The yearly births 2, and burials 2. In a ſeries of ſeven years, from 1761 to 1767 incluſive, there were regiſter'd 24 baptiſms, and 14 burials; and the preſent number of inhabitants is 124, exactly in the proportion of 62 to 1 of the average number of annual burials. A remarkable inſtance of ſalubrity.

BARTON near GLOUCESTER.

See SUBURBS of GLOUCESTER, p. 206.

BATSFORD.

PART of this pariſh is ſituated on the ſlope of a hill looking towards the eaſt; the reſt in a vale. It lies in the upper diviſion of the large hundred of Kifteſgate, four miles ſouthward from Campden, and ſix north from Stow in this county; eight weſt from Shipſton in Worceſterſhire, and twenty-nine north-eaſtward from Glouceſter. It is bounded by Blockley (a large detached pariſh in Worceſterſhire) on the weſt and north ſides, and by Morton-in-marſh and Bourton-on-the-hill on the ſouth, extending to the place where four counties meet, of which there is a particular account under Morton-in-marſh.

The pariſh is three miles in length and one in breadth; the air healthy, and the ſoil, for the moſt part, a fine loam.

The modern name implies an idea of the place being ſituated at the ford of ſome brook or river. The antient name of it was Beceſhore, and ſignifies nearly the ſame, from bec, a ſtream of water; accordingly there is a ſmall brook which runs into the Evenlode, which riſes near this place.

The great Roman foſs-road, from the north, runs through the pariſh, and ſo on to Cirenceſter, Bath, &c. and there is a ſmall intrenchment, almoſt intire, ſuppoſed to have been thrown up by the Romans.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Soon after the Norman conqueſt, Ansfrid de Comeliis was poſſeſſed of ſeveral good eſtates in Glouceſterſhire, of which this was one, deſcribed in the record in the following manner:

'The ſame Ansfrid holds Beceſhore in Witelai 'hundred. Briſmer held it. There are three 'hides. In demean are three plow-tillages, and 'ten villeins, with ſix plow-tillages, and ſixteen 'ſervi, and one man paying ſix ſochs. It was 'worth 8*l.* and is now worth 6*l.* Dom. B. p. 78.

From Ansfrid it deſcended to his ſon and heir Richard de Cormeliis, who dying 23 H. 2. was ſucceeded by Walter his ſon, who left three daughters coheireſſes, Margaret, Albreda, and Sybil; of whom, the firſt held Begſoure 10 H. 3.

But Hugh Giffard, a younger brother to Elias Giffard of Brimpsfield, marrying Sybil the youngeſt daughter, had the manor of Beckſhore, with others, aſſigned to him for her ſhare. He was made conſtable of the tower of London 20 H. 3. Walter de Giffard was their ſon and heir, who dying without iſſue, was ſucceeded by his brother Golefry, whoſe ſon Golefry, or Geofry Giffard, was ſeized of Beckſhore, and purchaſed a charter of free warren therein, 9 E. 3.

From this time there is a large vacancy in the account of the deſcent of this manor; for we come next to John Croker, eſq; who was lord of it in 1608. He left three daughters coheireſſes, from whom were deſcended ſir Chriſtopher Hales, formerly of Coventry, —— Pye, of Farringdon, eſq; and a family of the name of Barker, of Berkſhire, who enjoyed this manor in the year 1712.

The manor of Batsford, and a great eſtate in the pariſh, is now the property of Thomas-Edwards Freeman, eſq; deſcended from an antient family, juſtly eſteemed in their country, which has long reſided in this place. John Freeman was ſeated here in the reign of Henry the Seventh. Thomas Freeman was a deſcendant from him, whoſe ſon Richard Freeman married Margaret, daughter of —— Rutter, of Queinton, eſq; He was ſucceeded by his ſon John, who married Anne, daughter of —— Croft, of Sutton; and was alſo ſucceeded by his ſon Richard Freeman, who married Elizabeth, daughter of ſir Anthony Keck, one of the lords commiſſioners of the great ſeal, in the reign of king William the Third, by whom he had an only child Mary, of whom hereafter. His ſecond wife was Anne, daughter and heir of Richard Marſhall, eſq; of Sellaby, in the county of Durham.

He was made lord chief baron of the exchequer in Ireland, in the year 1706, and his eminent merit ſoon advanced him to be lord high chancellor, and to be one of the lords juſtices to govern that kingdom in the abſence of the lord lieutenant. Theſe great preferments were not his own ſeeking; his great prudence, integrity, and moderation claimed ſo high a ſtation. He died in Ireland in the year 1710, having continued in the poſſeſſion of thoſe high offices to the time of his death.

Richard Freeman, eſq; only ſon of the chancellor, by Anne Marſhall, his ſecond wife, ſucceeded his father in this and his other eſtates, and married Margaret-Elizabeth Sawyer, daughter of —— Sawyer, of Bedfordſhire, eſq; by whom he left no iſſue. Walter-Edwards Freeman, eſq; (ſon of Mary, only daughter of chancellor Freeman, married to Walter Edwards, of the county of Glouceſter, eſq;) ſucceeded his uncle in this and other eſtates, and dying unmarried, was ſucceeded by Thomas-Edwards Freeman, eſq; youngeſt ſon of the ſaid Mary, already mentioned to be the preſent lord of this manor. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Reveley, of Newby-Wiſk, in the county of York, eſq; by whom he has living one ſon, Thomas, born in 1754. He gives two coats of arms quarterly. 1ſt and 4th, Azure, three lozenges in feſs, Or. 2d and 3d, Party per bend ſiniſter, ermine and erminois, a lion rampant Or.

Mr. Freeman has an elegant ſeat here, of which he has been pleaſed to give the annexed engraving.

Of the other eſtates, the records ſhew that Richard Thurgreen was ſeized of divers lands in Beckſhore, and left them to Joan his only child, married to Thomas Hoddington, who together levied a fine thereof to themſelves in ſpecial tail, the remainder to Thomas the ſon of Alexander de Beckford, 14 R. 2.

Lands called Monk-meadow, or Monken-meadow, in Batesford, belonged to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, and were granted to John Fernham 22 Eliz.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory in the deanery of Campden, worth 180*l.* a year, of which the glebe only is worth about 100*l.* This land was ſet out for the rector, when the pariſh was incloſed, in the reign of queen Elizabeth. Chriſt-Church college in Oxford is patron, the reverend Edward Smallwell, B. D. the preſent rector.

Richard Thurgreen was ſeized of the advowſon of this church, which deſcended from him in the ſame manner as the lands above mentioned, down to 14 R. 2.

The abbey of Winchcombe was poſſeſſed of tithes in Batesford, which, after the diſſolution, were granted to ſir Thomas Seimour, 1 E. 6.

This pariſh was under the peculiar juriſdiction of Blockley in Worceſterſhire, where they formerly buried; and the inhabitants ſtill pay mortuaries to the vicarage of that place.

All the lands in the pariſh are ſubject to tithe.

The church is ſmall, and was formerly called the chapel of Beckford.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

There is a monument in the church to the memory of lord chancellor Freeman, his ſon Richard Freeman, eſq; and other branches of the family.

Another monument in memory of the reverend doctor Thomas Burton, prebendary of Durham, and late rector of this pariſh.

BAUNTON.

THIS is a ſmall village in the hundred of Crowthorn and Minety, one mile diſtant north from Cirenceſter, and ſixteen ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter. It is ſituated on the ſouth ſide of the river Churn, which runs to Cirenceſter.

The name of the place was antiently written Baudintone, and Pennington. The latter manner of writing it, more eſpecially carries with it the idea of its ſituation at the top of the town, i. e. Cirenceſter; for pen or ben, in the Britiſh language, ſignifies the top of any thing; and in that the place ſeems to have been formerly dependent on that town, where its inhabitants had formerly a right of ſepulture.

The place affords nothing obſervable in its hiſtory. The common fields and commonable places were incloſed and divided, about the year 1768, to the great advantage of the proprietors. The air is healthy, and the ſoil chiefly employed in tillage.

Battesford the Seat of Thomas Edwards Freeman Esqr.

Published as the Act directs Sept. 9 1779.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book are the following particulars: 'Edric the ſon of Ketel holds Baudintone, in Cirenceſtre hundred, of the king, which his father held in the time of king Edward. There are three hides and three yard-lands taxed. In demean are two plow-tillages, and three villeins with one plow-tillage, and four ſervi, and fifteen arces of meadow. It is worth and was worth 60*s*.' Domeſday-book, p. 79.

'Goisfridus Orleteile holds of the king, in Baudintune, two hides and one yard-land, taxed. Bolli held them. It is not in demean; but there are two villeins, and eight bordars, with three plow tillages. It is worth and was worth 40*s*. There are eight acres of meadow.' Domeſday-book, p. 76.

Sir Robert Atkyns, under this head, aſſerts, that the manor of Baudintone was held of Hugh de Audley earl of Glouceſter, and Margaret his wife, 21 E. 3. and that it was held of Humphry de Bohun earl of Hereford and Eſſex, and of Joan his wife, 46 E. 3. and of Hugh earl of Stafford, by half a fee, 10 R. 2. of Thomas earl of Stafford, the 16th, and of William his brother, 22 R. 2. But I am of opinion, that the ſeveral records referred to by theſe dates, relate not to this place, but to Boddington, in the hundred of Tewkeſbury, which was held as of the honour of Glouceſter, and is ſaid to be within the juriſdiction of the honour court at this time.

The abbey church of Cirenceſter was very early poſſeſſed of the manor of Baudintone, of which Robert Playne and others, for the uſe of that church, were ſeized 6 R. 2. and it continued to be part of the poſſeſſions of that abbey, 'till the diſſolution of it; upon which event, the family of the Georges became lords of it. They had been long owners of an eſtate in this place, which came to them by the marriage of William George with Catherine, daughter and coheir of Robert de Pennington, 3 E. 2. and it continued in that family four hundred years.

Chriſtopher George married Anne, daughter of Robert Strange, of Cirenceſter. Robert George, his ſon, married Margaret, daughter of Edward Aldſworth, eſq; and was ſucceeded by John George, his brother, eminent for his loyalty in the great civil wars, and who ſerved in parliament for burgeſs of Cirenceſter, in the reigns of king Charles the Firſt, and king Charles the Second. He died in 1675, leaving an only daughter, married to Richard Whitmore, of Slaughter, eſq; but he ſettled the manor of Baunton on his nephews. William George, his ſurviving nephew, ſold it to Thomas Maſter, of Cirenceſter, eſq; about the end of the laſt century, whoſe deſcendant in a direct line, Thomas Maſter, of Cirenceſter, eſq; is the preſent lord of the manor. See Cirenceſter.

Of the other eſtates, the records ſhew, that John Lin of Baudinton, and Alice his wife, levied a fine of lands therein, to the uſe of themſelves in tail ſpecial, 11 E. 3.

William Nottingham levied a fine of lands in Baunton, to the uſe of himſelf in ſpecial tail, 20 H. 6.

Lands in Baunton, formerly belonging to the knights hoſpitallers, were granted to John Walters and Thomas Carpenter, 1 Mar.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is an impropriation, in the deanery of Cirencester, worth 10*l*. a year to the curate. It formerly belonged to the abbey of Cirenceſter. Thomas Maſter, eſq; is patron and impropriator; Mr. Joſeph Chapman the preſent incumbent.

The church is ſmall, without a ſteeple. In the year 1625, Dr. Godfrey Goodman, then biſhop of Glouceſter, conſecrated the burying ground, at the requeſt of John George, eſq; before which time the inhabitants buried at Cirenceſter.

At the beginning of this century there were 18 houſes and about 70 inhabitants in this pariſh; yearly births 2, burials 1. Atkyns. But examining the pariſh regiſter, I find, that in a ſeries of ten years, from 1700 to 1709 inclusive, there were 15 baptiſms and 7 burials; and in a like ſeries, from 1760 to 1769, there are regiſtered 30 baptiſms and 21 burials; and the number of inhabitants is 56.

BECKFORD.

THIS pariſh is ſituate in the vale. The greater part of it lies in the hundred of Tibbleſtone, but the tithing of Didcot is in the upper part of Tewkeſbury hundred. The pariſh is five miles diſtant north-weſt from Winchcombe, five north-eaſt from Tewkeſbury, and fifteen north from Glouceſter. It is about four miles in length, and as many in breadth; bounded on the eaſt by Aſton-under-hill, on the weſt by Kemmerton, on the north by Overbury, in Worceſterſhire, and on the ſouth by Teddington, a detached pariſh belonging to the laſt mentioned county.

This pariſh was incloſed in the year 1773. Part of Breedon hill lies within it, on the ſide of which great numbers of Roman coins have been found, of which further mention will be made under Kemmerton.

The hundred of Tibbleſtone, antiently written Tetboldeſtane, derives its name from a ſtone in this pariſh, now ſtanding near the turnpike-road from Tewkeſbury to London.

The

The river Caran, or Carant, riſes here, and runs into the Avon near Tewkeſbury.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Beckford is one of thoſe manors, placed in Domeſday-book, under the head Terra Regis, where it is expreſſed after this manner :

'Rotleſc, huſcarle of king Edward, held Bece-'ford in Tetboldeſtane hundred. There were 'eleven hides, and three plow-tillages in demean, 'and thirty-four villeins, and ſeventeen bordars, 'having thirty plow-tillages. There are twelve 'ſervi, and four ancillæ. Earl William gave three 'hides of this manor to Ansfridus de Cormeliis, 'in which were twelve villeins with five plow-'tillages.' Domeſday-book, p. 69.

'Turbertus, a thane of earl Herald, held Eſtone. 'There are eight hides, and four plow-tillages in 'demean, and ten villeins and four bordars with 'ſix plow-tillages. There are eight ſervi, and 'three ancillæ. Of theſe two villages earl Wil-'liam made one manor, and they were not put 'to farm 'till Roger de Lurei let them for 30*l.* 'The ſame earl gave the tithe and the churches, 'with two villeins, and three virgates of land, to 'the abbey of Cormeile.' Domeſday-book, p. 69.

Robert Fitz-Alan founded a priory of regular canons in this place, which was made a cell to the abbey of St. Martin and St. Barbara in Normandy. For the charters of grants relating thereto, ſee Appendix, N°. 28.

The priory was ſeized of the manor of Beckford, Aſton, and Grafton, 56 H. 3.

William de Beauchamp earl of Warwick was ſeized of a manor in Beckford, with free warren and court-leet, 15 E. 1. But I apprehend it muſt have been in truſt for the priory, for the prior of Beckford held the manor of Beckford, with court-leet and waifs, and his right was allowed the ſame year, in a writ of Quo warranto.

King Edward the Third, upon his wars with France, had the eſtates of all the priories in England, that were cells to monaſteries in France, granted to him in parliament 10 E. 3. (i. e. 1336.) whereupon he let out thoſe priories to farm, with all their lands and tenements. This priory was afterwards totally ſuppreſſed in the year 1414, 2 H. 5. (when all other alien monaſteries in England were ſuppreſſed by act of parliament) and the manor of Beckford, and the lands belonging to it, were granted to Eton college, by king Henry the Sixth, in the twenty-ſecond and twenty-third years of his reign ; and afterwards they were granted to the college of Fotheringhay, 2 E. 4. And in the firſt year of king Edward the Sixth, when all the religious endowments, which had eſcaped king Henry the Eighth, were taken away, the manor and park of Beckford, with the advowſon of the vicarage, together with the rectory and advowſon of the vicarage of Grafton, all which belonged to that college, were granted to ſir Richard Lee.

John Wakeman was lord of this manor in the year 1608 ; and Henry Wakeman, eſq; is the preſent lord thereof, and of the hundred of Tibbleſtone, of which he holds court-leet and court-baron at Beckford. He is deſcended from the antient family of the Wakemans, of Rippon in Yorkſhire. His arms are, Vert, a ſaltire wavy ermine. Mr. Wakeman has a very large, handſome ſeat near the church.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

There are four tithings in this pariſh.

1. Beckford.

2. Grafton.

3. Bengrove. Adam de Ardeen held lands in Bengrave 56 H. 3. and Thomas Roberts died ſeized of lands in Bengrove 11 C. 1. which deſcended to Thomas his ſon.

4. Didcot, or Didcot Paſtures. Lands in Didcot formerly belonged to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, and were granted to Richard Tracy 36 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Campden. Joſeph Biddle, M. A. is the preſent patron and incumbent. The church and advowſon were given to the abbey of Cormeile by king H. 1. and having accompanied the manor, were granted, at the diſſolution of the college of Fotheringhay, to ſir Richard Lee. Mr. Wakeman, the impropriator, has the tithes of Beckford, Grafton, and Didcot ; and Mr. Morris has part of the tithes of Bengrove. The tithes of Bengrove pay 40*s.* a year to the crown.

The impropriator formerly paid the vicar eight quarters of wheat, four quarters of barley, ſix quarters of oats, and eight pounds in money yearly: but the bill for incloſing the common fields, &c. in the pariſh, empowered the commiſſioners to ſet out land for the vicar in lieu thereof. The vicarage was eſtimated at 80*l.* a year ; but it hath been lately much improved.

The church is dedicated to St. Barbara, (martyred in the reign of the emperor Maxentius) and hath a handſome high tower in the middle, with pinnacles, and a veſtry on the north ſide of the chancel.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

Againſt the north wall of the chancel is a plain marble monument, with a ſcutcheon, on which are the arms of Wakeman impaling the following, Argent, on a chevron between three lions heads erazed ſable, an eſtoile proper, for Hall. Upon the table it is thus inſcribed :

BERKELEY

IS a very large pariſh, in the lower level of the Vale of Glouceſterſhire. It lies within the hundred of the ſame name, which took denomination from the town or borough of Berkeley, ſituate about the middle of the pariſh, five miles diſtant weſt from Durſley, ſeven north from Thornbury, and eighteen ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter. The pariſh is bounded on the north-weſt by the great river Severn.

In Domeſday-book the name is written Berchelai, whereas the Saxons wrote it Beoncenlau. It is ſuppoſed to have been ſo called from Beonce, the beech-tree, becauſe it grew very plentifully there. Some perſons, however, may object to this etymology, ſince at preſent there is no beech wood in the pariſh; but it is evident that there was a wood in Berkeley, from an inquiſition taken by the king's eſcheator, 15 E. 2. wherein it is ſaid, There are forty acres of high wood, the pannage of which is worth half a mark, and no more. And furthur, to obviate the objection, it may be added, that there are many places which took denomination from antient woods, which being aſſarted, have no traces of them left but in the names of ſuch places only.

The town is one of thoſe antient boroughs, of which there were five in Glouceſterſhire in the time of king Edward the Firſt, (p. 43.) It is ſituated on the Avon, a ſmall river riſing in two heads at Boxwell and Kilcot, and receiving the contributions of two or three brooks in its courſe, falls into the Severn a little below the town, which, on this account, as I find it in Willis's Notitia Parliamentaria, hath been alſo called Aveney.

King Edward the Third granted to William lord Berkeley and his heirs, the privileges of a mintage for coining, and the return of writs within the town and hundred of Berkeley; ſo that no ſheriff, bailiff, or other of the king's officers, ſhould exerciſe any authority there; but thoſe privileges have been long ſince diſuſed, becauſe the expence of paſſing accounts in the exchequer exceeded the profits ariſing from them.

What the town was above two centuries back, may be ſeen by Leland's deſcription of it: 'The 'Towne of Berkeley,' ſays he, 'is no great 'Thinge, but it ſtandythe well, and in a very 'good Soyle. It hathe very muche occupied, and 'yet ſome what dothe, Clothinge. The churche 'ſtondithe on an Hille at the South Ende of the 'Towne. And the Caſtle ſtondithe at the South 'Weſt End of the Churche. It is no great 'Thinge. Divers Towres be in the Compaſe of 'it. The Warde of the firſt Gate is mitely 'ſtronge, and a Bridge over a Dyche to it. There 'is a ſqware Dongeon Towre in the Caſtle, ſed 'non ſtat in mole ægeſtæ Terræ. There longe to 'Berkeley 4 Parks, 2 Chaces. Okely Parke hard 'by. Whitwike. New Parke. Hawlle Parke. 'Miche Wood Chace.' Leland's Itin. v. 7. p. 96.

The town is honoured by giving both name and title to the earls of Berkeley. I come now to treat of the preſent ſtate of it. It is called a borough, tho' it ſends no members to parliament, and has a mayor annually choſen at the court-leet, who has the tolls of the town, and wheelage of all goods landed from the veſſels in the river, at 2*d.* a load; but the authority and privilege of his office ſeem to extend no further. The borough conſiſts principally of one ſtreet of mean buildings, through which there is little or no travelling, the turnpike-road from Glouceſter to Briſtol running about a mile to the ſouth of it. Several old accounts mention the clothing trade having flouriſhed in this place, but it hath long ſince deſerted it, and is not ſucceeded by any other kind of manufacture. Tueſday is the day of the market, which is ſo little frequented that it ſcarcely deſerves to be called one. Since the alteration of the ſtyle, the fair, which uſed to be on the third, is held on the fourteenth of May, for hogs and other cattle.

It hath been obſerved that this borough gives name to one of the hundreds of the county, which is very large, conſiſting of thirty-three pariſhes and tithings, beſide the borough, (p. 40). There were 2064 able men returned out of the hundred, upon a general muſter taken 6 Jac. and ſoon after the new militia law took place, 30 G. 2. the hundred of Berkeley was appointed to raiſe 85 men for its proportion towards the county militia; which was found to be the twenty-ninth part of the whole number of able men, between the ages of eighteen and fifty, that were then reſident within it, and liable to that ſervice; ſo that the whole number upon the liſts muſt then be 2465. There were formerly twelve parks, and two chaces in this hundred: Caſtle-park, Whitley-park, New-park, Okely-park, Shepnaſh-park, Ham-park, Beverſtone-park, Hill-park, Ozleworth-park, Almondeſbury-park, Cromhall-park, and Uley-park: The two chaces were Micklewood and Redwood. This hundred is famous for producing the beſt cheeſe in the kingdom.

Berkeley-caſtle is one of the few buildings of that ſort which is ſtill preſerved from ruins. It is ſaid that Roger de Berkeley began it in the ſeventeenth year of king Henry the Firſt, and that it was finiſhed by Roger the Third, in the reign of king Stephen. It is certainly of very great antiquity, and received its preſent form from Robert Fitz-Harding, who repaired and enlarged it in the reign of king Henry the Second, when it was called the honour of Berkeley. Leland has given a ſhort deſcription of it in the preceding quotation; but a conſiderable part of it was beaten down ſince his time, in the great civil war of king Charles the Firſt. The annexed plate exhibits the ſouth-weſt view of it. The Hall in the caſtle is exceeding large, and very much admired for its antient ornaments; and on the left hand at the entrance is the ſtuffed ſkin of an animal, which the old women of the town and neighbourhood believe to be that of a monſtrous toad, found in the dungeon of the caſtle; but it appears to be a ſeal ſkin, or ſomething much like it.

King Edward the Second having been thought to ſhew too great favour to the Spencers, his queen and the prince of Wales headed a party againſt him, took him priſoner, and carried him from place to place, 'till at length he was brought to this caſtle, and murdered Sept. 22, 1327. On the road from Briſtol to Berkeley, the guard made the king walk on foot whilſt they rode, and otherwiſe uſed him with contempt and deriſion. Adam Orlton, biſhop of Hereford, is ſaid deſignedly to have promoted the king's death, by writing the following ſentence to his keeper:

Edwardum occidere nolite timere bonum eſt.

yet the ſenſe is ſo ambiguous, according to the ſtops in reading of it, as to bear a contrary meaning. It is thus tranſlated in the laſt edition of the Britannia, where the ambiguity is preſerved.

To ſeek to ſhed king Edward's blood
Refuſe to fear I think it good.

But the author of the Survey of the city of Worceſter pronounces the biſhop innocent of that heinous crime, by ſhewing that he was beyond ſea all the time of the unfortunate king's confinement in the caſtle.

As the pariſh is large, ſo the ſoils are various, but a red kind of earth or clay enters into the compoſition of moſt of them. There are ſome orchards that produce good cider. The oak thrives well here, but 'tis no where leſs cultivated. It is ſhocking to ſee almoſt all the trees wantonly lopt and headed for firing, a practice the more inexcuſable, as the foreſt-coal is rendered cheap by means of the navigation up the river.

There is plenty of iron ore in this pariſh, but not a ſufficiency of wood to work it. However it appears by the great quantities of rich cinders which have been lately found at Peddington, and carried to the furnaces in the foreſt of Dean, that our anceſtors had iron-works here.

The lands lying near the Severn are very ſubject to floods from that river, which ſometimes do great damage. In a printed account of the dreadful effects of a great wind, which happened on the 26th of November, 1703, is the following paſſage: 'At Berkeley, the overflowing of the river Severn 'beat down and tore to pieces the ſea wall, 'whereby the waters flowed above a mile over the 'part of the pariſh, and did great damage to the 'land: It carried away one houſe which was by 'the ſea ſide, and a gentleman's ſtable, where 'was a horſe, into the next ground. Twenty 'ſheets of lead were blown off from the middle 'iſle of the church, and taken up all joined to 'gether, as they were on the roof, the ſheets 'weighing three hundred and a half one with 'another.'

Thoſe who would ſee the long ſtory of the witch of Berkeley, may find it in Haywood's Hiſtory

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

There was an antient, famous nunnery in this place, in the time of the Saxons, to which the large manor belonged. Who was the founder of it, and when it was founded, are circumſtances equally unknown; but the following account of its diſſolution, taken from Walter Mapes, who lived above five hundred years ſince, is not unworthy the reader's peruſal:

Berkeley is a village near Severn, of the yearly value of five hundred pounds, in which was a nunnery govern'd by an abbeſs, that was both noble and beautifull. Earl Godwyn, a notable ſubtle man, deſiring her but her's, as he paſſed by, left his nephew a young, proper, handſome ſpark, (under pretence of being ſeized with ſickneſs) 'till he ſhould return back again, and inſtructed him to counterfeit an indiſpoſition, when he had got all who came to viſit him, both lady d as many of the nuns as he could, with child. And carry on the intrigue more plauſibly, and more ectually to obtain the favour of their viſits, the earl rniſhed him with rings and girdles, that by thoſe eſents he might the more readily corrupt and gain ir inclinations. There needed no great intreaty to rſwade this young gallant to undertake an employnt ſo amorous and pleaſing. The way to deſtruction eaſy, and quickly learnt; he ſeem'd wonderful cung to himſelf, but all his cunning was but folly. him were concentered all thoſe accompliſhments that ight captivate fooliſh and unthinking virgins; auty, wit, riches, and obliging mein: and he was ighty ſolicitous to have a private apartment to himf. The devil therefore expelled Pallas, and brought Venus; and converted the church of our Saviour d his ſaints into an accurſed pantheon, the temple to a ſtew, and the lambs into wolves. When many of m proved with child, and the youth began to nguiſh, being overcome with the exceſs and variety pleaſure, he haſten'd home with the reports of his nqueſts (worthy to have the reward of iniquity) to expecting lord. The earl immediately addreſſes the ng, and acquaints him, that the abbeſs and the nuns re gotten with child, and had render'd themſelves roſtitutes to all comers; all which, upon inquiſition, as found true. Upon the expulſion of the nuns, he gs Berkeley, and had it granted him by the king, and ttled it upon his wife Gueda; but (as Domeſday-ook hath it) ſhe refuſed to eat any thing that came t of this manor, becauſe of the deſtruction of the bey: And therefore he bought Udeceſter for her intenance, whilſt ſhe lived at Berkeley: Thus a nſcientious mind can never reliſh ill gotten poſſeſſions.

But the wickedneſs of this earl did not long roſper, for the large, fruitful iſle, ſince known by e name of the Godwin Sands, being part of his oſſeſſions, was irrecoverably ſwallowed up in the ; and it was not long after, that he and his hole family were baniſhed out of the kingdom.

William the Norman, about this time, obtained e crown of England, and rewarded Roger, one his own countrymen, with this manor, who erefore aſſumed the name of Roger de Berkeley. It is one of the largeſt manors in England. In e time of Roger lord Durſley, who was alſo lord reof, it paid a fee-farm rent to the king of ol. 17*s.* 2*d.* The extent of it will appear by e following abſtract from Domeſday-book.

'In Berchelai king Edward had five hides, and n demean five plow-tillages, and twenty villeins, nd five bordars with eleven plow-tillages, and ine ſervi, and two mills of 12*s.* rent. There re ten radcheniſters having ſeven hides and even plow-tillages. There is a market-town, here ſeventeen [free] men reſide, and pay a x in farm.

'Theſe hamlets belong to Berchelai. In Hilla our hides; in Almintune four hides; in Hineune four hides; in Camma ſix hides, and eleven ther hides; in Goſintune four hides; in erſilege three hides; in Couelege four hides; in Euuelege two hides; in Nimdesfelle three hides; in Uutune fifteen hides, and half a yardland; in Simondeſhale half a hide; in Chingeſcote four hides and a half; in Beureſtane ten hides; in Oſleuuorde half a hide; in Almodeſberie two hides; in Horefelle eight hides; in Weſtone ſeven hides; in Cromale two hides; in Erlingeham nine hides; in Eſceleuuorde three hides. The above are members all belonging to Berchelai.

'There were in theſe hamlets, in the time of king Edward, forty-nine plow-tillages and a half in demean, and two hundred and forty-two villeins, and one hundred and forty-two bordars with one hundred and twenty-ſix plow-tillages. There are one hundred and twenty-ſeven ſervi.

'There are nineteen free men, radcheniſters, having forty-eight plow-tillages with their men. There are twenty-two coliberti, and fifteen ancillæ. There are eight mills of 57*s.* 6*d.* [rent.]

'In this manor, two brothers, in the time of king Edward, held five hides in Cromhal, having in demean two plow-tillages, and ſix villeins, and five bordars having ſix plow-tillages. Theſe two brothers might diſpoſe of themſelves, with their land, as they pleaſed, which was then worth 4*l.* now 3*l.* Earl William commended them to the ſteward of Berchelai, that he might have their ſervice, as Roger ſays.

'For this manor, with all its appurtenances, Roger pays a farm [rent of] 170*l.* in weight, of lawful money.

'The ſame Roger hath (belonging to this manor) two hides in Hiſlinbruge, one hide at Claenhangare, one hide at Hirſlege, [Hurſt] ſeven hides at Neuetone, [Newington Bagpath]. There are in demean ten plow-tillages, and thirteen villeins, and twenty-one bordars with twenty-two plow-tillages. There are ſixteen ſervi, and a mill of 5*s.* The whole, in the time of king Edward, was worth 9*l.* now 11*l.* 10*s.*

'The ſame Roger holds five hides, the land of Bernard the prieſt. He hath there three plow-tillages, and two villeins, and ſix bordars with five plow tillages. It was worth and is worth 60*s.*

'There are five hides in Neſſe belonging to Berchelai, which earl William ſet apart to make a little caſtle, as Roger reports.' Domeſday-book, p. 68.

The above particulars amount to the ſum of one hundred and forty-four hides and a half, and there are two hundred and ninety-four plow-tillages and a half, a prodigious eſtate for one manor.

Roger de Berkeley, the proprietor of it, was a nobleman in the court of king William, who alſo held the manors of Coberley, Dodington, and Siſton, in this county. He was a great benefactor to the priory of Stanley St. Leonard, and in the year 1091, became a ſhorn monk therein; and having no iſſue, this manor of Berkeley deſcended to William de Berkeley, his nephew and heir, who, in the year 1139, founded the monaſtery of of Kingſwood in Wiltſhire. William was ſucceeded by Roger de Berkeley, his ſon and heir, who was alſo baron of Durſley, and taking part with king Stephen againſt Henry the Second, was violently diſpoſſeſſed of his caſtle of Berkeley, by Walter, brother of Milo earl of Hereford, and his whole eſtate confiſcated.

King Henry had been aſſiſted, in thoſe wars, with great ſupplies of money, by Robert Fitz-Harding, a powerful man in thoſe times, (mayor and governor of Briſtol) whom, therefore, the king rewarded with a grant of the caſtle of Berkeley,[f] with the manor of Berthone, in the county of Glouceſter, as alſo 100*l.* a year in lands in Berkeley, and afterwards with the whole lordſhip of Berkeley, and Berkeley-herneſſe, thereunto belonging, of which Roger de Berkeley had been diveſted. He was ſurnamed Fitz-Harding, becauſe he was the ſon of Harding, mayor and governor of Briſtol, deſcended, according to Leland, from the kings of Denmark; which Harding accompanied William duke of Normandy into England, and was with him at that memorable battle againſt king Harold, at Haſtings. In Domeſday-book he is called Hardinc, where it is ſaid he held Witenhert, [now Whitenhurſt] in Glouceſterſhire, in mortgage of Brictric. Newland, abbat of St. Auguſtine's in Briſtol, wrote a pedigree of the Berkeley family, and proves that they are lineally deſcended from this Harding, who died at Briſtol, Nov. 6, 1115, 16 H. 1.

Robert Fitz-Harding, whom we ſhall now call Robert lord Berkeley, took his ſeat in the houſe of peers 1 H. 2. Roger, the former lord of this place, at the interceſſion of friends, was reſtored to the barony of Durſley; but he bore a violent hatred againſt Robert lord Berkeley, for depriving him of his inheritance, until the king interpoſed, and in the preſence of many noblemen made a counter-match in the two families; that is, between Maurice, ſon of the lord Berkeley, and Alice, daughter of the lord Durſley; and between the heir of the lord Durſley, and Helena, daughter of the lord Berkeley; and by the original writings, ſtill extant in the family, it appears, that Alice was to have 20*l.* a year in land, of the fee of Berkeley, for her dower; and Helena, the manor of Siſton for hers; whereupon all right in the barony of Berkeley was voluntarily releaſed by the lord Durſley. This Robert lord Berkeley founded the abbey of St. Auguſtine's in Briſtol, and dying in the year 1170-71, was buried in the quire thereof. Being ſtiled canonicus, he is ſuppoſed to have been a canon in that abbey, whoſe yearly revenues, at the diſſolution, were valued at 767*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.* and are the preſent maintenance of the biſhop and prebendaries of Briſtol. He married Eva, daughter of Godiva, ſiſter to William the conqueror. She founded a religious houſe called the Magdalen's, near Briſtol, and was prioreſs thereof. By her he had iſſue five ſons, Henry, Maurice, Robert, Nicholas, and Thomas; and two daughters, Helena, of whom already, and Aldena, married to Kingſcot of Kingſcot. But Henry dying young,

Maurice de Berkeley, the ſecond ſon, ſucceeded his father, and gave a fine of 1000 marks to the king, for a confirmation of his title to Berkeley and Berkeley-Herneſſe. He was the firſt of them who dwelt at Berkeley. He fortified the caſtle, and founded two hoſpitals, one at Lorwing, between Berkeley and Durſley, and that at Longbridge, to the north of Berkeley, dedicated to the holy Trinity. By his wife Alice, daughter of lord Durſley, he had iſſue ſix ſons, Robert, Thomas, Maurice, William, Henry, and Richard. The two laſt accompanying William king of Scotland into that country, when he returned from being a priſoner in England, became the anceſtors of many eminent families in Scotland, France, and Ireland. He had alſo an only daughter, married to —— Giffard. And dying, according to abbat Newland, in the year 1190, was interred in the church of Brentford, com. Middleſex, towards the building of which he had been a great benefactor.

Robert his eldeſt ſon ſucceeded his father, and 3 R. 1. gave the king 1000*l.* for livery of his inheritance. And again 1 John, he paid 60 marks for a confirmation[g] thereof, and for a charter of fairs in his manor of Berkeley. The king had oppreſt his ſubjects with large demands for the renewal of charters, for eſcuage, and other ſervices, wherefore this lord, with others, took up arms againſt him. He made his peace[h] 15 John; yet two years afterwards fell again from his duty, and with others, invited Lewis, the French king's ſon, into England, and ſwore allegiance to him, for which this lord was excommunicated by the pope, and his caſtle of Berkeley, and all his lands ſeized,[i] and the profits of the ſame ordered for the maintenance of the caſtle of Briſtol. But 18 John, he obtained letters of ſafe conduct to come to the king, then at Berkeley-caſtle; where, upon his ſubmiſſion, he got a grant of his manor of Came, in the county of Glouceſter, for the ſupport of Juliana his wife, daughter of William de Pontlarch, and niece to the great earl of Pembroke, earl marſhal of England, and afterwards protector to king H. 3. at whoſe acceſſion to the crown, in 1216, lord Robert, for a fine of [k] 966*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* was reſtored[l] to all his lands, except the caſtle and town of Berkeley. He was a great benefactor to St. Auguſtine's at Briſtol, Bradenſtoke in Wilts, Stanley priory in Glouceſterſhire, as alſo to the canons of Hereford, and built the hoſpital of St. Catherine's, at Bedminſter near Briſtol. He had two wives, (the latter was Luci, who afterwards married Hugh de Gournay) but died without iſſue by either, 1219, and was buried in a monk's cowl, in the north aile of St. Auguſtine's abbey aforeſaid.

Whereupon, Thomas his brother and heir had livery of his lands, and afterwards had reſtitution of Berkeley-caſtle 8 H. 3. He was as remarkable as his father for piety and benefactions to the church, and departing this life Nov. 29, 1243, was buried in the ſouth aile of St. Auguſtine's abbey; leaving iſſue by Joan, daughter of Ralph de Somery, lord of Campden, in com. Glouc. ſix ſons, Maurice, Thomas, Robert, Henry, William, and Richard; alſo a daughter Margaret, wife of Sir Anſelme Baſſet, of Baſſet's-court, in Uley, Glouceſterſhire.

Maurice the eldeſt ſon ſucceeded his father, and paying 100*l.* for his relief, had livery of his inheritance. He accompanied his father [m] in the wars of France, and 41 H. 3. was in that expedition with prince Edward againſt the Welch. In 42, 43, 44, and 47 H. 3. he was ſummoned [n] to attend the king againſt the magnanimous Llewellyn ap Gryffyth, prince of Wales, then in arms. He married Iſabel, daughter of [o] Maurice de Creoun (a great baron in Lincolnſhire) by Iſabel his wife, ſiſter to William de Valence, earl of Pembroke, uterine ſiſter and brother to king Henry the Third; notwithſtanding which, this lord afterwards adhered to the rebellious barons, for which his lands were ſeized; but the king having a reſpect for the lady Iſabel, whom he calls his beloved niece, [p] aſſigned the manors of Heritſham and Totteſclyffe for her maintenance. However this lord obtained pardon 55 H. 3. He died ſeized of the barony of Berkeley, which he held by the ſervice of three knight's fees, April 4, 1281, having given divers lands in Berkeley, Bevington, Wolgaſton, and Erlingham to the abbey of St. Auguſtine's in Briſtol, in the north aile of which he was buried. He had iſſue by his ſaid wife, Maurice, (ſlain at Ingſt, in a tournament whilſt his father was living) Thomas, and Robert; and according to ſome accounts, one daughter Maud. He was ſucceeded by Thomas, the ſecond, but eldeſt ſurviving ſon, a very wiſe and provident perſon, keeping exact accounts with all his bailiffs and ſtewards. He had two hundred attendants in his family, of knights, eſquires, yeomen, grooms, and pages, beſide huſbandmen. The wages of an eſquire was three-pence half-penny a day, a horſe and two ſuits of furred cloaths were provided for him, and three half-pence a day was given for a boy to wait on him. This lord, in obedience to the king's ſummons, appeared, at different times, at [q] Worceſter, at [r] Montgomery, at [s] Shrewſbury, and at Glouceſter, to oppoſe the Welch; and for thoſe ſervices had a ſpecial [t] grant for hunting with his own dogs in the king's foreſt of Mendip, and the chace of Kingſwood, and was acquitted of an [u] hundred marks, the then relief of his barony. In ſhort, he was in moſt of the battles fought in Wales, Scotland, and France, during the reign of king Edward the Firſt; and in the twenty-fourth year of that king's reign, was one of the commiſſioners to treat of peace between England and France; and the next year was made [v] conſtable of England. He was ſent ambaſſador to Rome, 35 E. 1. with Dr. Gayneſburg, biſhop of Worceſter, about affairs in France, and his two ſons accompanied him. He went into the field twenty-eight ſeveral times, and being taken priſoner at the fatal battle of Bannockburne, paid a large [x] fine for his redemption. He was a benefactor to the canons of St. Auguſtine's in Briſtol, where he was buried; to the monks of Kingſwood, and to the Bartholomews, and Minorites at Glouceſter, as appears by antient books in the caſtle at Berkeley. Dying in the year 1321, he left iſſue by Jane his wife, daughter of William de Ferrers earl of Derby, three ſons, Maurice, John, of Wymundham in com. Leic. and James, who was rector of Slimbridge, and, in the year 1326, conſecrated biſhop of Exeter: he had alſo two daughters, Iſabel and Margaret, who both died unmarried. He was ſucceeded by his eldeſt ſon,

Maurice, who in his father's life time, on June 23, 23 E. 1. had ſummons to parliament as lord Berkeley of Berkeley-caſtle. He delighted from his youth in military actions, and was in ſeveral tournaments held at Worceſter, Dunſtable, Stamford, Blythe, and Wincheſter. He had been many years in the wars with his father in Scotland and Wales, and, in 1312, was made [y] governor of Glouceſter, and in 1314, [z] governor of the town and caſtle of Berwick upon Tweed, and the next year was appointed juſtice of South Wales, and had the cuſtody of all the caſtles there. The year following he raiſed 1000 foot in thoſe parts, 200 more out of the foreſt of Dean, and 100 out of Gowerland in Wales, for the king's ſervice in the north; and in 1319 he was made [a] ſteward of the dutchy of Aquitaine. In 1321 he joined with the earl of Lancaſter and other barons againſt the two Spencers, laid waſte their eſtates, and took from the father 28,000 ſheep, 2,200 beaſts, 2,000 ſwine, &c. 40 tuns of wine, and 600 muttons in the larder; from the ſon they carried off 60 breeding mares, and 1,000 beaſts, beſide their young. The Spencers were baniſhed by an act of the enſuing parliament, but were recalled, within a year, by the ſame authority, and their opponents declared traitors. This lord Berkeley [b] neglecting, upon ſpecial ſummons, to ſubmit to the king, his caſtles and lands were ſeized, and he was afterwards ſent priſoner to Wallingford-caſtle, where, according to Walſingham, he died on May 31, 1326, and was buried in St. Auguſtine's abbey, Briſtol. He built a friery at Holmes, an iſland in the Severn. He married two wives, 1. Eve, daughter of Eudo la Zouch, lord Zouch; 2. Iſabel, daughter of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Glouceſter, who died without iſſue by him; but he left iſſue by his firſt wife, 1. ſir Thomas, who ſucceeded him; 2. ſir Maurice, from whom the Berkeleys of Stoke Giffard, and lord Berkeley of Stratton, with their ſeveral deſcendants; 3. John, from whom the Berkeleys of Shropſhire are deſcended; 4. Eudo, rector of Llanbeder, com. Caernarvon; 5. Peter, a dignitary in the church of Wells; alſo a daughter Iſabel, married to Robert lord Clifford, and afterwards to Thomas lord Muſgrave.

Sir Thomas, ſecond lord Berkeley, ſucceeded his father. He had joined the earl of Lancaſter and his followers, in oppoſing the Spencers, and was firſt committed to the tower of London, whence he eſcaped; but being retaken, was ſent to Berkhamſted caſtle, and afterwards to Pevenſey in Suſſex. On the queen and prince of Wales's returning from France, with a great force, the ſcene was changed, and this lord was ſet at liberty, and his caſtle of Berkeley delivered up to him, whereof Hugh le Deſpencer the younger had poſſeſſed himſelf. The queen's party having afterwards made the king priſoner, Nov. 16, 1326, he was received by this lord Berkeley, according to Leland, by indenture from Henry Plantagenet, earl of Lancaſter, having an [c]allowance of 5*l.* per diem for his expences. But he was not long entruſted with the care of him, for being thought to treat him with too much lenity, he was commanded to deliver the king, [d]together with the caſtle, to John lord Maltravers and ſir Thomas Gournay, and thereupon he retired to Bradley, one of his manor-houſes. But the king being barbarouſly murdered, as already related, he was indicted as acceſſary thereto, yet, upon tryal, was honourably acquitted by the jury, and afterwards by the parliament. He had livery of his lands 1 E. 3. and was the ſame year in commiſſion with John Maltravers the younger, as principal guardians of the peace in com. Glouc. Wilts, Oxon, Berks, Southampton, Somerſet, Dorſet, and Hereford. He was in all the wars againſt the Scots, and 19 E. 3. was made warden of the king's foreſts on the ſouth of Trent; and was with the king at the famous battle of Creſſy, 20 E. 3. and the ſame year appeared at the ſiege of Calais, with ſix knights, thirty-two eſquires, thirty archers on horſeback, and two hundred on foot, of his own retinue. On Sept. 19, 1356, he was one of the chief commanders at the battle of Poictiers, where the Engliſh obtained immortal honour, and he there took ſo many priſoners, that out of their ranſoms he rebuilt Beverſtone-caſtle, in Glouceſterſhire, the lordſhip of which he purchaſed, together with that of Over in Almondeſbury, about the fifth year of the king's reign. In his domeſtic retinue, he had no leſs than twelve knights, and ſometimes more, who took wages, with two ſervants and a page each; and twenty-four eſquires, who had each a man and a page. He kept the demeans of ſixty or eighty manors in his hands, and had in all about 300 in family, beſides bailiffs, hinds, &c. He ſheared at Beverſtone, with the eſtates thereabout, 5775 ſheep, and a minute account of all his concerns was exactly regiſtered. He gave lands to the [e]church of Portbury, and fifty other acres of land, and 40*s.* rent in Portbury, to a chapel there, for prieſts to ſay maſſes for his anceſtors, himſelf, and his ſucceſſors; and founded a chantry in the chapel of Newport, near Berkeley, another at Syde, one in the chapel at Wortley, a fourth in the chapel at Cambridge, another at Over, all in the county of Glouceſter; another in the chapel of St. Catherine Pulle, near Briſtol, one in the abbey of St. Auguſtine at Briſtol, and another chantry at Worceſter; and gave lands to the chantry of Sheppardine in Hull, and an annual rent of 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* to a [f]prieſt to ſing for the ſoul of his wife Margaret, in St. Auſtin's church, Briſtol, and the like rent to another prieſt to ſing for her in Keinſham monaſtery, com. Somerſet. He married firſt, Margaret, fourth daughter to Roger Mortimer earl of March, by whom he had iſſue, ſir Maurice, Thomas, Roger, and Alphonſus, and Joan, married to ſir Reginald Cobham, kn[t]. His ſecond wife was Catherine, daughter of ſir John Clivedon, of Charfield in the county of Glouceſter, widow of ſir Peter le Veel, of Tortworth, in the ſaid county, kn[t]. by whom he had iſſue, Thomas, Maurice, Edmund, and John, the anceſtor of the Berkeleys of Beteſham, in Hampſhire. She long ſurvived her huſband, and founded a free-ſchool and chantry in Wotton-under-edge, and the chantry of St. Andrew in Berkeley church. This lord died Oct. 27, 1361, and was buried in Berkeley church; leaving ſir Maurice, by his firſt wife, his heir.

Which ſir Maurice, third lord Berkeley, in 1336, being then ſeven years old, went with his father into Scotland, and was there knighted; next year he married Elizabeth, daughter of Hugh le Deſpencer, and four years afterwards went a voyage to Granada in Spain, and continued abroad about five years. He attended the Black Prince into Gaſcoigne, and on Sept. 19, 1356, received ſeveral wounds in the battle of Poictiers, of which he was never cured, but did not die 'till [g]June 3, 1367; leaving iſſue by his ſaid wife, four ſons, viz. Thomas, his ſucceſſor; ſir James, married to the daughter and heir of ſir John Bloet, with whom he had the manor of Ragland, and other eſtates in Monmouthſhire and Glouceſterſhire; ſir John; and Maurice; alſo three daughters, Catherine, Agnes, and Elizabeth.

Thomas ſucceeded his father, and was the fourth lord Berkeley. This lord let out moſt of his lands at a yearly rent, which at this time began to be cuſtomary all over England. In 1378, 2 R. 2. he was employ'd by ſea and land in the wars with France and Spain; ſerved in France and Britanny the two ſucceeding years, and afterwards in Scotland. In 10 R. 2. he entertained the king at Berkeley-caſtle; and being preſent at Flint-caſtle in [1]1399, when the king reſigned, he teſtified it, in the king's preſence, in the tower of London; and on the meeting of the three eſtates in parliament, a biſhop, abbat, earl, baron and knight, being the repreſentatives choſen to pronounce his majeſty's depoſition, he was the baron appointed for that purpoſe. In 5 H. 4. he was made admiral of the king's fleets, from the mouth of the Thames to the weſt and ſouth, and ſworn of the king's privy council, in open parliament. He [k]burnt fifteen ſail of French ſhips in Milford-haven, part of the fleet ſent to the aſſiſtance of Owen Glendourdwy, and took fourteen more, on board of which were the ſeneſchal of France, and eight officers of note, whom he made priſoners. In 6 and 7 H. 4. he was chief commander in the Welch wars, and engineer at the ſiege of Lampader-vaur in Pembrokeſhire. In ſhort, he was not only a great ſoldier, but was diſtinguiſhed as a lover of learning. John Treviſa, the famous vicar of Berkeley, celebrated by Bale for his learning and eloquence, tranſlated the Old and New Teſtaments into Engliſh, at the requeſt of this lord Berkeley. His lordſhip married Margaret, daughter and heir to Gerard Warren lord Liſle, by Alice, daughter and heir to Henry lord Teys; and departing this life July 13, 1416, was buried near his lady, (who died before him) in the church of Wotton-under-edge, leaving iſſue by her only one child Elizabeth, wedded to Richard Beauchamp earl of Warwick, who, in right of his wife, died ſeized of many manors and eſtates in Glouceſterſhire, as may be ſeen under their reſpective heads.

His lordſhip dying without iſſue male, his nephew James, ſon and heir of ſir James de Berkeley, his lordſhip's brother, became his heir, and was the fifth lord Berkeley; for by virtue of a ſpecial entail and fine, he enjoy'd the caſtle and lordſhip of Berkeley, with other lordſhips mentioned in the ſaid fine; but not without great interruptions and diſturbance [l]from Richard Beauchamp earl of Warwick, who had married the only daughter of the laſt lord Berkeley. Between theſe two great perſons and their poſterity was a law-ſuit for the Berkeley eſtate, which laſted one hundred and ninety-two years, and was carried on with uncommon violence; during which, Berkeley-caſtle was beſieged and defended many times with great forces on each ſide. The weight of power and intereſt was ſo great againſt lord Berkeley, that he thought it prudent to give a thouſand marks to Humphry duke of Glouceſter for his patronage. He married firſt, a daughter of Humphry Stafford of Hooke, in com. Dorſet, by whom he had no iſſue. 2. Iſabel, widow of Henry, ſon and heir of William lord Ferrers of Groby, and ſecond daughter of Thomas Mowbray, firſt duke of Norfolk; by whom he had iſſue, four ſons, William; Maurice; James; and Thomas, from whom deſcended the Berkeleys of Herefordſhire, and Worceſterſhire; and three daughters, [m]Elizabeth, Iſabel, and Alice. Which Iſabel lady Berkeley died in priſon in the caſtle of Glouceſter, (ſee p. 194.) His lordſhip married, to his third wife, Joan, daughter of John Talbot, earl of Shrewſbury, by whom he had no iſſue; and dying in 1463, was buried in an alabaſter tomb, in a chapel which he built on the ſouth ſide of the high altar, in the pariſh church of Berkeley.

William his eldeſt ſon, ſixth lord Berkeley, was knighted at Calais in 1438; and, after the death of his father, defended himſelf in the ſuit at law carried on againſt him by Thomas Talbot viſcount Liſle, whom he afterwards killed in a fight, as related under the pariſh of Nibley. In 21 E. 4. he was [n]advanced to the honour of viſcount Berkeley, and ſoon after had a grant of 100 marks per annum for life; and 1483 was [o]created earl of Nottingham, a dignity enjoyed by his maternal anceſtors the Mowbrays, extinct dukes of Norfolk. When the earl of Richmond acceded to the crown, in 1485, he was [p]appointed earl marſhal of England, with limitation to the heirs male of his body, with a fee of 20*l. per annum*; and, in the fourth year of that reign, was further [q]advanced to the dignity of marquis of Berkeley. He married 1. Elizabeth, daughter of Reginald Weſt, lord la Warre, from whom he was divorced without iſſue by her. 2. Jane, widow of ſir William Willoughby, kn[t]. and daughter of ſir Thomas Strangeways, kn[t]. by whom he had iſſue Thomas and Catherine, who died young. 3. Anne, daughter of John Fiennes, lord Dacre of the ſouth; but he died, without iſſue by her, in the year 1491-2, and lies buried in the church of the friers Auguſtins, near Broad-ſtreet, London.

Maurice,

Maurice, his brother, ſhould have ſucceeded to the paternal eſtate, and title of baron of Berkeley; (and, in that caſe, he would have been the ſeventh, according to the before recited ſummons) but the marquis his brother, having taken exception at his conduct, ſettled the caſtle of Berkeley, to which the barony is appendant, with thoſe lands and lordſhips which were the body of that antient barony, upon king Henry the Seventh, and his iſſue male, in failure of which, to revert to the right heirs of the marquis. But Maurice, by diſcreet management, obtained poſſeſſion of his ſhare of the eſtate that devolved to him in right of his mother Iſabel Mowbray. He married Iſabel, daughter of Philip Mead, eſq; deſcended from the Meads of Wraxhall, in Somerſetſhire, by whom he had iſſue three ſons, Maurice, his ſucceſſor; Thomas, who ſucceeded Maurice; and James; and one daughter, Joyce, married to William Aſtley, eſq; He reſided chiefly at Yate, in Glouceſterſhire, and dying in the year 1506, was ſucceeded by Maurice his ſon and heir, who ſhould have been eighth lord Berkeley. He was made knight of the Bath, at the coronation of king Henry the Eighth, and, in the 7th and 8th years of that king's reign, was high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire; in the laſt of which he was alſo conſtituted lieutenant of the caſtle of Calais, and captain of fifty men at arms. In the 14th year of that reign, he was [r] ſummoned to parliament as a baron, and, the enſuing year, was ſent into France with the army under the command of Charles Brandon duke of Suffolk. He married Catherine, daughter of ſir William Berkeley, of Stoke-Giffard, kn[t]. but died at Calais, 1523, without iſſue by her, and was ſucceeded by his brother Thomas.

Which Thomas, ninth lord Berkeley, had a command in the Engliſh army at the battle of Flodden, in 1519, and, for his ſignal ſervice there, received the honour of knighthood from Thomas Howard earl of Surrey, the general. He was made conſtable of Berkeley-caſtle [s] 24 H. 8. which was then in the crown, and died the ſame year. He married 1. Eleanor, widow of John Ingleby, eſq; and daughter of ſir Marmaduke Conſtable, of Yorkſhire, kn[t]. by whom he had no iſſue. 2. Cecilie, widow of Richard Rowden, in the county of Glouceſter, eſq; by whom he had [t] two ſons, Thomas, his heir; and Maurice.

Which Thomas, tenth lord Berkeley, married 1. Mary daughter of George Haſtings, firſt earl of Huntingdon, but by her had no iſſue. 2. Anne, daughter of ſir John Savage, of Frodſham, in Cheſhire, kn[t]. by whom he had Henry, a poſthumous ſon and heir; alſo a daughter Elizabeth, (afterwards married to Thomas Butler, tenth earl of Ormond) ſcarce three quarters of a year old when his lordſhip deceaſed. He was buried at Stone, where he died, in his journey from his houſe at Yate in Glouceſterſhire, towards London, on Sept. 19, 1534. It is ſaid that Maurice, this lord's brother, bore a great enmity to his ſiſter-in-law the lady dowager, and came, with ſeveral companions, one night to deſtroy her deer, and intended afterwards to ſet fire to a hay-rick that ſtood near the houſe, with deſign to burn the houſe; but another party of deer-ſtealers happening to be in the park at the ſame time, who had fled to the hay-rick to hide themſelves, they frightened one another, and ſo the miſchief was prevented.

Which Henry, the eleventh lord Berkeley, ſucceeded his father. King Edward the Sixth dying, who was the laſt male heir of king Henry the Seventh, he obtained livery of Berkeley-caſtle, and of all thoſe lordſhips ſettled on that king by William marquis of Berkeley, before mentioned, by ſpecial warrant from the queen, 1 & 2 Phil. & Mar. before he was at full age, at the old rent, which was 687 l. 5*s.* per annum, not accounting the parks and chaſes thereunto belonging. His lordſhip thereupon repoſſeſſing the old barony of his anceſtors, was ſummoned by writ to parliament 4 & 5 Phil. & Mar. and there placed according to the antient precedence. He was much embroiled in law-ſuits upon the old title of heir general and heir ſpecial; for queen Elizabeth had granted ſeveral of thoſe lands, forfeited by the deſcendants of lord Liſle, to the earls of Warwick and Leiceſter; who, by great power, and by corruption of juries, and other groſs means, ſaith ſir Robert Atkyns, maintained a long chargeable ſuit againſt him, which at laſt was ended by a reference 7 Jac. after having continued 192 years. The earl of Leiceſter, continues the ſame author, pretended at firſt a great kindneſs to lord Berkeley, and acknowledged the honour to be deſcended from his family, and deſired that he might ſend an herald to examine the pedigree, and take a ſurvey of his records, and antient writings; and this herald was bribed, by the earl of Leiceſter, to ſteal away the moſt material evidences which concerned the lord Berkeley's eſtate. His lordſhip was appointed lord lieutenant of the county of Glouceſter [u] 1. Jac. There is an anecdote of this lord, lord, that queen Elizabeth having offered a hundred marks for a lute, his lordſhip out bid her, and bought it. His firſt wife was Catherine, third daughter of Henry Howard earl of Surry, by whom he had iſſue two ſons, Thomas, and [w] Ferdinand: Thomas married Elizabeth Carey, only child of ſir George Carey, kn[t]. afterwards lord Hunſdon, by whom he left iſſue George and Theophila, and died before his father. Ferdinand died at Yate in Glouceſterſhire, and was there buried. He had alſo, by the ſaid Catherine, four daughters, of whom, Mary was married to John Zouch, eſq; ſon and heir to ſir John Zouch, of Codnore in com. Derby, kn[t]. and Frances was married to George Shirley, of Aſtwell, in com. Northampton, eſq; afterwards created a baronet, and anceſtor of the preſent earl Ferrers. Lord Berkeley had to his ſecond wife, Jane, youngeſt daughter of ſir Michael Stanhope, and widow of ſir Roger Townſend, by whom he had no iſſue. He died in the year 1613, and was buried in the family vault, in the chancel at Berkeley, where is a monument and inſcription for him.

George, only ſon of the ſaid Thomas, ſucceeded his grandfather Henry as twelfth lord Berkeley, according to the ſummons of 23 E. 1. He was made knight of the Bath, at the creation of Charles prince of Wales, on Nov. 4, 1616. The following inſcription, on a monument erected to his memory in Cranford church, in Middleſex, recites his character, marriage, and iſſue.

Here lyeth the body of GEORGE Lord BERKLEY, Baron of Berkley, Mowbray, Seagrave, and Bruce, and Knight of the Bath, who departed this life the 10th day of Auguſt, A. D. 1658. He married ELIZABETH, ſecond daughter and coheir of Sir MICHAEL STANHOPE, of Sudbury in the county of Suffolk, Kn[t]. by whom he had iſſue CHARLES, ELIZABETH, and GEORGE. CHARLES, drowned in his paſſage to France, Jan. 27, 1641. ELIZABETH married to EDWARD COOK, Eſq; grand child and heir to Sir EDWARD COOK, Kn[t]. ſometime Lord Chief Juſtice of both Benches. She died Novemb. the 9th, A. D. 1661, and lieth buried at Higham in Norfolk; and GEORGE Lord Berkley now living: This deceaſed Lord, beſides the nobility of his birth, and the experience he acquired by foreign travels, was very eminent for the great candour and ingenuity of his diſpoſition, his ſingular bounty and affability towards his inferiours, and his readineſs (had it been in his power) to have obliged all mankind.

George, the only ſurviving ſon of the laſt lord George, became, at the death of his father, thirteenth lord Berkeley, and was advanced to the dignity of viſcount Durſley, and earl of Berkeley, Sept. 11, 31 C. 2. 1679. His lordſhip made a preſent to Sion-college of a valuable library, collected by ſir Robert Coke, upon which the governors of that college preſented his lordſhip with their addreſs of thanks. When king James the Second withdrew himſelf, on Dec. 10, this earl was one of thoſe peers who met at Guildhall, and ſubſcribed a declaration, 'That they would 'aſſiſt his highneſs the prince of Orange in ob-'taining a free parliament, &c.' and at the acceſſion of king William and queen Mary, was appointed one of their privy-council; and on July 27, 1689, conſtituted Cuſtos Rotulorum of the county of Surry. This noble peer departing this life, was buried at Cranford in Middleſex, where a monument is erected to his memory, with this inſcription:

Here lyeth the body of GEORGE Earl of Berkeley, Viſcount Durſley, Baron of Berkeley, Mowbray, Seagrave, and Bruce, who had the honour to be a Privy-counſellor to K. CHARLES the II. and K. JAMES; eminent for his affability, charity, and generoſity. He married ELIZABETH, one of the coheireſſes of JOHN MASSINGBEARD, Eſq; of the family of the MASSINGBEARDS in Lincolnſhire. He departed this life the 14th of October, 1698, Ætat. 71. in hopes of a bleſſed reſurrection; for the merciful ſhall obtain mercy.

By the lady Elizabeth, his wife, he had two ſons, and ſix daughters; 1. Charles, who ſucceeded him in honour and eſtate; 2. George, inſtalled one of the prebendaries of Weſtminſter, June 13, 1687, who married Jane, daughter of George Cole, of the county of Devon, eſq; 3. Elizabeth, wedded to William Smith, of the Inner Temple, eſq; 4. Theophila, married firſt to ſir Kingſmill Lucy, of Bloxburn, in com. Hertford, bar[t]. and ſecondly to the pious and learned Robert Nelſon, of London, eſq; 5. Arabella, ſecond wife to William Pulteney, eſq; 6. Mary, married to Ford lord Grey, of Werk, afterwards earl of Tankerville. 7. Henrietta, who died unmarried; 8. Arethuſa, ſecond wife to Charles Boyle, lord Clifford of Laneſborough.

was returned to parliament for the city of Glouceſter. On the acceſſion of king William and queen Mary, he was called up, by writ, to the houſe of peers, (his father then living) and took his ſeat as baron Berkeley of Berkeley, on July 11, 1689; and the ſame year relieved the earl of Pembroke, in quality of envoy extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the ſtates of Holland. Having traced the deſcent of the manor down to the preſent time, I come now to treat of the

There are ſeven very conſiderable tithings in this pariſh.

1. The Borough, which has been mentioned at the beginning of this account. Mr. Weſton has a handſome houſe in it, and a good eſtate in the pariſh. Lands in the town of Berkeley, which belonged to the chantry of St. Andrew, whereof Thomas Cheſter was the laſt incumbent, and had a penſion of 5*l.* were granted to William Herick and Arthur Ingram, 5 Jac. and four acres in Short Grove, belonging to the ſame chantry, were granted, the ſame year, to Edward Newport and John Crompton.

Lands in Berkeley and Beenham did belong to the archbiſhop of Canterbury, and were granted to Robert earl of Leiceſter, and John Morley, in exchange for lands in Montgomery, 23 Eliz. There are two conſtables belonging to the borough.

2. Ham, in which are included Ham, Clapton, Bevington, Whitley-park, Peddington, and Newark. Thomas Berkeley held the manor of Ham 45 E. 2. Thomas de Berkeley was ſeized of the manor of Ham 6 R. 2. and Catherine his wife was ſeized of two meſſuages, eight acres of arable, two acres of meadow, one acre of wood, and a yearly rent of 7*s.* in Ham, for St. Andrew's chantry in Berkeley, 7 R. 2. The earl of Berkeley now receives from the crown, 5*s.* a year for St. Andrew's chantry.

As to other eſtates, beſides the manor, the records ſhew, that John Sergeant was ſeized of lands in Ham, 30, 36, & 47 E. 3. And John Fitz-Nichol (one of the Berkeley family) was ſeized of Wikeſtow in Ham, 49 E. 3. John Kendal was ſeized of Avenſcot, [in Alkington tithing] and of the manors of Peddington, and Wyke [in the tithing of Alkington] in the pariſh of Berkeley, and was attainted of high treaſon, in the beginning of the reign of Henry the Seventh, and thoſe eſtates were granted to William Treefree, 4 H. 7. to hold at pleaſure. The ſame were granted to John Pate and John Dingle during pleaſure, 2 H. 8. and afterwards to John Dingle, and the heirs of his body, paying a brace of greyhounds, whenever the king ſhould come within two miles of that place, 10 H. 8. He died 33 H. 8. and John Dingle, his ſon, had livery of them the ſame year. Thomas Hickes, eſq; has a handſome houſe at Peddington, and a good eſtate in this tithing. Ham has a diſtinct tithingman.

3. Hinton, i. e. the old town, from hen, in the Britiſh language, which ſignifies old. This tithing includes Sanager, lying along the river; antiently written Seven-hangar, perhaps a corruption of Severn-hen-gaer, i. e. the old wall of the Severn, or ſea-wall. Sanager gave name to an antient family, whoſe property it was, and who reſided there; a deſcendant of that name and family is ſtill living, but the eſtate, by a late purchaſe, is now lord Berkeley's. Part of Halmore lies alſo in this tithing. Hinton has a diſtinct tithingman.

4. Alkington, including Swanley, Woodford, Rugbag, Micklewood-chaſe, Wike, and Newport; which laſt lies in the road between Glouceſter and Briſtol, and has in it two or three inns of good accommodation. The name of this tithing was antiently written Almintune, as may be ſeen in the Domeſday account of the pariſh of Berkeley. Maurice de Berkeley held this manor 9 E. 1. Margaret counteſs of Shrewſbury was ſeized of the manor of Alkintone 7 E. 2. Thomas de Berkeley held the manor of Alkintone, and granted one quarter of beans, and three ells and a half of woollen cloth yearly, to Ady Tilly, for his life, 17 E. 2. Thomas de Berkeley held the manor of Alkinton 6 R. 2. and ever ſince that time, it has deſcended with the barony of Berkeley.

Beſide the manor, the records ſhew that John Sergeant, (mentioned under Ham) was ſeized of lands in Alkinton, 30, 36, & [y] 46 E. 3. Margaret, the widow of Nicholas Stanſhaw, held Wike, 14 H. 6. Thomas de Berkeley had a grant of a fair in Newport, 22 E. 3. There was a chantry in St. Maurice's chapel, at Newport, founded by Thomas lord Berkeley, 17 E. 3. of which John Baker was the laſt incumbent; who, according to Mr. Willis, had a penſion, after the diſſolution, of 6*l.* a year. A meſſuage in Swanley, late belonging to the above chantry, was granted to [y] I have followed ſir Robert Atkyns in the date of this record; but I apprehend it ſhould be 47 E. 3. as it ſtands in Ham, and occurs afterwards in the account of Stone.

Robert

Robert earl of Leiceſter, 23 Eliz. There is a proper tithingman to this diviſion.

5. Stone. This place is inſerted in alphabetical order, among the pariſhes.

6. Hamfallow, in which are Wanſwell, Wanniſwell, or Wanſel; part of Halmore; and Hamfallow. Wanſwell was probably ſo called from the Britiſh word gwaun, a meadow. Thorp of Wanſwell held his lands to guard a tower in Berkeley-caſtle, called Thorp's-tower, which was built in the reign of king Edward the Third. Thomas Thorp died ſeized of the manor of Wanſwell, 17 H. 8. Thomas his ſon had livery thereof 29 H. 8. and Nicholas Thorp had livery of it 1 Eliz. William Butler died ſeized of this manor without iſſue, 10 Eliz. whereby it deſcended to Anne, his ſiſter and heir. Here is a tithingman.

7. Bradſtone. Thomas de Bradſtone, (a perſon of eminence, ſee p. 87) was ſeized of the manor of Bradſtone 34 E. 3. which deſcended to his ſon Thomas, who held this manor 48 E. 3. Richard Seimour was probably a truſtee of the Bradſtones, for he was ſeized of the manor of Bradſtone 2 H. 4. but Ela, widow of Thomas Bradſtone, was ſeized thereof, 11 H. 4. Sir Walter de la Pool, and Elizabeth his wife, daughter and heireſs of Thomas Bradſtone, were ſeized of the manor of Bradſtone 12 H. 6. and ſir Edward Ingleſthorp (or Ingoldſthorp) was ſeized thereof, and of Arlingham, Stinchcombe, and Horton, belonging to the Bradſtones, 35 H. 6. There was formerly a chantry at Bradſtone, the lands belonging to which were granted to Lewis Williams, by king Edward the Sixth. Bradſtone has a tithingman.

Sir William Stourton, of Stourton, held the manor of Veelham, near Berkeley, 17 E. 4. and Robert Grinder, eſq; was ſeized of Stubmarſh-park, in the hundred of Berkeley, 22 H. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage in the deanery of Durſley, worth about 170*l.* a year; of which the earl of Berkeley is patron, and Mr. Auguſtus-Thomas Hupſman incumbent.

The rectories of Berkeley and Hinton, which belonged to St. Auſtin's abbey, at Briſtol, were granted to the dean and chapter of Briſtol, together with the advowſon of the vicarages, 34 H. 8. But, in virtue of an act of parliament, they were given, by that body, to the late George lord Berkeley, in exchange for the rectory of St. Michael's, in Sutton Bennington, in Nottinghamſhire. The vicar is intituled to a mortuary of 10*s.* from the executor of every perſon of this pariſh dying worth 40*l.*

Maurice de Berkeley founded an hoſpital at Longbridge, in the tithing of Ham, (p. 272) where was a chapel dedicated to the holy Trinity; yearly tenths 1*l.* 15*s.* 10*d. ob.* But the eſtate, with which it was endowed, is now part of the impropriation.

There was a chantry in this church, dedicated to St. Andrew, founded by the lady of Thomas lord Berkeley; and another chantry, dedicated to our Lady, to which Thomas, ſecond lord Berkeley, gave lands in Hamme, 17 E. 3. for an anniverſary for his father, for his wife, and himſelf, after his deceaſe. Collins's Peerage, v. 1. p. 451.

The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is large and handſome, conſiſting of the nave and two ailes, with a large chancel. On the ſouth ſide of the chancel is a chapel and vault, belonging to the earl of Berkeley; and on the north ſide is the veſtry room. The tower, with ſix bells in it, is newly built, and ſtands diſtinctly from the church, at the other end of the church-yard, where probably the old church ſtood.

There was antiently a nunnery in this place, of which the particulars are given in the account of the manor.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

In the body of the church, incloſed with iron rails, is a very antient raiſed tomb, with the figures, in alabaſter, of a man in armour, at full length, and a woman by his ſide, deſigned for Thomas lord Berkeley, and his lady. His lordſhip died in 1361. At that time the family had no particular burying place here; but three generations afterwards, James lord Berkeley built the chapel and vault on the ſouth ſide of the chancel.

Under an arch in the wall, between the ſaid chapel and the chancel, upon a raiſed tomb of white marble, (ornamented on the ſide, with figures in compartments, of the virgin Mary, St. Peter, St. Chriſtopher, and other figures of ſoldiers, and eccleſiaſticks, ſome of them bearing ſcutcheons of the Berkeley arms upon their breaſts) is the effigy, in white marble, of James the fifth lord Berkeley, lying along in full proportion, with his coat armour upon his breaſt, who died in 1463, and was buried in this chapel. And at his left hand is the figure of a youth, deſigned for Thomas his grandſon, bearing alſo the family arms upon his breaſt, and a label of three points, to ſhew that he was the eldeſt ſon.

At the eaſt end, upon a raiſed tomb, are the figures, in alabaſter, of lord Henry Berkeley and his lady; his feet reſting againſt a mitre, the family creſt, and over their heads are the Berkeley arms, with twelve quarterings, and this inſcription in capital letters:

At the beginning of this century, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 500 houſes in this pariſh, and about 2500 inhabitants, whereof 140 were freeholders; yearly births 67, burials 58. And I underſtand the tithing of Stone is not included in theſe particulars, except as to births and burials. But certainly ſir Robert's eſtimate was too high; for in a ſeries of ten years, from 1700 to 1709 incluſive, there appear to be entered in the pariſh regiſter 473 baptiſms, and 399 burials; and from 1760 to 1769 incluſive, 531 baptiſms, and 502 burials. By which it appears that the inhabitants have increaſed during the laſt ſeventy years, and are now about 1854 in number, which is nearly in the proportion of 35 to 1 of the annual burials.

BEVERSTONE.

THIS pariſh lies in the upper diviſion of the hundred of Berkeley, in a healthy country, upon the Cotſwold hills, ſcarce two miles north-weſtward from Tetbury, five from Minchinhampton, and twenty ſouthward from Glouceſter. The land is chiefly arable, with ſome good paſturage, but no meadow ground.

Leland ſays there is a quarre of good ſtone at Beverſtane, unde nomen, ex conjectura; but ſir Robert Atkyns goes ſtill further, in pronouncing that it was antiently called Bureſtan, from the blue ſtones found in this place. The name, in Domeſday-book, is written Beureſtan; and tho' the termination, in the Saxon language, ſignifies ſtone, yet the whole word, taken together, is ſo difficult and abſtruſe, that I confeſs myſelf totally ignorant of its original and ſignification.

There are conſiderable remains of an antient caſtle in this place, ſaid to have been originally built in the time of the Saxon heptarchy; but by whom is not certainly known. Godwin earl of Kent, in the time of Edward the Confeſſor, having offended the king by refuſing to puniſh the chief actors of a diſorder which happened in Canterbury, without their being firſt brought to trial; the king called an aſſembly of all the nobility at Glouceſter, that the matter might be debated; but Godwin and his ſons, inſtead of appearing there, raiſed a great force, and took up their quarters at Beverſtan; and ſome accounts expreſſly ſay, that they ſeized the caſtle, which ſhews it to be of older ſtanding than the Norman conqueſt. Maurice lord Berkeley repaired and fortified this caſtle in the reign of king Henry the Third, and Thomas lord Berkeley afterwards greatly beautified and enlarged it, by the ſpoils and ranſom of priſoners which he took at the battle of Poictiers, in the reign of king Edward the Third. It was built ſquare, moated on all ſides, and had a tower at every corner; but a great part of the caſtle having been deſtroyed by fire, there is only one of the towers now remaining. The dining room was where a part of the farm-houſe now ſtands, as appears by the remains of a magnificent window, adjoining to the eaſtern part of the caſtle, and the noble fire-place yet remaining.

It was garriſoned by the king's forces in the great civil war, and attacked by colonel Maſſey, with three hundred foot and fourſcore horſe, without ſucceſs; but afterwards, the governor, captain aptain Oglethorpe, being taken priſoner, and rried to Glouceſter, by the parliament's party, olonel Maſſey learnt from him where the caſtle ight be attacked with the greateſt advantage; nd advancing with a body of horſe and foot before , ſummoned it to ſurrender. The lieutenant, ho had the command, immediately complyed, ho', it was thought, he might have held it with aſe. The garriſon, leaving their arms, ammuition, and baggage, had liberty to retire where ey pleaſed. Of ſo great ſimplicity was the king's fficer, as to aſk where was the next deſtination f the parliament's forces, expreſſing his fears, if e garriſon ſhould go to Malmeſbury, of their eing taken a ſecond time; and going there, it appened to them as they apprehended, the next ay after their arrival.

This place had antiently a market and fair, as ppears by the ſubſequent account of the manor, ut they have been long ſince diſuſed.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

This manor was antiently parcel of the manor f Berkeley, and belonged to the nunnery there: And, at the time of the general ſurvey, there were en hides in Beureſtan belonging to Berkeley. See Berkeley.

King Henry the Second gave the manor of Beverſtan to Robert Fitz-Harding, anceſtor of the Berkeley family, who ſettled it on Robert his econd ſon, in marriage with Alice, the daughter nd heireſs of Robert de Gant, and of Alice, the aughter of William Paganell; which Robert de Gant was ſon of Gilbert de Gant, who came into England with William the conqueror, and had arried Alice, the daughter of Hugh de Montfort. His wife being thus deſcended, Robert de Berkeley btained, by that marriage, the great lordſhip of Were, in com. Somerſet, whence he took the name f Robert de Were. He founded the hoſpital f St. Mark at Billeſwike, near Briſtol, and left iſſue a ſon named [z]Maurice, and a daughter [a]Eva, edded to Thomas de Harpetre.

Which Maurice aſſumed the name of de Gant rom his mother, on account of her great inheritnce. In 17 John, taking part with the rebellious barons, his lands were ſeized, and given o Philip de Albini, whereupon he addreſſed himelf to the king, to make his peace. And 11 H. 3. having fortified his caſtle of Beverſtan without licence, he went again to the king to excuſe himſelf for ſo doing, and obtained a confirmation thereof. Having no iſſue, he gave to the king his ordſhips of Weſton, Beverſtan, and Albricton, nd died 14 H. 3. The bulk of his inheritance ame to the iſſue of Eva, his ſiſter, whoſe ſon obert, ſome time after, aſſumed the ſurname of ournay, and, 15 H. 3. had livery of the manor of aulet, and other lands in Somerſetſhire, and of all is lands in [b]Glouceſterſhire, excepting Beverſtan, Weſton, Radewic, Oure, and Albricton; which however, he not long after obtained of the king.

Which Robert Gournay, ſon and heir of the ſaid Eva de Berkeley, whoſe barony conſiſted of no leſs than twenty-two knights-fees, died ſeized of Beverſtan 53 H. 3. and was ſucceeded in this eſtate by his ſon Anſelm, whoſe ſon John Gournay dying ſeized of it 19 E. 1. left his only daughter and heir Elizabeth, married to John ap Adam, who both joined in a fine, and ſettled this manor, and the advowſon of the church, and the manors of King's-Weſton, and Pirton in Churchdown, on the joint heirs of their bodies, the remainder on the heirs of Elizabeth, 25 E. 1. Which John and Elizabeth purchaſed a charter of free-warren in Beverſtan, and a weekly market on Monday, and a fair to begin on the [c]eve of the aſſumption of our Lady, and to continue for three days.

Thomas ap Adam, ſon of John, ſold this manor and caſtle, and the manor of Over, to Thomas lord Berkeley 4 E. 3. who died ſeized thereof 35 E. 3. and Catherine his widow died alſo ſeized of it 9 R. 2.

Sir John La Warr, in right of Elizabeth his wife, widow of Thomas de Berkeley, was ſeized thereof 22 R. 2.

Sir John Berkeley was poſſeſſed of this manor, and of Beverſton-caſtle, and of the advowſon of the church, 6 H. 6. and Maurice Berkeley of Beverſton, was alſo ſeized of the caſtle and manor 38 H. 6. Sir William Berkeley died ſeized of the manor 5 E. 6. and the next year livery was granted to ſir John Berkeley his ſon, who died ſeized of it 20 Eliz. and the ſame year livery was granted to ſir John Berkeley, his ſon and heir, who alienated this manor to ſir John Pointz; but it ſoon went out of that name, for ſir John ſold this manor, and that of Hill, to Henry Fleetwood, eſq; who was lord of them in the year 1608.

In a few years afterwards, this manor was purchaſed by ſir Michael Hicks, from whom it deſcended to his heir ſir Henry Hicks, whoſe ſon Michael Hicks, eſq; died ſeized thereof in the year 1764; and Michael Hicks, an infant ſon of Howe Hicks, of Witcombe, in this county, eſq; is the preſent lord of the manor. His arms and pedigree are inſerted under Witcombe.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Durſley, worth about 240*l.* a year. The abbey of Glouceſter was formerly patron; but the preſentation is now in the crown, and Mr. Selwyn is the preſent incumbent. The chapel of Kingſcot is annexed to this church.

One hundred and eight acres of arable in Beverſtone, thirty-two in Kingſcot, and thirty-five acres of incloſure, in both pariſhes, belong to the glebe.

At the beginning of this century there were 34 houſes and about 164 inhabitants, whereof three were freeholders, in this pariſh; yearly births 5, burials 4. Atkyns. But upon examination, I find, that in a ſeries of ten years, ending with 1768, there were entered in the pariſh regiſter 57 baptiſms, and 44 burials; and the exact number of inhabitants is 144, which is nearly in the proportion of 33 to 1 of the annual burials: Whence one may be induced to think the place unhealthy, notwithſtanding it lies in an open part of the country; but I am informed that it is really otherwiſe, and that the late dilapidation of cottages hath driven many of the younger people out of the pariſh, to which alone the decreaſe of inhabitants ought to be attributed.

BIBURY.

THIS is a pariſh of conſiderable extent, in the cotſwold part of the country, ſix miles ſouth from Northleach, ſeven north-eaſtward from Cirenceſter, and nineteen eaſtward from Gloucester. The tithing of Winſon is in the hundred of Bradley, but all the reſt of the pariſh lies in the hundred of Britwelſbarrow.

The name of this place, antiently written Becheberie, and Begeberie, ſeems to have been given it on account of the ſituation of the village upon the river; for bece or beke ſignifies a ſtream or river, and beme a flat piece of ground. The latter part of the name, if referred to the place where the church ſtands, agrees well enough with the ſituation; but ſome of the houſes ſtand on the ſide of an eminence. Here the river Coln riſes in ſo copious a manner as to drive a mill at a ſmall diſtance from the head of the ſpring.

The turnpike-road from Cirenceſter to Oxford leads through this place, and where it croſſed the river, the water was broad and deep, and being near the ſpring, ſo remarkably cold, as frequently to injure cattle, which, heated with travelling, paſſed through it; wherefore a bridge was erected by ſubſcription a few years ago, to obviate thoſe inconveniencies.

This place gave name to the hundred of Becheberie, now ſwallowed up in that of Britwelſbarrow. The pariſh hath lately been incloſed, and great part of thoſe lands which lay in downs are now converted to tillage.

Eſtcourt Creſwell, eſq; hath a large eſtate and a good houſe here, of which his generoſity hath furniſhed the annexed beautiful copper-plate.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In the Domeſday account of the lands belonging to the church of Worceſter, it is expreſſed after the following manner:

'The ſame church held Becheberie in Becheberie 'hundred. There are twenty-one hides. In de- 'mean are four plow-tillages, and nineteen villeins 'and two bordars with eleven plow-tillages. 'There are three radcheniſters having four hides 'and four plow-tillages, and a prieſt having three 'hides, and, with his, four plow-tillages. There 'are eleven ſervi and ancillæ, and two mills of 17s. '[rent,] and ten acres of meadow. Durand holds 'three hides and one yard-land in Berneſleis of 'the biſhop, as a manor dependent on this manor; 'and Eudo holds ſeven yard-lands there for a 'manor.

'In theſe are five plow-tillages in demean, and 'twelve villeins with ſix plow-tillages. There 'are twelve ſervi. The whole manor, in the time 'of king Edward, was worth, and now alſo is 'worth 18*l.*

'The ſame church holds Aicote, and Ailric 'holds it of her. It lies in Begeberie. There is 'one hide. In demean are two plow-tillages, and 'two villeins and four bordars with two plow- 'tillages. There are two ſervi, and eight acres of 'meadow, and a mill of 64*d.* It was worth 20s. 'now 30s. Domeſday-book, p. 70.

The latter is ſuppoſed to be the manor afterwards given to the priory of Oſney. But the biſhop of Worceſter was ſeized of a manor called the manor of Bibury, with court-leet and free warren, 15 E. 1. which privileges were allowed to him in a writ of Quo warranto brought against him the ſame year. In a MS. taxation of the temporalties of the ſee of Worceſter, in the time of Edward the Firſt, which I found in the Cotton library, [Tiberius, C. F. 76.] are the following particulars

Summa* 2*l.* 4*s.* A ſurvey having been made of this manor, 6 H. 8. it was then valued at 10*l.* 14*s.* a year.

The ſee of Worceſter continued in poſſeſſion of his manor 'till it was alienated therefrom, 3 E. 6. when it was granted to John Dudley earl of Warwick, afterwards duke of Northumberland, which the reaſon that one part of Bibury is now, for diſtinction ſake, called Bibury Northumberland.

It appears, by the evidences belonging to this ſtate, that John Harrington was ſoon after poſſeſſed of this manor, which he alienated to ſir William Sherrington, who ſold it, by virtue of the king's licence, dated June 23, 6 E. 6. to William earl of Pembroke, in perpetuum. The earl procures a licence from the crown, dated nine days after the former, and alienates it to Hugh Weſtwood. But, after the attainder of the duke of Northumberland, different people coming into favour, and the queen reverſing many things done by king Edward, this manor was granted to John Walters and Thomas Carpenter, 1 Mariæ. However, William Weſtwood, eſq; was lord of it in the year 1608.

Sir Thomas Sackville bought Bibury of Hugh Weſtwood, (who was probably ſon of the above mentioned William) and built the manſion-houſe, according to the date over the porch, in the year 1623. He married Barbara, daughter of ſir John Hungerford, of Down Amney, by whom he had iſſue two ſons, John and Richard, and two daughters. John Sackville ſucceeded his father, but dying unmarried, this eſtate came to his brother Richard, who had two ſons, John and Henry. John ſucceeded his father, but having no iſſue, left his eſtate to Henry. Which Henry left iſſue, by his firſt and ſecond marriage, two daughters coheireſſes, Elizabeth and Catherine, the latter of whom died unmarried; but Elizabeth, the elder, was wedded to Edmond Warneford, eſq; by whom ſhe had an only child Anne Warneford, married to Thomas Eſtcourt Creſſwell, of Pinkney in the county of Wilts, eſq; and by him had iſſue only one ſon, Eſtcourt Creſſwell, eſq; who, in the year 1768, was choſen one of the repreſentatives in parliament for the borough of Cirenceſter, and is the preſent lord of the manor of Bibury. His arms may be ſeen at the foot of the plate of this ſeat.

The other manor of Bibury, with the rectory and advowſon, formerly belonged to the priory of Oſney, wherefore it was called Bibury Oſney, and was granted to the chapter of Oxford 34 H. 8.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. Bibury, which contains 59 families, and 307 inhabitants, and is divided into two tithings, Bibury Oſney, and Bibury Northumberland, as already obſerved.

2. Ablington, containing 22 families and 91 inhabitants. The reverend Mr. Charles Coxwell has a ſeat and a good eſtate here. He is deſcended from an antient family formerly reſiding in Cirenceſter, who having large poſſeſſions in the town, occaſioned a certain ſtreet to be called by their family name. His arms are, Argent, a bend wavy between ſix cocks gules.

Ralph de Willington and Olimpias his wife purchaſed a moiety of the manor of Ablington, 9 Joh. John de Willington had a charter of free-warren in Ablington and other manors, 3 E. 2. and died ſeized hereof 12 E. 3. Sir Ralph de Willington died ſeized of this manor 22 E. 3. and livery thereof was granted to his ſon Henry the next year; whoſe ſon ſir John de Willington had ſeizin of it 2 R. 2. He had a ſon Ralph, whoſe wife Joan ſurvived him, and was afterwards married to Thomas Weſt, whom alſo ſhe ſurvived, and held the manor of Ablington 6 H. 4. The laſt Ralph Willington had two ſons, Ralph and John, who died without iſſue, and a daughter Joan, married to John Wrath, by whom ſhe had a ſon John Wrath, who dying, without iſſue, ſeized of this manor, 13 H. 4. left his two ſiſters coheireſſes, of whom, Elizabeth was married to ſir William Poulton, and Iſabel was the widow of William Beaumont.

Sir William Poulton and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of the ſixth part of the manor of Ablington, to the uſe of themſelves in ſpecial taille; the remainder to John, the ſon of ſir William, in taille general; the remainder to the right heirs of Iſabel, widow of William Beaumont. They dying without iſſue, the eſtate came to Iſabel Beaumont, who had iſſue John and Iſabel. John died without iſſue, whereby his ſiſter became ſeized, who dying unmarried 2 H. 6. the eſtate deſcended to her next kinſman and heir ſir Thomas Beaumont, who died ſeized 29 H. 6. and was ſucceeded by his ſon ſir William Beaumont, in ſome records ſtiled William Beaumont, eſq; who died 32 H. 6. and was ſucceeded by Philip Beaumont his brother, who died 13 E. 4.

Hugh Beaumont and Elizabeth his wife, and John Baſſet and Elizabeth his wife, levied a fine of this manor to Richard biſhop of Durham and divers great perſons, among whom was ſir Giles d'Aubeny, 16 H. 7. Giles lord d'Aubeny died ſeized thereof 6 H. 8. and livery of it was granted the ſame year to Henry lord d'Aubeny his ſon. This manor was afterwards granted to Edward duke of Somerſet, and, after his attainder, it was granted to James Baſſet, 4 Mariæ, and again confirmed to Arthur Baſſet, 7 Eliz. The ſucceſſion to this manor is the ſame with Frampton Cotterell, Sainthurſt, Weſtonbirt, and Poulton in Awre.

Lands in this place, which had been formerly given for finding lamps in the church of Bibury, were granted to ſir William Rider, 7 Jac.

3. Arlington, which conſiſts of 55 families and 255 inhabitants. This manor is expreſſly mentioned in Domeſday-book, which gives the following particulars:

'Chenvichelle, one of king Edward's thanes, 'held Alvredintune. There were five hides, and 'four plow-tillages in demean, and twelve villeins 'and one bordar with ſix plow-tillages, and ſixteen 'ſervi and ancillæ, and two mills of 20*s*. [rent.] 'A wood one mile long, and half a mile broad. 'Of theſe two manors [i.e. Cedeorde and Alvredin-'tune] the ſteward paid what he pleaſed in the 'time of king Edward. They now pay 40*l*. of 'white money, of which 20 in ora. Earl Roger 'held them. Domeſday-book, p. 69.

Gilbert de Clare, earl of Glouceſter and Hertford, held Alurington 1 E. 2. Alice, widow of John de Pembrige, held it 7 E. 3. in which year Roger Norman levied a fine, and ſettled this manor on himſelf for life, the remainder on Roger his ſon in taille. Roger Norman had a charter of free-warren in Alurington 19 E. 3. and died ſeized thereof 23 E. 3. leaving Giles his couſin and heir, who was ſeized of Alurington, near Cirenceſter, 36 E. 3. but William Clareſhull was ſeized of this manor the following year; Edward earl of Stafford held it 4 H. 4. and Richard de Beauchamp and Iſabel his wife were ſeized hereof 2 H. 5. The manor afterwards belonged to the priory of Oſney, and was granted to John Barrington, 1 E. 6. purſuant to the will of king H. 8.

4. Winſon, where are 24 families and 127 inhabitants. This tithing lies in Bradley hundred, about three miles from the church, and has a chapel of eaſe dedicated to St. Michael, with a yard conſecrated for ſepulture in the year 1738. Mr. Creſſwell is patron. The manor belongs to Dr. Doiley. Mr. Howſe has a good eſtate here.

Note. Aldeſworth, Barnſley, and Winſon appear at the court-leet of the lord of the manor of Bibury. The other lords hold courts-baron.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, worth about 400*l*. a year. John Pagan, biſhop of Worceſter, appropriated the tithes of Bibury to the monaſtery of [d] Oſney, near Oxford, in the year 1130, which monaſtery hath preſented to this church. Mr. Creſſwell is patron and impropriator. The reverend Mr. Somerville, nephew of the late lord Somerville, is the preſent incumbent. He bears the ſame arms with his lordſhip, viz. Azure, three mullets Or, accompanied with ſeven croſſes croſlets fitchy ſable, three in chief, one in feſs, two in flank, and the laſt in baſe.

The vicarage-houſe, which is a very good one, was built by Dr. Vannam, the vicar, great grandfather to the preſent incumbent, about the beginning of this century.

At the incloſing of the common fields, about the year 1769, the pariſh was exonerated from tithe, and the impropriator and miniſter had lands allotted to them in lieu thereof.

This church is a peculiar, with juriſdiction over thoſe of Aldeſworth, Barnſley, and the chapel of Winſon. What the rights of this peculiar were, had been a ſubject of diſpute ever ſince the foundation of the ſee of Glouceſter, but it was agreed, between Dr. Benſon, late biſhop of Glouceſter, and Mrs. Warneford, then lady of the manor, to lay all evidence relating to it before the dean of the arches, and to enter into reciprocal engagements to abide by his award; which award was made Mar. 26, 1741. But the agreement became void at the death of that prelate; and the matters in controverſy, reſpecting the peculiar, are in the ſame ſtate as before. The lord of the manor doth not allow, to the biſhop of the dioceſe, a right of viſitation; he appoints his own official and chancellor, who hath the probat. of wills, and the grant of licences for marriage, to thoſe within the limits of the peculiar.

Peculiars took their riſe from the conſtitutions of Lanfranc archbiſhop of Canterbury, in the 11th century, who exempted all the pariſh prieſts of thoſe places where he was the lord or patron, in any dioceſe, from the juriſdiction of the biſhop.

The church is large and handſome, conſiſting of a nave and two ailes, with a tower at the weſt end, in which are ſix muſical bells. It is dedicated to St. Mary. The chancel belongs to the impropriator.

There was a coloſſal figure of St. Chriſtopher painted againſt the wall of this church, in purſuance of an opinion that prevailed in the ages of ignorance and ſuperſtition, that whoſoever had ſeen the image of that ſaint, ſhould not die of ſudden or accidental death; whence, ſays the author of the French Hiſtorical Dictionary, 'he is 'repreſented of a prodigious ſize, carrying the 'infant Jeſus upon his ſhoulders, and placed at 'the gates of cathedrals, and at the entrance of 'churches, that every body may ſee him the more 'eaſily.' Accordingly this figure was oppoſite to the entrance at the ſouth door of the church; but it hath lately been covered with white-waſh, and nothing remains to be ſeen but the two following lines, incorrectly written in antient characters, under the figure.

Xp̄ofori ſc̄ı ſpeciem quicunque tuetur,
Illo nanque die nullo langore gravetur.

Which may be thus engliſhed:

Saint Chriſtopher's fair figure who ſhall view,
Faintneſs nor feebleneſs that day ſhall rue.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

In the north aile, againſt the pillar behind the pulpit, is this inſcription:

[d] This monaſtery was firſt founded at Oxford, for ſecular canons, by Robert d'Oily, but tranſlated to Oſney in the year 1129, and the canons then became regulars of the order of St. Auguſtine. It was dedicated to the virgin Mary, and was valued at the diſſolution, at 775*l*. 18*s*. 6*d*. yearly. Upon the erection of the biſhoprick of Oxford, by king H. 8. the ſee was placed at Oſney, but ſoon after, in 1546, it was removed to Christ Church.

Mr. Wynnington was a very laborious minister, of whom it is said, that after he had preached an hour by the glass, he would turn it, assuring the congregation, that he meant to continue in his sermon only one hour longer. And it is added, that during the second hour of the sermon, Mr. Sackville, then lord of the manor, usually retired from church to smoak his pipe, but always returned in time to receive the benediction.

There is an elegant pyramidal monument of Syena marble, against the north wall of the chancel, with these arms in a lozenge, Party per fess embattled, argent and sable, six crosses patee counterchanged, for Warneford. On an escutcheon of pretence, Quarterly, 1st and 4th Or, 2d and 3d gules, over all a bend vaire, for Sackville. A small white marble table bears the following inscription:

Near this place lieth interred the body of Elizabeth Warneford, relict of Edmond Warneford, esq; She was eldest daughter of Henry Sackeville, esq; late of this place. She departed this life the 15th of May, 1756, to the inexpressible grief of her family and acquaintance, aged 67. She was a person of distinguished piety and virtue, and most exemplary in her life and conversation.

Ps. xxxiv. v. 19. Great are the troubles of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of all.

Opposite to the above, there is a small but elegant monument, of the same kind of marble, with the arms of Sackville, and this inscription:

Near this place lieth interred the body of Katherine Sackville, youngest daughter of Henry Sackville, esq; late of this place, who departed this life Sept. 13, 1760, aged 68. She was a person of a truly religious and good life, which was distinguished by a constant performance of the offices of friendship, piety, and charity.

Against a pillar in the church are two small marble monuments, whereon are the arms of Coxwell, and the following inscriptions:

Underneath lieth the body of John Coxwell, esq; late of Ablington in this parish, who died greatly lamented, Aug. 13, 1754, aged 56 years. He left behind him a widow (who caused this to be erected) and eleven children. He was a loving husband, a tender father, a kind master, and a bountiful friend to the poor. Prov. x. 7. The memory of the just is blessed.

Near this place lieth the body of Mrs. Mary Coxwell, relict of John Coxwell, esq; of Ablington. She died March 15, 1767, aged 54. Her conscientious and exemplary discharge of all social and religious duties, made her no less deservedly esteemed in her life time, than regretted at her death, by all her relations and acquaintance.

In the body of the church is a memorial, upon a flat stone, for Thomas Baker, A.M. late vicar of this parish, and one of his majesty's justices of the peace for this county, who died Nov. 8, 1755. His arms, Azure, a fess Or, charged with three roquefoils gules, between as many swans heads erazed in the second, gorged with ducal coronets of the first.

Upon flat stones, in the chancel, are the following memorials:

John Vannam, D. D. vicar of Bibury, died July the 13th, 1721, aged 84.

Eliz^a. Hickes, daughter of Dr. Vannam, and wife of Rob^t. Hickes, esq; of Comb in y^e county of Glouceſter, died July y^e 30th, 1720, aged 44.

George Vannam, M. A. Rector of Buscot, Berks, died Nov. y^e 27th, 1716, aged 37.

Benefactions.

There is a charitable institution here, called Jesus Almshouse, founded by Hugh Westwood, for a master and three brethren. The master receives eighteen-pence a week, and the brethren sixteen-pence each; and they have besides a load of wood yearly, and a coat, with a plate of silver, whereon are engraven the arms and initial letters of the name of the founder. There are governors appointed to this charity, of which the present lord of the manor, the minister, and church-wardens are of the number.

John Smyther, of Arlington, gave 10*l.* the interest of which to be bestowed upon four poor widows of this parish.—The first mention of the distribution of this charity is in the year 1682.

Mr. William Forder, of Amney Crucis, by his will dated Mar. 30, 35 C. 2. gave 5*l.* to the parish church of Bibury, to remain as a stock for ever.

— Tawny, (probably of this parish) in 1685, bequeathed, after the expiration of one life, 50*l.* as a stock for the use of the poor.

Mrs. Katherine Sackville, by her will, left 100*l.* for the use of the poor; the interest of it to be distributed annually, at the discretion of the minister and church-wardens.

At the beginning of this century, according to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 100 houses and about 500 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 16 were freeholders; yearly births 17, burials 13.

But

But it appears by the parish register, that in a series of ten years, from 1714 to 1723 inclusive, there were 145 baptisms and 110 burials; and in a like series, from 1760 to 1769, 194 baptisms and 156 burials; and there are, at present, 160 families and 780 inhabitants. So that population hath very much encreased in this century; and the number of living inhabitants is, to the average of annual burials, exactly as 50 to 1, which shews the place to be very healthy.

BICKNOR (ENGLISH,)

LIES in the hundred of St. Briavel, in the Forest division of the county, three miles distant north from Colford, five eastward from Monmouth, and twenty-two westward from Gloucester.

It is situated upon the bank of the river Wye, whence it was called Bicanofre, from Bec, a river, and Oppe, which signifies upon. It is distinguished, as above, from another parish on the opposite side of the same river, called Welch Bicknor, because all on the other side was formerly reputed to be in Wales.

This village, like most others in the forest of Dean, produceth coal and iron ore. It consists of rich meadow and pasture ground, with very little arable. A small rill, called Eastpitch-brook, rises in the parish, and empties itself into the Wye.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This manor, soon after the Conquest, was held by William the son of Norman, for in Domesday-book it is thus expreſt:

'The same William [i. e. son of Norman] holds 'Bicanofre in Westberie hundred. Morganan 'held it in the time of king Edward. There is 'half a hide, and in demean half a plow-tillage, 'with six bordars. It was worth 5*s.* and is now 'worth 10*s.* Domesday-book, p. 74.

One of the bailiwicks of the forest was denominated from this place, and William Aminell held it 8 and 20 H. 3.

William de Musgros was seized of the manor of Bicknor 15 E. 1. and Cicely de Musgros held the same, as appears by the records, in the 15th and 29th years of the same reign.

Richard Talbot, of Goderick-castle in Herefordshire, in right of Elizabeth his wife, one of the sisters and heirs of John Comin of Badenaugh, of the royal blood of Scotland, was seized of the manor and advowson of Bicknor, and levied a fine thereof to the use of himself in taille, 12 E. 3.

This manor, soon after, came into the family of Ferrers, of whom, John lord Ferrers de Chartley, in right of Elizabeth his wife, the widow of Fulk le Strange, and daughter of Ralph de Stafford, was seized of it, and died 41 E. 3. Which Elizabeth was afterwards married to Reginald lord Cobham, and died seized of this manor 49 E. 3. Robert lord Ferrers of Chartley, son of sir John, succeeded his father in this estate, and marrying Margaret, daughter of Edward lord Spencer, died seized of Bicknor English, 1 H. 5. leaving Edmond lord Ferrers of Chartley their son and heir, who died seized of Tainton and of this manor, with the office of woodwardship in the forest of Dean, 14 H. 6. William lord Ferrers, son of Edmond, had livery of the manor presently after his father's death, and dying 28 H. 6. left an only daughter Anne, married to Walter d'Evereux, esq; who afterwards, in her right, became lord Ferrers of Chartley. Elizabeth the widow of William lord Ferrers levied a fine of the manor of Bicknor, to Thomas archbishop of Canterbury, and to many other great men, 32 H. 6. By this account it appears, that the manor of Bicknor continued in the name of Ferrers about one hundred and twenty years.

The manor soon after came to William Wallein, or Walwyn, proprietor of Abbenhall, who died seized thereof 11 E. 4.

Sir John Luterell had livery of the manor of Bicknor 1 Eliz. and the earl of Clanricard was seized of it in the year 1608. It afterwards came to Benedict Hall, of Highmeadow, esq; from whom it descended to lord viscount Gage, the present lord of the manor. For his lordship's arms, &c. see Newland.

Alexander Carent was seized of lands in Bicknor 5 E. 3. and John his son and heir held the same 6 R. 2.

Edward Tomkyns Machen, esq; has a good house and estate in this parish. He is descended of an antient family which has long resided in this county. Thomas Machen, his ancestor, was thrice mayor of the city of Gloucester, who died in 1614, and lies buried in the body of Gloucester cathedral, as mentioned p. 177.

The family of the Wyrrals, which has been seated here several generations past, is of great antiquity. Matthew Wyrral was high sheriff of this county in 1259. John Wyrral, a descendant from him, died 33 E. 3. and left William Wyrral his son and successor, who died also 38 E. 3. John Wyrral, son of William, had a wife of the name of Maud, and died in the reign of Richard the Second; and John Wyrral, son of the last John, died in the reign of Henry the Sixth, leaving Jenkyn Wyrral his son, who married Margaret, daughter of —— Machen, of St. Briavel's. He died 7 E. 4. and was buried in the church-yard of Newland, concerning whose epitaph there have been very frequent mistakes. John Wyrral, son of Jenkyn, married the daughter of —— Price, by whom he had a son William, who wedded Anne, daughter and heiress of John Ashurst. John Wyrral, son of William, married Isabel, daughter and heiress of Robert Motton, and had a son William, whose son William Wyrral married

Maud

Maud, daughter of Thomas Baynham, of Clowerwall, and died in the reign of king Henry the Eighth. George Wyrral, ſon of the laſt William, married Bridget, daughter of George Wintour, of Churcham, and William his ſon married Catherine, daughter of Michael Chadwell, of Chipping-Norton in Oxfordſhire. George Wyrral, ſon of William, married Mary, only daughter of Dennis Compton, and had a ſon William, who married Anne Kyrle. Jephtha Wyrral, ſon of William, married Martha, daughter of Thomas Pury, of Tainton, and George his ſon poſſeſſed a good houſe and eſtate in the pariſh of Bicknor, at the beginning of this century. The arms of this family are, Gules, a chevron Or, between three croſſes croſlets argent, in chief a lion paſſant of the third.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory in the foreſt deanery, worth about 130*l.* a year. Mr. Jones is patron; Mr. Meredith the preſent incumbent.

The church is dedicated to the virgin Mary. It is a large one, with two ſide ailes, a low embattled tower at the weſt end, and a ſmall chapel on each ſide of the chancel, one belonging to the family of Machen, the other to that of Wyrral, where they bury.

BISLEY.

THIS large pariſh lies in the hundred of Biſley, to which it gives name. The church is about three miles eaſt from Stroud, nine weſtward from Cirenceſter, four north from Minchin-hampton, and ten ſouthward from Glouceſter.

Biſley has a weekly market on Thurſdays, now little frequented, for the town is moſt unfavourably ſituated for a market, being of very difficult acceſs, by reaſon of the deep bottoms which environ it every way; but it has two yearly fairs, for cattle, &c. which are conſiderable, viz. one upon St. George's day, the other upon All-ſaints day, granted by king James the Second.

There are two ſmall brooks which run through the pariſh into Stroud river. The greater part of the pariſh is high ground, conſiſting moſtly of arable and woodland, with extenſive waſtes, on which are ſeveral populous villages, inhabited chiefly by poor people employ'd in the clothing manufacture. But it is probable that it was formerly much more woody than at preſent, and that its name is compounded of bois, a wood, and leaz, a paſture. Leaving this etymology to ſtand or fall as reaſon and better judgments may determine, I proceed to give a ſhort deſcription of ſuch places in this pariſh as more particularly deſerve notice.

In the woodland part, on the northern border, lies a ſmall ſequeſtered glyn or valley, called Timbercomb-bottom, noted for its ſingular ſituation, being intirely ſeparated from the reſt of the world by thick ſurrounding woods, which make it not eaſily acceſſible, nor is it to be ſeen 'till you enter into it. It is an eſtate belonging to Mr. Smart.

Chalford-bottom is a deep and narrow valley, about a mile in length, lying partly in Minchinhampton, but the greater part, being on the north ſide of the river which runs to Stroud, is in this pariſh. On the curious traveller's firſt approach, it preſents at once a very ſtriking and reſpectable appearance, conſiſting of a great number of well-built houſes, equal to a little town, lying very contiguous, but not joined together. Theſe are intermixt with rows of tenters, along the ſide of the hill, on which the cloth is ſtretched in the proceſs of making. This variety of landſcape is uncommonly pleaſing, and ſo great and ſurpriſing is the acclivity where ſome of the buildings ſtand, that in different approaches to the ſame houſe, you aſcend to the loweſt ſtory, and deſcend to the higheſt. In this bottom are eight fulling-mills, and here, and in the villages above the hill, called the Linches, within the pariſh, great numbers of people, employed in the different branches of the woollen manufacture, reſide. But the trade has lately been very much on the decline.

Chalford is likewiſe noted for the petrifying quality of a remarkably clear ſpring of water, iſſuing, by ſeveral apertures, out of the north ſide of the hill next to Minchin-hampton. Its effects are ſeen on various ſubſtances lying in its courſe, ſuch as moſs, and ſmall pieces of wood; but they are particularly obſervable on the axis and other parts of a mill-wheel, on which the water is continually dropping, ſo that in the courſe of a year, it forms incruſtations nearly half an inch thick, not much unlike pieces of manna. Falling into cavities, it forms ſtalactites, and large petrified maſſes in various uncommon ſhapes, pieces of which are occaſionally taken out and reſerved as curioſities.

The inhabitants of Chalford and its vicinities are eſtimated at near two thouſand, who are above two miles diſtant from the pariſh church; wherefore a neat chapel was erected there some years ago, for their accommodation, in which they had sermons on sundays, and the officiating minister was supported by subscription. But for a year or two past, the contributions have failed, either from the lessened abilities of the inhabitants, thro' the decline of trade, or from some other cause, and there has been no regular service since.

Sir Robert Atkyns asserts, but I know not upon what authority, that the first clothing-mill in these parts was erected in Todgmore, or Todesmore-bottom, in this parish; and that the famous Roger Bacon, commonly called friar Bacon, (an eminent mathematician and philosopher for the age he lived in, and thence reputed a conjurer by the vulgar) was born there; and that he was educated at St. Mary's chapel in Chalford, now St. Mary's mill. This is a house belonging to Mr. Thomas-Fry Clark, in which is a room said to have been friar Bacon's study. But Dr. Cave and other biographers make Ilchester in Somersetshire to be the place of that great man's nativity. He died in 1284.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

In Domesday-book it is thus expressed:

'Earl Hugh holds Biselege in Biseleie hundred, 'and Robert holds it of him. There are eight 'hides. In demean are four plow-tillages, and 'twenty villeins, and twenty-eight bordars with 'twenty plow-tillages. There are six servi, and 'four ancillæ. There are two priests, and eight 'radcheniſters having ten plow-tillages, and 'twenty-three other men paying [a rent of] 44*s.* 'and two sextaries of honey. There are five mills 'of 16*s.* value, and a wood of 20*s.* and eleven 'burgages in Gloucester yielding 66*d.* It was 'worth 24*l.* and is now worth 20*l.* D. B. p. 73.

It appears that this manor was afterwards in the crown 'till the time of king Edward the First, when it came, by marriage, to the Mortimers, a great and noble family, descended from Roger de Mortimer, who was general to William duke of Normandy, and, twelve years before the conquest of England, obtained a glorious victory for him against Odo, brother to the French king.

Ralph de Mortimer (probably the son of Roger) was one of the Conqueror's chief commanders in his expedition against England, and afterwards subdued and took prisoner Edrick earl of Shrewsbury, (who, in the marches of Wales, stood out against the Conqueror,) and was rewarded with his vast estate.

His son and heir Hugh was a great enemy to king Henry the Second, and incited Roger earl of Hereford to fortify his castle of Gloucester, and other his strong holds, as he had his own, against the king; but the earl of Hereford returning to his duty, Mortimer's three castles were at the same time besieged, and he forced to yield. His other turbulent actions shew him to have been of a proud and haughty spirit. He died 31 H. 2.

Roger his son and heir, who performed considerable exploits, especially against the Welsh, had for his second wife, Isabel, sister and heir to Hugh de Ferrers, upon whose death, 6 Joh. Roger gave 300 marks, and a horse for the great saddle, whereupon he had livery of the lordships of Leachlade and Lagebery in Gloucestershire, part of the inheritance of his said wife, who founded a nunnery at Leachlade, and was buried there. This Roger died 17 Joh.

Hugh Mortimer, his son by his first wife, succeeded him, who being firm to the king's interest against his rebellious barons, attended the king with all his armed power at Cirencester, according to summons, the year before his father's death, 16 Joh. and was well rewarded by that king. He married Annora, the daughter of William de Braose, by whom he had lands in Cherleton and Chiriton, and died without issue 11 H. 3.

Ralph Mortimer, half brother to Hugh, and son of the last Roger by his second wife, succeeded, and paying 100*l.* for relief, had livery of all his lands in Gloucestershire and elsewhere, excepting Leachlade. He was a great warrior, and built several castles upon his lands next Wales, and was so much in favour with the Welch, that prince Llewellin gave him his daughter Gladuse Duy in marriage, with large possessions. He died 30 H. 3.

Roger, his son and heir, had livery of all his lands (his mother's jointure excepted) upon paying 2000 marks, 31 H. 3. For some time he suffered greatly in his estate, by firmly adhering to king Henry the Third, against his rebellious barons; and was afterwards the chief occasion of their total defeat at the battle of Evesham, which victory was much owing to the forces raised by him, after he had been the sole occasion of delivering prince Edward, taken prisoner at the battle of Lewes. At this battle of Evesham, he commanded the third part of the prince's army, as the prince himself and the duke of Gloucester did the other two; whereby, assaulting the rebels on each side, they gained a glorious victory, recovering the captive king; for all which faithful services, this great earl was well rewarded. He married Maud, daughter and coheir of William de Braose, and, after other considerable services, died 10 E. 1.

Edmond, son of the last Roger, with other barons of the marches, encountered and slew in battle, Leoline prince of Wales, 10 E. 1. He married Margaret, a Spanish lady, kinswoman to queen Elianor, with whom he had great estates bestowed on him, among which was the manor of Bisley, and two parts of the advowson of the church, whereof he died seized 31 E. 1.

Roger Mortimer was son and heir of Edmond, upon whose departing without leave from the king's army in Scotland, 34 E. 1. the sheriffs of Gloucestershire, &c. were commanded to seize his lands, but they were restored the next year. In 18 E. 2. he was imprisoned for his rebellious practices, and his lands given to the Spencers; but escaping scaped into France, and returned and dethroned ing Edward the Second, and obtains not his wn only, but much of the Spencers eſtate, among hich were the caſtle and manor of Hawley, with he chaſes of Malvern and Corſe, in the counties f Worceſter and Glouceſter. He had a grant of ne meſſuage, 10 librats of land, and rents in Biſley, hich lately belonged to Hugh le Diſpencer, 1 E. 3. nd obtained for Jeffery his third ſon, the manors f Leachlade and Sodington; but his wicked ractices and inſolent pride brought him to the allows, 4 E. 3.

Edmond his eldeſt ſon (not earl of March) mar- ed Elizabeth, daughter of Bartholomew lord adleſmere, and died the year after his father, E. 3. leaving Roger his ſon, then three years of ge, heir to the remains of his eſtate, who obtained reverſal of his grandfather's ſentence, 26 E. 3. nd ſo recovered the title of earl of March, and e whole eſtate; moſt of which had been given William de Montacute earl of Saliſbury. lizabeth Badleſmere, afterwards married to enry Spencer, dying 33 E. 3. he had livery of her nds, (being her heir) and died himſelf, ſeized of yſelege and Winſton, 34 E. 3.

Edmond Mortimer earl of March, &c. was his n and heir, by Philippa, daughter to William rl of Montacute. He married Philippa, daugh- to Lionel duke of Clarence, (whence the Mor- ners had juſt title afterwards to the crown.) He d great ſervices, eſpecially in Ireland, where he s deputy, and where he died 5 R. 2. This lmond was alſo heir, by his wife, to the third rt of the earldom of Glouceſter; for his wife s the daughter of Elizabeth, heireſs to William Burgh, who was heir to John de Burgh earl of ſter, who had married the third ſiſter and coheir Gilbert de Clare.

Roger Mortimer was his ſon and heir, born E. 3. one of whoſe godfathers was Thomas rton abbat of Glouceſter. He was made lieu- ant of Ireland 5 R. 2. and was declared, in liament, heir apparent to the crown, in the th year of that reign. He married Elianor, ghter to Thomas Holland earl of Kent, and ce to king Richard the Second; and was ſlain Ireland 22 R. 2. dying ſeized of the manor of ley, and of two parts of the church.

Edmond was his ſon and heir, then ſix years of , and the laſt earl of March of this family. was taken priſoner by Owen Glendourdwy nce of Wales, and afterwards married his ghter. His ſecond wife was Anne, daughter Edmond earl of Stafford; but he died without 3 H. 6. ſeized of the manors of Biſley, Barnſ- Leachlade, Miſerden, Charleton, Winſton, mpsfield, and Over-Siddington.

Richard duke of York was ſon and heir of e, who was ſiſter and heir of Edmond Morti- the laſt earl of March, and ſucceeded him in manor of Biſley, and in the reſt of his great es. He was ſlain in the battle of Wakefield, mpting to recover his right to the crown of England. And the manor and hundred of Biſley were granted to his widow, Cicely dutcheſs of York, for her life, 38 H. 6. which was confirmed to her 1 E. 4. and ſhe died 10 H. 7. By this account it appears, that the manor of Biſley had continued in the name of the Mortimers 180 years, and then, by deſcent from their heir female, was united to the crown.

Edward the Fourth, king of England, was ſon and heir of Richard duke of York, whereby the manor of Biſley came to the crown.

Richard the Third grants the manors of Biſley, Tunly, and Swageſwick to ſir William Nottingham, all which were held of the honour of Hereford.

The manor of Biſley ſoon after reverted to the crown, and, with the advowſon of the vicarage, was granted to ſir Miles Mildmay, 3 E. 6.

The manor was again in the crown in the year 1608, and was granted, by king James the Firſt, to the marquis of Rockingham, who granted it over to Thomas Maſter, D. D. and maſter of the Temple; whoſe heir ſold it to ſir Robert Atkyns of Saperton, from whom it was purchaſed by Thomas Stephens, eſq; whoſe ſon John Stephens, of Upper Lypiat, eſq; is the preſent lord of the manor. His arms are, Per chevron, azure and argent, two falcons diſplay'd Or.

Peter Corbete was ſeized of two parts of the hundred of Biſelegh; Theobald de Verdune held a fourth part, and Richard de Biſelegh held the other fourth part, 15 E. 1. The hundred of Biſley was granted to ſir Thomas Seimour 1 E. 6. who was afterwards attainted of treaſon, and ſir Miles Mildmay became proprietor of it; and then it was granted to Robert Davis, 2 Eliz. and was again conveyed to Thomas Perry, in the ninth year of the ſame reign. It became afterwards the property of ſir Robert Atkyns of Saperton, and is one of the ſeven hundreds now in diſpute between the earl of Bathurſt and Mr. Chamberlayne. See Cirenceſter.

Humphry de Bohun, earl of Eſſex and Hereford, purchaſed lands in Biſley of John de Walerond, the ſon of John, 39 H. 3.

William Mansfield (perhaps the ſame with William Manſell, mentioned in the records relating to Lypiat) held one vineyard, ſixteen acres of land, [or ſix acres of land, as ſir Robert Atkyns, whom I have followed in this particular, has it in another place, p. 32.] and three acres of wood in Biſley, 18 E. 2.—From this record that learned hiſtorian hath undertaken to prove the improbability of there having ever been any vineyards in Glouceſterſhire, otherwiſe than apple-orchards. But I have already given my ſentiments on this matter, which the reader may ſee in the note p. 25, where that gentleman's argument is quoted at large.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

There are nine tithings in this pariſh, viz.

1. Biſley,

1. Bisley, of which already, with two constables.

2. Avenage, where is nothing remarkable.

3. Bidfield. Owen de Roderick was seized of Bidfield in the reign of king Edward the Third, but being attainted for rebellion, Bidfield was granted to Mary Herney, widow of William Herney, 47 E. 3. This manor afterwards belonged to Thomas Butler and Maud his wife; but upon their surrender, it was granted to John Baker for life, 5 E. 4. and was again granted to Thomas Gilbert, for his life, in the twelfth year, and again to Edward Pye, for his life, in the sixteenth year of that reign. Bidfield in Bisley, and many other estates, were granted to Thomas Hennage and the lord Willoughby, in consideration of lands in other places, 2 E. 6. Sir Anthony Grey had livery of this manor 4 Eliz. and Bidfield-farm, in the tenure of sir Anthony Kingstone, was granted to Arthur lord Grey 9 Eliz. Bidfield now belongs to John Stephens, of Upper Lypiat, esq;

4. Bussage.

5. Chalford. Thomas Mull and William Mull were seized of Chalford 2 E. 4.

6. Ockeridge. George Rawleigh, esq; died seized of lands in Okerinch and Avenash 37 H. 8. and Simon Raleigh, his son, had livery thereof the same year. Lands in Okerinch in Bisleigh, which had belonged to the abbey of Cirencester, were granted to Thomas Stroud, Walter Earl, and James Paget 36 H. 8.

7. Steanbridge, of which there is nothing observable.

8. Troham, or Trougham, generally called Druffham. This place is mentioned in Domesday-book, where it is said,

'The same earl [Hugh] held there [i. e. in 'Biselege] one hide at Troham. Levenod held it 'of king Edward, and could go where he pleased. 'This land was taxed. There were four bordars 'with one plow-tillage, and four acres of meadow. 'It was worth 20*s.* The same earl held half a 'hide there, which Roger de Laci challenged to 'belong to Egesuurde, as the county witnesseth. 'It is worth 10*s.* and paid tax.' Dom. B. p. 73.

William Compton died seized of the manor of Trougham 38 H. 8. livery of which was granted to Walter Compton, his son, the same year. Mr. Smart has a good house and estate in this tithing, which hath been long enjoyed by his ancestors; and Mr. Turner has also a good house and estate here.

This place is remarkable for quarries of good tile, from which the vale country is supply'd at five shillings a thousand, or twenty-five shillings the waggon-load. Should the navigation to Stroud take place, it is probable this article may be of considerable consequence.

9. Tunley and Daneway. These places consist chiefly of woodland, with some tillage and pasture ground, in deep hollows, and little glyns of difficult access. It has been supposed that the Danes harboured themselves in the latter of these places, when this country was so terribly infested with them; and so it became distinguished with their name, from its being a chief place of their resort. John Clifford held one messuage and one plow-tillage in Daneway 20 R. 2. Mr. Hancock has a good old house, and a good estate at Daneway. His ancestors, from about the reign of queen Elizabeth, have carefully transmitted to him the fashionable houshold furniture of their times, and an intire suit of man's apparel, not the worse for wear, which he prudently preserves as real curiosities, and many people resort to see them.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Stonehouse, worth 150*l.* a year, of which the lord Chancellor is patron, and Mr. Phillips the present incumbent.

The tithes of this parish, and of Stroud (for the parish of Stroud was formerly annexed to this church) were divided into three portions, whereof two were appropriated to two prebends of Westbury-college in this county; the other, which was the first in order, was appropriated to the prebend of the college of Stoke, near Clare in Suffolk. The rectory of these three prebends, as also a wood called Hawkley-wood, in Bisley, which also belonged to the prebend of Stoke, were granted to Lawrence Baskervil and William Blake, scriveners, 3 Jac. These tithes are vested in the earl of Coventry, and are worth about 400*l.* a year.

The tithe of all tithe-corn and hay belonging to the impropriation, and all the tithes of lambs and wool, and oblations, offerings, and all privy tithes were appointed to the vicar, by an antient endowment made by Reginald bishop of Worcester, in the year 1360; besides which, the full tithes of the glebe-land of the impropriation belong to the vicar.

There was formerly a chantry in this church, the revenue whereof was granted to Walter Compton 2 E. 6. but the chantry-house in Bisley and lands which had belonged to the chantry of St. Mary in Westbury, were granted to Francis Maurice and Francis Philips, in trust for Anthony Cope and others, 10 Jac.

The church is large and lofty, consisting of the nave and two ailes, with a high spire at the west end, and six bells in the tower. The church has lately been new seated in a neat manner, and makes a good appearance. It is dedicated to All Saints, and is said to have been built by one of the Mortimers.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

In the south aile is the figure in stone of a knight templer, well preserved, reported by tradition to have been the founder of the church.

Near

Near the nave of the church, upon braſs, fixed on a grey marble flat ſtone, is engraved the figure of a woman, and on the right and left below, a repreſentation of ſix ſons and ſix daughters, with this inſcription in old black characters.

Againſt the eaſt wall of the chancel is a monument, with an inſcription for Thomas Freame, of Lypiat, eſq; who died in 1659, and his arms, viz. 1. Azure, a croſs flory gules, between eight ears of ripe wheat, ſtalked and pendent, proper. 2. A feſs between three birds. And oppoſite to it is a handſome monument, and memorial in Latin, for William Freame his ſon, with his effigy, holding a book in his hand. He died in 1696.

Againſt the ſouth wall of the chancel are ſeveral memorials for the Jaynes, of this pariſh, with theſe arms, viz. 1. Gules, a chief vaire, argent and azure, impaling 2. On a chevron, between three eagles heads eraſed Or, three trefoils ſable.

Againſt the ſouth wall, is a marble monument, with the arms of Stephens, as before, and this inſcription:

His great Candour and Benevolence juſtly intituled him to the Eſteem of all that knew him, and he was not only an Ornament to his Profeſſion, but alſo to the worthy and antient Family from whence he deſcended. He died greatly lamented the 7th Day of December in the Year 1745, aged 46 Years.

In the nave of the church, a monument for John Mills, gent. who died in 1718, and Eſther his wife who died in 1701, with theſe arms, Ermine, two ſaltires in pale ſable.

A memorial for Scholaſtica Sevill, wife of William Sevill of Chalford; with theſe arms, viz. Argent, upon a bend ſable, three eagles diſplay'd Or.

Againſt the ſouth wall of the nave, very high, is erected a handſome monument of white marble, with the family arms, Argent, a chevron between three pheons heads ſable; and upon the table it is thus written:

In the North Iſle of this Church, near the Remains of a much-beloved Wife, Father and Mother, lie thoſe of Thomas Smart, Eſq; of Grays in this Pariſh; who having, with Integrity, and the moſt endearing Goodnature and Chearfulneſs, diſcharged the Offices of this Life, exchanged it for Immortality on the 7th of December, in the Year of our Lord 1746, and in the 70th Year of his Age.

Here alſo lie the Bodies of his Sons William and Thomas, the former died in his Infancy, the latter on the 25th of April, 1742, aged 44.

This Monument, with the higheſt Senſe of Affection, Gratitude and Duty, was erected to their Memory, by their ſurviving Son and Brother Richard Smart, Eſq;

The above-mentioned Thomas Smart, Eſq; had Iſſue likewiſe another Son, of the Name of Richard, elder Brother to the ſaid William, Thomas and Richard, who died very young, and lies buried at Duntiſborne Rouſe.

The regiſter of this pariſh commences as early as 1547, 2 E. 6. and has been well kept from that time to the preſent. In particular, it was regularly kept from 1640 to 1660, during the civil war and interregnum, by Mr. Britton the miniſter, an uncommon inſtance in thoſe days. The medium of burials for the years 1548 and 1549 was 18 yearly, and of chriſtnings 37, (more than double the burials) which ſhews the pariſh to have been very healthy in thoſe days; and the number of deaths ſhews that it was not very thinly inhabited; as ſuppoſing 1 in 55 to die yearly, which, conſidering the healthineſs of the place, ſeems not an undue proportion, there would be near 1000 inhabitants. At that time, there is reaſon to ſuppoſe, they had ſome little of the clothing manufacture in the pariſh.

For ten years, form 1701 to 1710 incluſively, the average of burials is 58, of chriſtnings 85. From 1761 to 1765 incluſively, the medium of burials is 81, of chriſtnings 127; and during the ſubſequent five years, which are given diſtinct, as the inhabitants were more unhealthy from an epidemic fever prevailing, the burials are 116, the chriſtnings 121, and the medium of burials for the whole ten years is 99, of chriſtnings 124.

Hence it may be obſerved, that the inhabitants have gradually increaſed to the preſent time, and the burials have alſo increaſed more than the baptiſms; which latter circumſtance may be attributed to various cauſes, as the acceſſion of people from other parts, to a growing manufacture, as it has been till within a few years; the poor people's incommodious way of life in cloſe and crouded habitations; but eſpecially the general intemperance of manufacturing people, their wants, neceſſities, and reduced manner of living when paſt their labour, as few of them make any proviſion for ſickneſs or old age; and a hard ſeaſon, with the want of accommodations they formerly enjoyed, carries many of them off.

In the regiſter, many ages are recorded from 70 to 80, ſeveral betwixt 80 and 90, a few above 90, but none of 100 for many years paſt, tho' it is a very healthy air.

There is an Independent meeting-houſe near Chalford, and another belonging to a ſmall ſociety of Baptiſts, in the ſame neighbourhood, at each of which ſome perſons are occaſionally buried; but it is apprehended, not ten yearly at both. In calculating the number of inhabitants in the pariſh, which cannot be exactly aſcertained, theſe muſt be taken into the account: And allowing one in forty-five to die yearly, which is probably near the truth, they are 4905.

BITTON

IS a pariſh of very large extent, in the hundred of Langley and Swineſhead. The church is about ſix miles eaſt from the city of Briſtol, ſeven weſt from Bath, and thirty-eight ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter. It is bounded on the eaſt by a corner of Somerſetſhire, from which it is ſeparated by the brook Swinford; on the weſt by St. George's, on the north by Abſton and Siſton, and on the ſouth by the river Avon, which parts it from Keynſham in Somerſetſhire.

The river Boyd runs through and gives name to the pariſh, which hath been variouſly written in different ages, as Betune in Domeſday-book, Button in other antient records, and latterly Bitton, as it ſtands at the head of this account, all which are ſuppoſed to be contractions of, or corrupt modes of writing, Boyd-town, i. e. the town upon the river Boyd.

Langley and Swineſhead were antiently two diſtinct hundreds, of which the latter has been thought to take its name from the brook Swinford; but I apprehend that to be a miſtake. For ſince in Domeſday-book the name is written Sineſhoved, and Suinheve, which I underſtand to ſignify Sine's or Suin's houſe, from the Saxon hope a houſe, (whence our word hovel) it is probable that the hundred was denominated from the houſe of one Sine, or Swain, (for that record is not very accurate in orthography) who, in the Saxon times, might be the chief perſon of the hundred; and reſiding near the place where the road croſſed the water, by parity of reaſoning, the paſſage was alſo called Sine's-ford, or Swinford, after his name, which, in time, was applied to the whole river.

The pariſh, or the greater part of it, lies in that tract of ground formerly called the foreſt of Kingſwood, which was diſafforeſted, according to ſome accounts, in the reign of king Henry the Third. It is beautifully varied with eaſy elevations, and ſome bolder riſing grounds, which form a very agreeable landſcape, as ſeen from ſeveral points of view. The ſoil is rich and fertile, conſiſting chiefly of loam, intermixt with different proportions of ſand, and in ſome parts a little clay. The greater part is meadow and paſture, with ſome arable, both in common field and incloſures.

Great quantities of coal are dug in this pariſh, out of pits which are fifty yards deep, and ſome of them more. Here is alſo plenty of iron-ore, and rich cinders of the ſame metal, for ſmelting of which a furnace hath lately been erected, where they uſe coke inſtead of charcoal. The ſerpentine-ſtone, and many petrifications of the bivalve kind, are not uncommon in the fields and quarries. But upon the ſtricteſt inquiry, I cannot find that the ſoil produceth any rare vegetable. There is, however, a ſpring of purging mineral water near Comb-brook, which paſſing over a bed of iron-ore, carries with it ſome of the finer particles, and depoſits them in its courſe. The water of Gold-well, in the turnpike-road from Bath to Briſtol, is reckoned very fine and pure. There is a pump erected, and a can chained to it, for the uſe of travellers, to drink as they go along.

Several manufactures are carried on here, which deſerve particular notice. The braſs-mills are large works for making utenſils and thin plates of that metal. There are alſo machines for rolling and ſplitting of iron, for grinding of logwood, &c. and a pin-manufacture, though yet in its infancy, furniſhes employment for a conſiderable number of hands.

At Upton in this pariſh, a large ſtone coffin was lately found by people at plow in the field, containing a very perfect ſkeleton; but there were no coins, warlike inſtrument, nor other thing tending to diſcover whoſe bones they were. And human bones have been found ſeveral times, just within the ſurface of the ground, in a meadow called Siddenham, where a ſkirmiſh happened in the duke of Monmouth's rebellion.

The antiquities of this pariſh conſiſt of old foundations of buildings, found in the tithing of Hanham, and the remains of camps and fortifications fortifications, which have not without reaſon been attributed to the Romans; for Tacitus informs us, that in the emperor Claudius's time, P. Oſtorius, prætor of Britain, ſubdued the Iceni and the Cangi, and planted ſeveral garriſons upon or near the Antona, generally ſuppoſed to be the Avon, which ſeems to have been the boundary of the country of the Cangi in theſe parts. As a confirmation of this opinion, we find their name ſtill remaining in the compoſition of the names of ſeveral places in the north of Wiltſhire and Somerſetſhire, as Cannington, Cannings, Wincaunton, ſometimes called Cangton, and to mention but one inſtance more, Keynſham or Kaynſham, directly oppoſite to Hanham, on the other ſide of the river.

Theſe remains of antiquity induced the late Doctor Gale, in his Commentary upon Antoninus's Itinerary, to ſuppoſe that Hanham is really the place of the Roman ſtation Abone therein mentioned, and that it ought to have been placed after the Trajectus, whereas it ſtands before it, in the fourteenth Iter; for then would the diſtance be ſix computed miles from Abone to Aqua Solis, or Bath, as ſet down by Antoninus, from the preceding ſtation to that city. Thus, by tranſpoſing the order of the ſtations, the diſtances in the Itinerary come near the truth; but preſerving the order, there muſt be ſome miſtake in the diſtances. The late Mr. Haynes of Wick, upon principles ſimilar to the foregoing, fixed upon a ſpot in the pariſh of Abſton for the ſite of the Roman ſtation in queſtion.

Theſe conjectures are ingenious, but not altogether ſatisfactory to thoſe who know that the diſtances in the Itinerary are erroneous in other inſtances. In the thirteenth Iter it is ſet down, from Durocornovium, or Cirenceſter, to Spinæ, fifteen miles; whereas, if we are not miſtaken as to the ſituation of thoſe ſtations, which I believe is univerſally allowed, the real diſtance between them is more than double. If therefore there is ſo great a miſtake in our copies of the Itinerary, reſpecting the diſtance in the laſt mentioned inſtance, why may not that be the caſe alſo as to Abone and the Trajectus? and then we ſhall have reaſon to think they are placed in their natural order, as I ſhall endeavour to ſhew when the ſubject is reſumed under Lidney.

Having briefly touched on the antiquities and natural hiſtory of the place, I ſhall juſt mention a particular cuſtom which formerly prevailed, and is not, even now, wholly laid aſide. There are three meadows which are common after the hay and the firſt crop is taken off. The proprietors of three eſtates break thoſe meadows in the following manner: One of them turns into the firſt a white bull, another into the ſecond a black boar, and the remaining proprietor puts a black ſtone-horſe into the third meadow; after which, thoſe who have a right of common drive in their ſtock immediately. What could give riſe to this cuſtom may be matter of ſpeculation; but I conjecture, that the ſame reaſon that obliged the parſon of many pariſhes to keep a bull for the uſe of his pariſhioners, might alſo oblige the abbat of Keynſham, to whom the meadows formerly belonged, to provide a male of each of the beforementioned ſpecies for the uſe of the pariſh where the meadows lie; and the obligation continued in force on the poſſeſſors, after the diſſolution of monaſteries.

Barr's-Court in this pariſh, taken notice of by Mr. Camden and other topographers, as a fine ſeat in the foreſt of Kingſwood, is now moſtly taken down, and the remainder gone much to ruin.

I come now to treat

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Bitton is part of the antient demeſnes of the crown. In Domeſday-book it is thus recorded:

'There were thirty-ſix hides at farm in Betune, 'in Suinheve hundred, with its two members 'Wapelei and Wintreborne, in the time of king 'Edward. In demean were five plow-tillages, and 'forty-one villeins and twenty-nine bordars with 'forty-five plow-tillages. There are eighteen 'ſervi, with one mill.

'In the time of king Edward this manor paid 'a farm of one night, and it does the ſame now.' Domeſday-book, p. 67.

The paying a night's farm was finding a night's entertainment for the court in thoſe reigns, agreeable to the explanation of that expreſſion, p. 80.

'Dons [one of the king's thanes] holds Betone 'of the king, and he held it in the time of king 'Edward. There are two hides, one of which 'paid tax, the other belonged to the church. In 'demean are two plow-tillages, and five villeins, 'and two bordars with five plow-tillages. There 'are four ſervi, and ten acres of meadow. It was 'worth 6*l.* and is now worth 3*l.*' Dom. B. p. 80.

There are records of the following dates, which ſhew who were the ſucceſſive proprietors of this manor, viz. Adam d'Amavil was ſeized of the manor of Button by the grant of king H. 2. and his ſon Robert d'Amavil died ſeized of it, with a right to markets, 11 H. 3. A ſon of that Robert married Petronella de Vinon, who ſurviving her huſband, was ſeized of this manor 45 H. 3. and married Richard de la Moor, who purchaſed a charter in Button in the 53d year of that reign. Adam d'Amavil, ſon of Petronella, died ſeized of this manor 15 E. 1. and leaving no iſſue, his two ſiſters became his heirs, the one being married to Richard de la Moor, ſon of the former, who, in her right, was ſeized of the manor of Eldeland in Bitton; Amabel, the other ſiſter, was married to David le Blount, the ſon of David, who, in her right, was ſeized of the manor of Button, by the ſurrender of Petronella de Vinon, 15 E. 1. which David and Amabel were alſo ſeized thereof, 21 and 32 E. 1.

David le Blount, their ſon, died ſeized of the manor 17 E. 2. and was ſucceeded by his ſon Richard,

Richard, who held it in the twentieth year of that reign; and dying without iſſue, the manor of Button was poſſeſſed by his brother Edmond, who married one Agnes, and died ſeized thereof 36 E. 3. Edmond Blount, their elder ſon, and Margaret his wife, held this manor, and one meſſuage and half a yard-land in Button, 4 R. 2. William Blount was ſeized thereof 22 R. 2. and Iſabel his daughter and heireſs held the ſame 4 H. 4. and dying unmarried, the manor came to her next kinſman Robert Blount, who was ſeized of it 9 H. 4. and he and his tenants had a right to heath, wood, and coal in Kingſwood chaſe.

John Blount, ſon of Robert, married one Willona, and died ſeized of Button, Oldland, Weſt-Hanham, Swinford, and Beach 26 H. 6. and Wentlin his widow (perhaps the ſame with Willona) being endowed with Button, died ſeized thereof 32 H. 6. Edmond Blount, eſq; ſon of John, died alſo ſeized of this manor 8 E. 4. as did his ſon Simon, 16 E. 4.

Margaret, the daughter and heireſs of Simon Blount, was married to ſir John Barr, who, in her right, was ſeized of the manors of Button, Oldland, Eaſt-Hannam, Weſt-Hannam, and Upton 22 E. 4. and left Joan, his only daughter and heireſs, married to ſir Thomas Newton, who, in her right, became ſeized of the aforeſaid manors, and of Barr's-Court, which took its name from ſir John Barr.

The family of the Newtons is derived from Howel ap Grono, lord of Newton in Rouſe. Cradock ap Howel ap Grono, was ſon of Howel ap Grono. Sir William Cradock, ſon of Cradock ap Howel, married Jane, daughter of ſir Mathew Wogan, and lies buried at Newton. William Cradock, ſon of ſir William, married Catherine, daughter and heireſs of ſir William de la Meer, of Rickſton. John Cradock, ſon of William, married Joan, daughter of ſir John Elider, by whom he had a ſon Robert, who married Margery, daughter of Nicholas Sherborn. John Cradock, ſon of Robert, married Neſt, daughter of ſir Peter Ruſſel, and had a ſon John, who married Margaret, daughter of Howel Meythe, of Caſtle-Ordin, and Fountain-gate. Sir Richard Cradock, ſon of the laſt John, was Chief Juſtice of England: He married Emma, daughter and coheireſs of ſir Thomas Perret, of Iſlington, and dwelled or was born (ſays Leland) at Tre-newith, [i.e. New Town] in Powiſland, and ſo was called [Newton] after that place.

Sir John Newton, his ſon, married Iſabel, daughter and heireſs of ſir John Chedder. Sir Thomas Newton was brother to ſir John, and ſon of ſir Richard the Chief Juſtice: He married Joan, daughter and heireſs of ſir John Barr, by whom Barr's-Court, and the manor of Bitton, and other manors came into the family of Newton, 22 E. 4. as before related.

Thomas Newton, ſon of ſir Thomas, married Margaret, daughter of ſir Edmond George, of Wraxwell in Somerſetſhire; and had a ſon ſir John Newton, who married Margery, daughter of ſir Anthony Pointz. Sir Henry Newton, ſon of ſir John, married Katherine, daughter of ſir Thomas Paſton, and had a ſon ſir Theodore Newton, who married Penelope, daughter of ſir John Rodney, of Rodney-Stoke in Somerſetſhire. He was lord of the manor of Bitton in the year 1608. His ſon ſir John Newton, baronet, married Grace, daughter of —— Stone, and dying without iſſue, lies buried in the cathedral of Briſtol. He was the laſt of the Newtons of Barr's-Court, and gave this eſtate to ſir John Newton of Lincolnſhire, on whom he entailed the baronetage. Barr's-Court, and a very large eſtate in the parish of Bitton, is now the property of Michael Newton, of Lincolnſhire, eſq.

An eſtate, by the name of the manor of Bitton, was granted to Robert Fitz-Harding, afterwards lord of Berkeley, by king Henry the Second; and various records ſhew that the Berkeley family was afterwards ſeized of ſuch manor. Maurice lord Berkeley died ſeized of the manor of Bitton 15 H. 8. and Thomas lord Berkeley, his brother and heir, had livery granted to him the 16th, and died ſeized thereof 24 H. 8. Thomas his ſon died ſeized of this manor 26 H. 8. and was ſucceeded by his ſon Henry lord Berkeley, an infant, who had livery granted to him 3 Mariæ.

The records ſhew that William Pigot held lands in Button 14 H. 3. Sir John Tracy and others were ſeized of lands in Button and Upton 37 E. 3. The abbey of Keynſham held lands and rents in Button, Weſt-Hanham, Upton, and Oldland, which were purchaſed in the name of John Becket and others, in truſt for the abbey, 10 R. 2.

Highfield is now the chief houſe in the parish, and, together with a good eſtate, is the property of Doctor Drummond.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

There are four tithings in this pariſh, viz.

1. Bitton, of which already.

2. Hanham, a place whoſe name vouches for its antiquity, for ben, in the Britiſh language, ſignifies antient. The late learned doctor Gale interprets it, either as a contraction of Avonham, a ham or manſion at Abone, or elſe conſiders it as a ſmall variation from Henham, an antient ham or ſtation. I have taken notice, at the beginning of this account, of what is moſt obſervable in this tithing, wherefore little more need be ſaid of it. But with reſpect to the manor, it ſtands, in Domeſday-book, among the lands of Ernulf de Heſding, recorded as follows, viz.

'The ſame Hernulf holds Hanun in Sim-
'hovedes hundred, and Humbaldus holds it of 'him. Edric held it. There is half a hide. In 'demean are two plow-tillages, with eight
'borda-

bordars, and four ſervi. It is worth, and was worth 40*s*.' Domeſday-book, p. 77.

John de Button held Hannam 7 E. 2. and William de la Green held Weſt Hannam of the honour of Glouceſter 4 E. 3. Robert Grinder, eſq; was ſeized of the manor of Hannam, with woods in the foreſt of Kingſwood belonging to the ſaid manor, 22 H. 6. and Joan his widow held the ſame 24 H. 6. William Join and his wife levied a fine of lands in Weſt Hannam, Down Hannam, and Oldland to Andrew Windſor 12 H. 7.

Handclif-wood in Weſt Hannam, which belonged to the abbey of Keynſham, was granted to Thomas Bridges, eſq; 6 E. 6.

The manor of Hannam-Abbats, which belonged to the abbey of Keynſham, was granted to Rowland Hayward 2 Mariæ; but the lands belonging to Hanclif-wood, which were formerly in the poſſeſſion of the ſaid abbey, were granted to John Fernham 19 Eliz.

The manor-houſe in Hannam, called the Grange, belonged to the priory of Farley in Wiltſhire, and was granted to Roger Langsford and Chriſtopher Martin 17 Eliz. This is now the eſtate of Charles Bragge, eſq.

Henry Creſwicke, eſq; has a good houſe and a good eſtate here, called Hanham-Abbats, becauſe it antiently belonged to the abbat of Keynſham. It was formerly the ſeat of the Baſſets. His anceſtors held a court here. His arms are thus blazoned in the laſt heralds viſitation of the county, viz. Or, a lion rampant within a bordure ſable beſanty.

Mr. Kedgwin Webley of London, a deſcendant of the Webleys of the Mead, in the pariſh of Biddenham, purchaſed a very handſome, pleaſant ſeat, and a large eſtate in this tithing, formerly belonging to Thomas Trye, eſq; which is now in the poſſeſſion of Mrs. Frances Parry, widow of David Parry, of Noyadd in the county of Cardigan, eſq; and only child of Mr. Webley.

There were formerly two machines in this tithing, for raiſing water for the uſe of the city of Briſtol, taken notice of in ſome books, but they were removed in the year 1720.

There is a chapel of eaſe at Hanham, cloſe to Mr. Creſwicke's houſe, where divine ſervice is performed every Sunday, and it has a right of ſepulture; but Hanham is not reputed a ſeparate pariſh, as mentioned by ſir Robert Atkyns.

3. Oldland is another large tithing, diſtinctly mentioned in Domeſday-book, after this manner:

'The biſhop of Execeſtre holds Aldelande in Pineſhovedes hundred. Aluui held it. He was one of earl Harold's [free] men, and could go wherever he pleaſed. There are two hides, one of which pays tax, the other does not. In demean are two plow-tillages, and one villein, and ſix bordars with one plow-tillage. There are two ſervi, and ten acres of meadow. It was then worth 4*l*. and is now worth 20*s*.' D. B. p. 70.

It is probable, that after the death of the biſhop, his manor was in the crown, and that it was granted, with Button, by king Henry the Second, to Adam d'Amavil. It paſſed, by the marriage of one of the coheireſſes of the d'Amavils, to Richard de la More, who died ſeized of Eldeland, which he held by the ſervice of half a knight's fee 20 E. 1. and was ſucceeded by his ſon Thomas de la More, who had 20*l*. a year in land, and was made a knight by king Edward the Firſt. He lived in the court of king Edward the Second, and wrote a hiſtory of the life and death of that king, which is now extant. Stephen de la More held Oldland in Button 2 E. 3. and Walter de la More poſſeſſed the manors of Oldland and Upton, and a hundred acres of Kingſwood foreſt, 14 E. 3. and John de la More, his ſon, was ſeized of the manor of Oldland in the 23d year of the ſame reign.

Cicely, the widow of Nicholas de Berkeley, was ſeized of Oldland, 16 R. 2. Sir John Denroſe held the manor of Oldland, and forty acres of arable and paſture there, within the manor of Button, of Roger Mermion 20 R. 2. and John Denroſe was ſeized of the manor of Oldland, and of a tenement there called Mermions, 7 H. 5. John Cheſbrook and Joan his wife levied a fine of one moiety of the manor of Oldland in Bitton, and of the hundred, to the uſe of Thomas Wikes, 2 H. 6. Thomas Wikes, ſon of Thomas, died ſeized of the manor of Oldland 13 E. 4. which afterwards deſcended to Richard Wikes, who died 5 Mariæ, and livery thereof was granted to his couſin and heir Robert Wikes the ſame year.

Weſton's-court was ſo called after the name of ſome perſons of eminence, who were the proprietors of it. Nicholas de Weſton was heretofore ſeized of it, and John Weſton was alſo ſeized of Weſton's-court in Oldland in the reign of king Henry the Sixth. It is now the eſtate of Mrs. Blake.

There is alſo a chapel of eaſe at Oldland, where they bury. The benefactions to Hanham, Oldland, and Bitton ſtand together at the end of this account.

4. Upton, or Upton-Cheney. The parſonage of Upton belonged to the prebend of the church of Sarum 10 R. 2.

Beach and Swinford are alſo hamlets in this pariſh.

Barr's-court, Hanham, Oldland, Upton-Cheney, and Beach are within the juriſdiction of the honour of Glouceſter.

The manerial rights of this pariſh are in diſpute between ſeveral claimants.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage in the deanery of Hawkeſbury, worth about 200*l*. a year. The prebendary of Bitton in Saliſbury cathedral, in right of his prebend, is patron; Mr. Charles Elwes is the preſent incumbent.

The impropriation belongs to the ſame prebend, and is in leaſe to Thomas-Edwards Freeman, of Batsford, eſq.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It is lofty and in good repair, and has a very handſome embattled tower at the weſt end, with Gothick ornaments and pinnacles, and ſix bells in it. There is a large chantry-chapel on the north ſide, adjoining to the church, built by ſir John Barr, which is now the burying-place of the Newton family.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

There is a ſmall monument againſt the north wall of the chancel, with this inſcription:

There are ſeveral memorials in the church for the families of Creſwicke, Weare, Parker, Jones, &c. but there is nothing in them deſerving particular notice.

There were two antient ſtatues of ſtone lying at length, but for whom they were deſigned is unknown. Atkyns. They are now taken away.

At the beginning of this century, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 320 houſes and about 1150 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 80 were freeholders; yearly births 56, burials 40. But it appears by the pariſh regiſter, that in a ſeries of ten years, from 1700 to 1709, there were 633 baptiſms and 432 burials; and in a like ſeries from 1760 to 1769, 1116 baptiſms, and 960 burials; and the inhabitants having been exactly numbered in the year 1767, were found to be 469. There are religious ſectaries who have diſtinct burying places, and are ſuppoſed to bury about 9 or 10 every year, and taking theſe into the account, the average number of annual burials will be 109.8; ſo that about 1 in 42 dies every year, which ſhews it to be a healthy ſituation, and that the inhabitants have more than doubled their number within the laſt ſeventy years.

Rob

obert Atkyns's eſtimate of the inhabitants was eatly too low, as will appear by multiplying e average number of annual burials in the firſt ies, i. e. 43.2 by 42, which will give 1814 for e number of inhabitants at that time.

BLAISDON.

THIS is a ſmall pariſh in the hundred of Weſtbury, in the foreſt diviſion, three miles ſtant eaſt from Mitchel-Dean, four north from ewnham, and eight weſtward from Glouceſter.

Before the Norman conqueſt, our kings had anted ſeveral parcels of land, part of the foreſt, the names of Denes, i. e. woody places; which terwards received ſome addition, as Mitchel-ene, Little-Dene, Rure-Dene, and laſtly Blethes-ene, or Bleches-Dene, which was the antient me of this place, having one of the firſt oprietors of it for the pre-nomen, to diſtinguiſh from the reſt. The pariſh conſiſts moſtly of ſture and woodlands. A ſmall rill, called atſwood-brook, runs through it to Weſtbury, d empties itſelf into the Severn.

This was not erected into a pariſh in the time king Edward the Firſt, for in the ninth year of at reign, the ſheriff, in his return of all the vills Glouceſterſhire, mentions Longhope cum Ham-to de Bletcheſden; whence it appears that it was en appendant to Longhope.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Domeſday-book makes no diſtinct mention of this ce; but there are records of the following dates ich ſhew who were the proprietors of it: illiam de Muſgroſe was ſeized of Bleteſden H. 3. as was Ralph de Abbenhall 29 E. 1. ffry le Mareſcal held Blecheſden, and the ad-wſon of the church, 32 E. 3. and in the 46th r of the ſame reign, this manor was held of mphry de Bohun earl of Hereford and Eſſex, d of Joan his wife.

This manor was afterwards called Blaiſdon, was granted to the abbey of Flaxley, and upon diſſolution of that abbey, it was granted to Anthony Kingſton 36 H. 8. William ngſton and Mr. Ayleway were lords of it the year 1608. Mr. Wade was lord of the nor at the beginning of the preſent century, it ſtill continues in the ſame family. The s of Wade are, Azure, a croſs moline between r eſcballops Or.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the Foreſt deanery, rth 50*l.* a year. Mr. Hayle and Mrs. Wade patrons, and preſent alternately.

The church hath a low tower at the weſt end, h battlements.

At the beginning of this century there were 40 houſes and about 180 inhabitants in this pariſh, yearly births 5, burials 4. But the number of inhabitants is now decreaſed to 137.

BLEDINGTON.

THIS pariſh lies in the upper diviſion of the hundred of Slaughter, four miles ſouth-eaſtward from Stow, five weſt from Chipping-Norton in Oxfordſhire, and twenty-nine eaſtward from Glouceſter. It is bounded on the eaſtward by the river Evenlode, which divides it from Oxfordſhire. The ſoil is generally good, conſiſting of meadow, paſture, and arable.

The common-fields have lately been incloſed by virtue of an act of parliament, which directs that the Far-heath and the cow-commons do remain unincloſed, to be enjoyed, in a commonable manner, by the proprietors of lands there, in proportion to their rights and properties therein, except the dean and chapter of Oxford, who are excluded. By this act alſo, a portion of furze or heath-ground, not exceeding ſix acres, in the Home-heath, is veſted in the church-wardens and overſeers of the poor, in truſt for raiſing furze for the benefit of the poor pariſhioners.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In the Domeſday account of lands belonging to the abbey-church of Winchcomb, it is thus expreſt:

'The ſame church [of St. Mary de Wincel-'cumbe] holds Bladintun [in Salemones hundred.] 'There are ſeven hides. In demean are two plow-'tillages, and eight villeins, and four bordars with 'five plow-tillages, and eight ſervi and two ancillæ. 'There is a mill of 5*s.* [rent,] and thirty acres of 'meadow. It was worth 4*l.* and is now worth '3*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 71.

The abbey procured this manor to be diſcharged from the hundred-court 8 H. 3. and purchaſed a charter of free-warren in Bladington, and divers other manors, in the 35th year of that reign, which privilege was allowed to the abbey in a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1.

The abbey of Winchcomb aſſigned the manor of Bladinton to the church of St. Ebrulph at Utica in Normandy, 12 E. 2. and afterwards, upon the ſeizure of foreign monaſteries, it was granted to the church of Eveſham; and upon the diſſolution of that abbey, it was granted to ſir Thomas Leigh 7 E. 6. from whom it deſcended down to the preſent time in like manner with Addleſtrop, and is now the property of the heir of James Leigh, eſq; lately deceaſed.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Stow. It is an impropriation belonging to Chriſt-church in Oxford. Lands in Bledington, with the rectory and advowſon of the vicarage, which belonged to the abbey of Winchcomb, were granted to the chapter of Oxford 38 H. 8. The dean and chapter of Oxford are patrons, and Mr. Henry Brown is the preſent incumbent. The impropriation pays to the curate 20*l.* a year, and the act for incloſing directs the commiſſioners to lay out lands of the value of 4*l.* a year, as an augmentation of the vicarage; but before this time it had been augmented with two donations of 200*l.* each, and queen Anne's bounty, with which an eſtate was purchaſed in Werndydyr in Radnorſhire.

The impropriation is worth about 200*l.* a year, and is in leaſe to Ambroſe Reddall, eſq; of Stonehouſe in this county.

The Upper Oar and the Lower Oar, and ſome other lands adjoining, were tithe-free before the incloſing act, by virtue of which the dean and chapter had one ſeventh of ſuch lands as were ſubject to tithe allowed them in lieu thereof.

There was a charge of 20*s.* a year on Bledington, to find neceſſaries for maſs at Winchcomb-abbey, which was confirmed by the pope, by the archbiſhop, and by the biſhop of Worceſter.

The church is dedicated to St. Leonard. It hath an aile on the ſouth ſide, and a tower at the weſt end.

BODINGTON.

THE hamlets of Bodington and Barrow in this pariſh, lie in the lower diviſion of the hundred of Tewkeſbury; but Heydon and Withybridge are in the lower diviſion of the hundred of Weſtminſter. The pariſh is ſituated in the vale part of the county, about five miles ſouthward from Tewkeſbury, four weſtward from Cheltenham, and ſix north-eaſtward from Glouceſter. The turnpike-road between the two laſt mentioned places is carried through it. The river from Cheltenham alſo runs through it, and empties itſelf into the Severn near the Ha paſſage.

It is probable, that in very early ages, here w a houſe of ſuch conſequence as to give denomi nation to the place, for Bodington (from the Briti word bod a manſion) ſignifies a capital houſe o manſion in the town upon the water, agreeable a former explanation of the ſeveral parts of th name. Leland ſays, Ther is at Bodington a fa manor place and a park. The park is now a farm and the manor houſe is occupied by the farmer.

There is a little ſugar-loaf hill in the hamlet o Barrow, which, from its reſemblance to a tumul gave name to the hamlet. From the top of thi hill, in a clear day, is a diſtinct view of thirty-f pariſh churches, a circumſtance ariſing from th ſituation of the hill in the middle of a large exte of flat country. However improbable this ma ſeem, it is nevertheleſs ſtrictly true, as I am aſſure by a gentleman of veracity living in the pariſh.

At Barrow, and at Moredon in the hamlet o Heydon, are ſeveral ſprings of ſaline purgati water, brackiſh and diſagreeable to the taſte, whi have been often uſed with a medicinal view by th country people.

The pariſh conſiſts of rich meadow and paſtu land, with about one hundred and twenty acres o coppice wood; and there is a common lot-me dow, of about a hundred acres, called Bodingto moor. Bodington is within the juriſdiction of th court of the honour of Glouceſter.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Three hides in Botintone belong to th 'manor. [Tedekeſberie.] Girard holds them, an 'he hath there two plow-tillages, and four vi 'leins with three plow-tillages; and there a 'three ſervi, and a mill of 8*s.* [rent] and eigh 'acres of meadow. [This eſtate] is worth an 'was worth 40*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 68.

But it appears, by the ſame record, that the were two hides at Botingtune, part of the land belonging to the church of St. Peter at We minſter, and in the hundred of Derheſt, whic Wluui, one of the king's thanes, held in the ti of king Edward the Confeſſor, but which Gira held at the time of the ſurvey, after the Conque Theſe particulars ſtand under the head Terra Petri Weſtmon. p. 72.

This manor was granted to Robert Muſgr 38 H. 3. and was held of the earl of Glouceſt and Hertford, as of the honour of Glouceſter, one knight's fee, 47 H. 3. and 8 E. 2. John Bures held it 24 E. 3. and the next year John Holloway was ſeized of it.

Robert lord Ferrers of Chartley died ſeized Bodington 1 H. 5. and left Edmond lord Ferr his ſon and heir, by Margaret his wife, daugh of Edward lord Spencer, who died ſeized the 14 H. 6.

The Beauchamps were ſoon after proprietors this manor, for Richard lord Beauchamp di ſeiz ized of Bodington 18 H. 7. and left three daughrs his heireſſes; Elizabeth, married to Robert Willoughby, lord Brook, whereby a third part of e manor deſcended to Edward lord Willoughby, eir ſon and heir, who left two daughters, Anne nd Blanch, of whom the latter was married to rancis Dawtry, who had livery of a moiety of e third part of the manor 25 H. 8. Anne, the cond daughter and heireſs of Richard lord Beauamp, was married to Richard Liggon: Marret, the third and youngeſt daughter, was mard to —— Reed, who left their third part to ichard Reed their ſon and heir, 4 H. 8. whoſe n, John Reed, had livery of the ſcite of the anor 9 Eliz.

Livery of the manor of Bodington, Barrow and eydon, was granted to Oliver St. John 15 Eliz. d it was afterwards purchaſed by lord Craven, ho ſold it to Mr. Lock. Matthew Lock, eſq; as the proprietor of it at the beginning of this ntury, and Mrs. Lock is the preſent lady of the onor, and holds a court-baron here.

As to other eſtates in Bodington, the records ew, that Hugh Muſtel held one meſſuage and ghty acres of land in Botinton 19 E. 2. And ugh Muſtel and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine lands in Bodington to the uſe of themſelves in lle, the remainder to Philip Boteler, the ſon of Thomas le Boteler, 7 E. 3. and they levied other fine of lands in Bodington to the uſe of emſelves in taille, the remainder to Thomas, the n of ſir Thomas le Boteler, in taille, the reinder to Alan le Boteler, brother of Thomas, E. 3.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. Bodington and Barrow, to which there is one hingman. Barrow is weſtward from the church.

2. Heydon and Withy-bridge, eaſtward from the urch. Theſe lie in the lower part of Weſtnſter hundred, and have one tithingman. The nor of Heydon antiently belonged to the abbey Weſtminſter. John Browning was ſeized of manor of Heydon, under the abbat, 3 H. 5. is manor was part of the poſſeſſions of the ſame rch in its ſeveral viciſſitudes. Thus it was nted afreſh to the church of Weſtminſter H. 8. was reſtored to the abbey of Weſtminſter Mariæ; and again returned to the church of eſtminſter 2 Eliz. John Partrige, eſq; held it der that church in the year 1608. It is now the te of the right honourable William Dowdeſl, eſq; as leſſee under the dean and chapter.

Butler's-Court, in Withy-bridge, is a reputed nor, belonging to lord Craven, who has a very ſiderable eſtate in Heydon and Withy-bridge. Hugh Muſtel held forty-eight acres of land in ydon 19 E. 2. William de Rodbearg held two ſſuages and two plow-tillages in Lye and ydon 3 R. 2. William Nottingham, and abeth his wife, levied a fine of lands in Heydon to the uſe of themſelves in taille 20 H. 6. and ſir William Nottingham, their ſon, was ſeized thereof 1. R. 3.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is within the peculiar of Deerhurſt, and is annexed to Staverton. It is an impropriation, without any endowment to the curate. Some lands, and the tithes of Barrow, belonged to the monaſtery of Thornton in Lincolnſhire, founded in the year 1139, for black canons, by William earl of Almebarle; which lands and tithes were granted to John Fernham 19 Eliz.

The rectory of Bodington belonged to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, and was granted to Francis Philips and Richard Moor, in truſt for Richard Bourk, earl of Clanricard, 6 Jac.

The impropriation belonged to Mr. Brown, from whom it paſſed to Mr. Wells, who ſold it to Mr. Thomas Arkell the preſent proprietor, and patron of the living. The reverend Mr. John Kipling is the incumbent.

The advowſon of the vicarage, and chapel of Bodington and Staverton were granted to Thomas Gatwick and Anſelm Lamb 5 Mariæ.

The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is ſmall, with a low tower at the weſt end. The church-yard was conſecrated in the year 1469, with the conſent of the abbat of Tewkeſbury.

There were, at the beginning of this century, 40 houſes and about 180 inhabitants, whereof 4 were freeholders, in this pariſh; yearly births 6, burials 5. Atkyns. In ten years, from 1700 to 1709 both incluſive, there are entered 65 baptiſms and 49 burials; and in eight years, from 1760 to 1767 incluſive, there are 46 baptiſms and 25 burials; and the number of inhabitants is 95; ſo that population is on the decline.

BOURTON on the HILL.

ONE part of this pariſh lies in the upper diviſion of the hundred of Tewkeſbury, the other in the upper diviſion of the hundred of Weſtminſter, and conſequently the pariſh is under the authority of two conſtables. It is five miles diſtant northward from Stow, five ſouth from Campden, and thirty north-eaſt from Glouceſter. It is about five miles long and one broad.

The houſes are ſituated on the ſide of a hill facing the eaſt, whence there is a fine proſpect over Morton-in-marſh, to the borders of Oxfordſhire. This ſituation gave riſe to the name of the village, for Bourton is a contraction of Bourgtown, from the Anglo-Saxon Beorg, which ſignifies a hill, a fort, or caſtle. The lands are moſtly arable and ſheep lays. There are two ſprings in this pariſh, one running eaſtward into the Thames, the other, by a contrary courſe, into the Severn. The turnpike-road from Worceſter to London paſſes through the village.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

There are two diſtinct manors. Domeſday-book ſhews that eight hides in Bortune belonged to the church of St. Peter at Weſtminſter, as part of the manor of Derheſt. Wluui (a radcheniſter, or free man) held two hides at Bortune in the time of king Edward, which Girard held at the time of the ſurvey, in the Conqueror's reign. See p. 72.

Robert Fitz-Hamon ſacrilegiouſly took this manor from the abbey of Weſtminſter, in the reign of William the Second, and it was injuſtly detained 'till the reign of Henry the Second, when Lawrence the twenty-fifth abbat of Weſtminſter recovered it by a ſuit at law.

The abbat of Weſtminſter was ſeized of the manor of Bourton 15 E. 1. After the diſſolution of the abbey, and the erection of the ſee of Weſtminſter, the manor was granted to the chapter of that church 34 H. 8. The monaſtery being reſtored to its former eſtate by queen Mary, this manor was regranted to the abbey and convent of Weſtminſter in the fourth year of her reign. Another revolution taking place ſoon after, it was confirmed to the chapter of Weſtminſter 2 Eliz. The manor is held by leaſe under the church of Weſtminſter, by William Bateſon, eſq; who is lord thereof, and has a good ſeat and large eſtate in this pariſh. He married Suſannah, youngeſt daughter of Edmund Pytts, late of Kyre in the county of Worceſter, eſq; deceaſed, ſometime one of the repreſentatives of that county in parliament. His arms are, Argent, three bat's wings erected ſable, 2 and 1. On a chief gules, a lion paſſant gardant of the firſt.

His anceſtor was eminent for his loyalty in the time of the great civil wars, and was ſequeſter'd, and compounded for 700*l.* and his grandfather was high ſheriff of Glouceſterſhire in the year 1710.

The other manor lies in Tewkeſbury hundred. Walter de Burgton was ſeized of Burgton 15 E. 3. Joan the widow of John de Winchefter was ſeized of this manor 36 E. 3. and John Rouſe and others were alſo ſeized of it in the 49th year of the ſame reign. Gilbert de Stonour, ſon of Robert de Stonour, held Bourton 3 H. 5. Thomas lord Wentworth married Margaret, daughter and heir of Anne Forteſcue, and with her had the manor of Bourton, and lands in Condicot, of which he died ſeized 5 E. 6. and livery of the eſtate was granted the ſame year to Thomas lord Wentworth his ſon.

The manor paſſed from the Wentworths to ſir Nicholas Overbury. He married Mary, daughter of Giles Palmer, of Ilmington in Warwickſhire, by whom he had ſir Thomas Overbury, who was born in this pariſh. He was one of the judges of the marches of Wales, and was poiſoned in the tower in the year 1613, by the malicious contrivance of the counteſs of Somerſet, of which murder ſhe and her huſband were afterwards convicted. Sir Thomas left this eſtate to his nephew ſir Thomas Overbury, who publiſhed the trial of Joan Perry and her two ſons, John and Richard, for the ſuppoſed murder of Mr. William Harriſon, in the year 1676, who afterwards appeared. Of this ſtrange affair there is a further account under Campden. This laſt ſir Thomas died at Adlington in the pariſh of Queinton, and lies buried in that church.

Alexander Popham, eſq; purchaſed this manor of the truſtees of ſir Thomas Overbury in the year 1680, after whoſe death it came to Edward Popham, his ſon and heir; ſoon after which it paſſed out of that name, and is now the property of William Bateſon, eſq.

Of the other eſtates the records ſhew, that Samuel de Bourton was ſeized of lands in Bourton 2 H. 3. and John Rouſe and others were ſeized of lands in Bourton 49 E. 3. Edward de Stour or Stonour, held lands in Burgton 5 R. 2.

—— Head, of the county of Berks, eſq; has a very handſome modern built houſe, with pleaſant gardens, in this pariſh, in right of his wife daughter and ſole heireſs of Dr. Harward.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth about 300*l.* a year. Thomas Kemble, eſq; is patron, Mr. Matthew Bloxam the preſent incumbent. Morton-in-marſh is annexed to it.

Tithes of the pariſh of Bourton on the Hill belonged to the abbey of Tewkeſbury 'till the diſſolution of that abbey, and were afterwards granted to William Duncan and Thomas Eſcourt 2 E. A conſiderable part of the tithes of Morton-in-marſh is appropriated, and belongs to Mr. Bateſon.

This pariſh and Morton-in-marſh were formerly within the peculiar of Blockley in Worceſterſhire, and mortuaries are ſtill paid to the vicar of that church, with whom the rector of Bourton compounded for the liberty of burying in the year 1542.

The church is large, with two ailes, and a tower at the weſt end. It is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

It is ſaid there were 60 houſes in this pariſh at beginning of the preſent century, and 250 in- bitants, whereof 11 were freeholders; yearly ths 8, burials 6. Atkyns. But the true ſtate of ulation is as follows. In ten years, from 1700 1709 both incluſive, are regiſtered 67 baptiſms 50 burials; and, from 1760 to 1769 incluſive, baptiſms and 58 burials, and there are 269 abitants. Hence it may be obſerved, that ut one in forty-ſix dies every year, which ſhews healthineſs of the air; yet the inhabitants e increaſed very ſlowly, which muſt be attributed requent emigrations.

OURTON on the WATER.

THIS pariſh lies in the lower diviſion of the hundred of Slaughter, four miles diſtant th-weſtward from Stow, eight north-weſt from ford in Oxfordſhire, ſix north-eaſtward from rthleach, and twenty-four eaſtward, inclining he north, from Glouceſter.

This village is ſituate about a quarter of a mile ſouth-eaſt from the Roman foſs, in a fertile vale, ſurrounded by hills at a pleaſing diſtance, and is watered by a river which riſes a little above it, and, as it enters the village, forms itſelf into an elegant ſerpentine canal about thirty feet wide, flowing, with an agreeable rapidity, about the depth of fourteen or fifteen inches. Many of the houſes are ranged into a ſtreet, tho' ſomewhat irregularly, on each ſide of this natural canal, the banks of which being well gravelled, and very rarely over-flow'd, afford a delightful walk. The river is remarkable for fine trout, eel, and crayfiſh. In the centre of the place is a handſome freeſtone bridge of three arches, built in 1756, beſide which there are ſeveral wood bridges for foot paſſengers, at ſuch diſtances as to render the communication perfectly commodious. There is a good raiſed road carried through the place; but it is to be regretted, that ſome of the beſt houſes are not arranged in the ſtreet, which would have made a great addition to the agreeable appearance of this handſome village.

Nature has been laviſh with her favours to this place, and with a little more of the aſſiſtance of her younger ſiſter, Art, it might vie in beauty and elegance with any Dutch village. Many topographers have made no mention of it, and none have done it juſtice; for tho' it has not a market, here are ſhops for the ſupply of goods, and the more neceſſary kinds of trades are carried on as in a market town; and there is reaſon to believe, that it has been much larger and more populous than at preſent, for there are many foundations ſtill viſible, which are undoubtedly the ruins of houſes, as may be concluded from the aſhes of wood and coal that are found about them.

Adjoining to the village, and within the pariſh, is a large quadrangular Roman camp, incloſing about ſixty acres, now divided into twenty fields. The veſtiges of it are moſt perfect to the north-eaſt, where, at a gap in the rampart, a court-leet is held twice a year, for the liberty of Salemaneſ-bury, the antient name of a hundred now included in that of Slaughter. After calling over the jury, they adjourn to ſome other place to finiſh the buſineſs.

There can be no doubt of the camp being Roman, as many of the coins of that nation have been, and ſtill are, frequently found about it; and a gold ſignet was lately found, weighing near an ounce. The ring-part is ſo very ſmall, that it could not be intended for the finger. The impreſſion on the ſignet is a Roman ſoldier ſitting upon a tripod, with a ſpear in his left hand, holding a victory in the right, and the Roman eagle ſtanding at his feet. Round part of the camp, a paved aqueduct was diſcovered not long ſince, by people who were ſinking a well; and human bones have been often taken up in digging the foundations for walls.

Petrifications of various kinds of ſhell-fiſh are very commonly found in the quarries on Bourton-hill.

hill. The moſt remarkable among them is of a ſpiral form, with the contortions ſeparate and diſtinct, in the manner of a cork-ſcrew. It weighs above a pound; but I know not what name to call it by.

It is uncertain what was the name of this place in the time of the Romans, but queſtionleſs it received its preſent appellation from our Saxon anceſtors, on account of the camp or fortification, which they called Beorg, as I have obſerved elſewhere, and ſo came the name Burgtone, as it is written in ſome antient grants.

Three conſiderable brooks meet in this pariſh, one from Guiting, another from Slaughter, and a third from Swell. Theſe are joined below by a brook from Sherbourn, and run in one courſe to Windruſh, from whence the river is called the Windruſh, and running to Burford and Witney, empties itſelf into the Thames.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Amongſt the particulars of the eſtates belonging to the abbey church of St. Mary of Eveſham, recorded in Domeſday-book, it is expreſs'd after this manner:

'The ſame church holds Bortune, in Salemones 'hundred. There are ten hides. In demean are 'ſix plow-tillages, and ſixteen villeins, and eight 'bordars, and two free men with ſeven plow-'tillages. There is a prieſt with half a plow-'tillage. It was worth 8*l.* but is now worth '12*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 72.

The abbey of Eveſham purchaſed a charter of free-warren in this place 35 H. 3.

At the diſſolution of abbies this manor came to the crown, and was granted to Edmond lord Chandos 4 Eliz. who died ſeized thereof 15 Eliz. and livery was granted the ſame year to Giles lord Chandos, his ſon. He died in the 44th year of that reign, and was ſucceeded by Grey lord Chandos, his ſon, who was ſeized of this manor in the year 1608, and ſold it to ſir Thomas Edmonds, treaſurer of the houſhold, and privy counſellor to king Charles the Firſt. He left Iſabella, his daughter and coheireſs, married to Henry lord de la Ware, who, in her right, was ſeized of this manor. John lord de la Ware, grandſon to Henry, ſold it to Charles Trinder, eſq; from whom it paſſed to Mr. Boddingham, and from him to Mr. Church, then to Mr. Partridge, and laſtly to Samuel Ingram, eſq; who is the preſent lord of the manor. For his arms ſee Coln St. Aldwin's.

Sir Robert Atkyns mentions, that Walter de Burgton, John Rouſe, Edward de Stoure, (or Stonor) and others, were at different times ſeized of Burgton; but this is rather to be underſtood of one of the manors in the preceding pariſh, and not of this, which the abbey of Eveſham continued to poſſeſs 'till that houſe was diſſolved.

Six acres of meadow in Bourton on the Water, lately belonging to the abbey of Eveſham, were granted to ſir Philip Hobbey 37 H. 8.

There is a very handſome modern houſe, bui by William Moore, eſq; who married Miſs Colle daughter of Mr. Collet, late of this place, b whom he had a good eſtate in the pariſh; but he died about the year 1771, without iſſue, and hi widow, Mrs. Moore, is the preſent proprietor.

HAMLET. Nethercot is a hamlet in this pariſh. It was held of the honour of Wallingford by Edmond earl of Cornwall 28 E. 1. It was afterwards the eſtate of the abbey of Eveſham, and was granted to William Lloyd and Thomas Parker, in truſt for others, 10 Jac. and is now the property of Mr. Palmer of Bourton.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow worth about 500*l.* a year. The advowſon of the rectory of this church belonged to the priory of Kirkham in Yorkſhire, founded by Walter Eſpec for monks of the order of St. Auſtin, in the year 1122. At the diſſolution of religious houſes it was veſted in the crown, by which it was granted to ſir Chriſtopher Hatton 21 Eliz.

The reverend Mr. Richard Vernon was the la patron and incumbent. He was ſurvived by hi ſiſter Mrs. Dorothy Vernon, who dying unmarried in the year 1764, bequeathed the advowſon of thi church to the warden and fellows of All Souls college in Oxford, for ever; who are to preſent perſons qualified according to the directions of her will. The reverend Mr. William Vernon is the preſent incumbent.

The pariſhes of Clapton and Lower Slaughter are annexed to this church; but they are now reputed ſeparate pariſhes, and have their diſtinct officers and rates to taxes.

The rector hath only the third part of the tithe of corn and hay in Bourton and Clapton, but he hath the whole of all other tithes in thoſe places and the whole tithes of corn and hay in Slaughter.

Thirty acres of meadow, and eighty-five of arable belong to the glebe. The parſonage-houſe is large and well built.

Anthony Palmer, author of a book intitled the Goſpel New Creature, was rector of this church in the time of the great civil wars. He was of ſtrong Calviniſtical principles, and firmly adhered to the intereſt of the parliament during the troubles.

The church hath an aile on the ſouth ſide. It is a very antient building, as appears more par ticularly from the form of the tower, which ſtand between the chancel and the body of the church and has a roof like a dwelling houſe, with para walls inſtead of battlements. The aile was laſt rebuilt in the modern taſte, when a ſtone coffi was diſcovered, without any inſcription. In the tower are ſix bells, with a clock and chimes. The church, tower, and chancel are 120 feet long and 21 feet broad. The aile is 25 feet broad. It called Clapton-aile, becauſe the inhabitants of that place once ſat there.

t the beginning of this century, it is ſaid, there 70 houſes and about 350 inhabitants in this ſh, whereof 35 were freeholders ; annual hs 11, burials 8. Atkyns. But it is very cult to give the true ſtate of their population ; ome of the people of Clapton and Slaughter here, and are entered in the pariſh regiſter. les, here is a large congregation of diſſenters, of whom bury at the church, and are tered, others at the meeting-houſe, and not regiſtered. It appears, however, that 1700 to 1709 incluſive, there were regiſtered baptiſms and 93 burials ; and that from to 1769, there were 194 baptiſms and 98 ls ; and there are about 500 inhabitants. great diſproportion between the baptiſms and burials ſhews a defect in the regiſter. The inhabitants have increaſed during this century.

BOXWELL and LEIGHTERTON.

THIS is a ſmall pariſh, about four miles long from eaſt to weſt, and two broad from north to ſouth. It lies in the hundred of Grumbaldſaſh, ſix miles weſt from Tetbury, four eaſt of Wotton-under-edge, and twenty ſouth from Glouceſter. The ſoil is adapted to tillage and the feeding of ſheep, which are ſecure from the bane, or rot, in every part of the pariſh, and may amount in number, communibus annis, to between two and three thouſand.

The village of Boxwell, where the church and houſes are, lies at the top of a little glyn or dale, about half a mile from the turnpike-road from Glouceſter to Bath ; and ſeen from ſeveral points of view, appears extremely rural and pictureſque. It is watered by a rill which riſes in the pariſh, and runs through it ; and is covered, at an agreeable diſtance, by a hanging wood on one ſide of it ; a ſituation particularly eligible in the ſummer ſeaſon, and the ſurrounding hills ſecure it from the bleak and cold winds of the winter.

Leland informs us that there was antiently a nunnery in this place, which ſeems to be extremely well adapted by nature to the peaceful habitation of the religious in early ages ; but that houſe was deſtroyed by the Danes.

Boxewelle was the manner of writing the name, as it ſtands upon record ſeven hundred years ago. It is ſuppoſed to have been ſo called from a plentiful ſpring riſing out of a rocky hill, in a ſmall free warren, covered with about ſixteen acres of box-wood, the moſt conſiderable of that kind in England, except Boxhill in Surry. Upon this ſuppoſition, the box-trees muſt have grown here a long time, and this remarkable wood ſtill continues in a flouriſhing ſtate.

Several medicinal and poiſonous plants grow in this warren, as the deadly nightſhade, hemlock, henbane, wild thyme, dwarf elder, marjoram, and ſome others. A conſiderable number of petrifications, commonly, but erroniouſly, ſuppoſed to be of the cockle fiſh, to which indeed it has ſome reſemblance, are found in the hill ; and with them the ſerpentine or ſnake ſtones. The latter are ſo called from their likeneſs to a ſerpent cloſely coiled up, with the tail part in the middle ; not that they really had their origin from that ſpecies of reptile, which is not only unlikely, but impoſſible ; for in that caſe, the head would ſometimes be found perfect in the ſtone, which never happens ; and yet that part is full as likely to be turned into ſtone as the body. But the truth is, there are no petrifications of the fleſhy parts of land animals, nor of fiſh, that I ever heard of, except the teſtaceous kinds. And theſe ſtones are generally, if not always accompanied in the beds where they lie, with petrifications of ſhell fiſh; wherefore it is moſt likely that theſe are marine ſubſtances, and a ſpecies of ſhell fiſh alſo.

There is a large tumulus at Leighterton called Weſt-barrow, which was opened by Mr. Matthew Huntley, great grandfather of the preſent Mr. Huntley of Boxwell, in which he found three vaults arched over like ovens, and at the entrance of each, an earthen urn, wherein were many aſhes and men's bones imperfectly burnt and broken; but the ſculls and thigh-bones were whole.

The rill I have mentioned is conſidered as one of the heads of the Berkeley Avon. It produces ſmall trout and crayfiſh at Boxwell. About half a mile from its ſource it joins another little brook from Laſborough, and uniting their waters with a ſtream from Kilcot, take their courſe to Stone and Berkeley, and empty themſelves into the Severn.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'The church of St. Peter of Gloweceſtre holds 'Boxewelle in Grimboldeſtowes hundred. There 'are five hides. In demean are two plow-tillages, 'and twelve villeins, and one radcheniſter, having 'twelve plow-tillages. There are eight ſervi, and 'a mill of 5*s*. [rent.] It was worth 70*s*. but is 'now worth 100*s*.' Domeſday-book, p. 71.

The abbey of Glouceſter held the manor of Boxwell 17 E. 3. The manor and advowſon of the pariſh and church, with the eſtates at Boxwell, have been many generations in the family of the Huntleys, before the diſſolution of the abbey, partly in fee, and partly by leaſe under that church. John Huntley, of Standiſh, eſq; granted to his ſon Henry Huntley, upon his marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of William Throckmorton, eſq; all his lands, meſſuages, and rights in the manor of Boxwell, 34 H. 8. He then recites a grant of lands and rights in the ſaid manor, and other places, from the abbat and convent of St. Peter's at Glouceſter, dated 24 H. 8. to the ſaid John Huntley for 90 years, ſubject to a yearly payment of 40*l*. 18*s*. 3*d*. which leaſe he alſo ſettles upon his ſon Henry. So that the manor ſeems to have been a joint property between them and the abbey, 'till the diſſolution.

A moiety of lands in Boxwell, Laterton, and Waſt in Hawkeſbury, which antiently belonged to the abbey of Glouceſter, was granted by the crown to Arthur Swayne and William Bennett 41 Eliz. who ſold it to ſir Walter Raleigh in 1601; but reverting to the crown upon his attainder, it was granted to Peter Vanlore and William Blake 3 Jac. who ſold it to George Huntley in 1612, as appears by evidences in the poſſeſſion of the reverend Mr. Richard Huntley, who is the preſent lord of this manor, and reſides at Boxwell, where he has a good houſe and pleaſant gardens. His arms are, Argent, on a chevron between three ſtags heads erazed ſable, as many bugle horns ſtringed of the firſt.

John Huntley of Standiſh, who lived in the reign of king Henry the Eighth, was ſon of John Huntley, of Rid in Glouceſterſhire, or of Hadnock in Monmouthſhire, and married Alice, daughter of Edward Langley, by whom he had Henry Huntley of Boxwell. Henry, who was brother to George Huntley of Froceſter, married Elizabeth, daughter of William Throckmorton; and ſurviving her, had to his ſecond wife, Anne, daughter of John Rufford. George Huntley was his ſon and heir, who married Conſtance, daughter and coheireſs of Edward Ferris, by whom he had John Huntley, who married Frances, daughter of ſir John Conway; but he had a ſecond wife whoſe name was Vaughan. John Huntley was ſon and heir of the laſt John, whoſe ſon Matthew Huntley ſucceeded him in the manor of Boxwell, who was alſo ſucceeded by Richard Huntley, father of the reverend Mr. Richard Huntley, the preſent lord of the manor, as already mentioned.

Mrs. Woodward has a very good houſe here. She is ſiſter to Mr. Huntley. Beſide this and the manor-houſe, there are only ſix others in Boxwell, and no freeholder but the lord of the manor.

HAMLET. Leighterton is ſomething more than a meaſured mile ſouth-eaſt from Boxwell. There are 25 houſes and 120 inhabitants. Leighterinton was held of Humphry de Bohun earl of Hereford and Eſſex, and of Joan his wife, 46 E. 3. and Robert Stanſhaw, eſq; was ſeized of the manor of Leighterton 12 E. 4. The reverend Mr. Richard Huntley is the preſent proprietor of it. This hamlet is rated in payments with Boxwell. It lies high, and in a dry ſummer the inhabitants are much diſtreſſed for water.

Here is a ſmall chapel, with an embattled tower at the weſt end, the patronage of which is veſted in Mr. Huntley.

Mr. Stephens, who married Mr. Huntley's eldeſt ſiſter, has a good houſe in this hamlet, where he reſides.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkeſbury, worth about 140*l*. a year. The reverend Mr. Richard Huntley is patron and incumbent. The advowſon of the rectory of Boxwell belonged to the priory of Walſingham in Norfolk, founded by Jeffrey de Faverches, for black canons, in the reign of king William the conqueror. This advowſon was granted, after the diſſolution, to William Grew and Anthony Forſter 6 Eliz. The abbey of Glouceſter preſented to this church in the year 1541.

About twenty acres in each common field belong to the glebe.

The church is ſmall, with a low ſpire in the middle, and a narrow aile on the north ſide. Several of the family of the Huntleys lie buried under flat ſtones in the chancel; but there is no remarkable inſcription.

There were 26 houſes and about 104 inhabitants this pariſh, whereof 5 were freeholders, at the ginning of this century; yearly births 2, burials Atkyns. In a ſeries of eight years, from 1761 1767 incluſive, there were regiſtered at Boxwell baptiſms and 6 burials; at Leighterton 31 ptiſms and 19 burials; in all 42 baptiſms and burials; and there are 175 inhabitants. Here ſee a conſiderable increaſe in the number of habitants, of whom only 1 dies in about 54 every ar, which ſhews the place to be very healthy. his is further confirmed by the following obſertion: Mr. Wykes Huntley died in the year 26, who was the third incumbent that had t ſung maſs there.

St. BRIAVEL's.

THIS pariſh lies in the foreſt diviſion of the county, in the hundred of St. Briavel's, to ich it gives name, about ſeven miles north from epſtow in Monmouthſhire, four ſouth from lford, and twenty-three weſt from Glouceſter. is of a middle ſize, about fourteen miles in mpaſs, and bounded for three miles on the weſt the river Wye, which divides it from Monuthſhire. To the account already given of this r, it ſhould be added, that there is great plenty elvers taken in it, by means of hair ſieves, every ing, which ſome writers have ſuppoſed to be uliar to the rivers of Somerſetſhire.

t was antiently called Brulais, and reputed to part of the pariſh of Newland; but I cannot ſo ch as gueſs at the meaning of the name, or at gave occaſion to it.

The ſoil is much inclined to clay, and the pariſh on very high ground, yet 'tis plentifully ſup-'d with wells and ſprings of water. Three conrable brooks, Markſbrook, Woodwards-brook, Ayleſmore-brook riſe here, of which the firſt s into the Wye, the others empty themſelves the Severn.

From the church to Bickſwear is a ſteep cent, almoſt covered with large blocks of eſtone, of a grey colour, cloſe grain, and ſhining like the rocks of St. Vincent in Clifton. out a third part of their bulk riſes above the ſurface of the ground, which may be ſaid to be ſtudded with them, as they ſtand ſingly, and make a very odd appearance.

There is a ſtone ſet on end in a piece of ground called Cloſetuft, ten feet high above the ſurface, ſix feet broad, and five thick. It is probably a monumental ſtone of the antient Britons, but this is mere conjecture, as there is no inſcription or other thing whatever to direct the judgment concerning it. But the moſt conſiderable remains of antiquity in theſe parts, are thoſe of the caſtle of St. Briavel's, taken notice of by Mr. Camden, and other writers of Engliſh antiquities. The caſtle is environed on every ſide by the lands of this pariſh, but as it is extraparochial, and particularly connected with the foreſt of Dean, it was thought proper to conſider it under that head, p. 31. Where alſo I have endeavoured to give a ſuccinct account of the mine-law court, the court for trying all perſonal actions ariſing within the hundred, &c. which have their peculiar rights and juriſdictions.

The pariſh joins to the foreſt of Dean, in which the inhabitants have a right of common of paſture and common of eſtovers; and they have alſo common of wood and of paſture in Hudnolls, confirmed to them by an act of parliament 20 C. 2.

They have a cuſtom of diſtributing yearly upon Whitſunday, after divine ſervice, pieces of bread and cheeſe to the congregation at church, to defray the expence of which, every houſholder in the pariſh pays a penny to the churchwardens; and this is ſaid to be for the liberty of cutting and taking the wood in Hudnolls. The tradition is, that the privilege was obtained of ſome earl of Hereford, then lord of the foreſt of Dean, at the inſtance of his lady, upon the ſame hard terms that lady Godiva obtained the privileges for the citizens of Coventry.

Brockwear, upon the river Wye, lies partly in this pariſh, and partly in that of Hewelsfield. The tide flows up to this place, and hither the corn, and other products of the country lying upon that river (which is navigable to Glaſebury in Radnorſhire) are brought down in barges, and put on board larger veſſels of about ſixty tons burthen, and carried down the Severn, to Briſtol and other markets.

The great road from Roſs in Herefordſhire, through Colford to Auſt paſſage over the Severn, and ſo to Briſtol, leads through this village.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

There is no mention of this place in Domeſday-book; but the following account is extracted from other records.

Jeffry Wither held the town of St. Briavel's, with twelve acres of land, and a bailiwick in the foreſt of Dean, 20 Joh. which had been held by his anceſtors.

William de Leſebroke held St. Briavel's in the foreſt of Dean 45 H. 3. and Walter Wither was ſeized of it in the 54th year of the ſame reign.

The

The manors of Newland and St. Briavel's were found to be in the crown by an inquiſition 4 E. 1. and paid 33*l.* a year.

There was a grant of fairs and markets in this town 2 E. 2. and Hugh le Diſpencer the younger had a grant of the manor of St. Briavel's, with fairs and markets, 12 E. 2. William de Staure held St. Briavel's 17 E. 2. Robert de Aure held St Briavel's 19 E. 2.

King Henry the Fourth ſettled St. Briavel's caſtle, and the town, on John duke of Bedford, his third ſon, in the firſt year of his reign, who died ſeized thereof 14 H. 6. Henry de Aure was ſeized of St. Briavel's 3 H. 4.

Richard Nevil earl of Warwick, and Anne his wife, were ſeized of the caſtle and manor of St. Briavel's, and levied a fine of them to the uſe of themſelves in taille, the remainder to the right heirs of Richard Beauchamp, late earl of Warwick, 6 E. 4. And the ſame counteſs afterwards levied a fine of the manor and caſtle to the uſe of king Henry the Seventh, in the third year of his reign.

This manor was in the crown in the year 1608, but the earl of Berkeley is the preſent lord thereof. It was formerly holden by Henry the firſt duke of Beaufort, whoſe dutcheſs dowager parted with it to the Berkeley family.

The Hatheways were antiently poſſeſſors of lands in St. Briavel's, and have given their name to a manor within this pariſh. Ralph Hatheway died ſeized of lands in St. Briavel's, and in Horeſton in the foreſt of Dean, 10 E. 2. and William Hatheway his ſon had livery of thoſe lands granted to him the ſame year. Thomas Hatheway, ſon of William, died ſeized of one meſſuage and forty acres of land in St. Briavel's 5 R. 2.

John Tiptot earl of Worceſter was ſeized of Hatheway's tenement in St. Briavel's 9, 10, and 38 H. 6. The manor of Hatheway's afterwards came to the Baynhams. John Berne levied a fine of lands in St. Briavel's, and of a fiſhery in the Severn, to ſir Alexander Baynham and others 10 H. 7. Thomas Baynham, ſon of Chriſtopher, had livery of the manor of Hatheway's 20 Eliz. This antient manor, together with a good eſtate in this pariſh, is now the property of Charles Wyndham, of Clowerwall, eſq.

The abbey of Grace de Dieu[a] in Monmouthſhire had two plow-tillages and common of paſture in St. Briavel's, Hermitor, and Penyard-wood, 11 H. 3. The tenants of this manor were admitted to their eſtates by the conſtable of the caſtle 'till that time, when it was ordered, that they ſhould not be admitted for the future, 'till they had compounded for their fines with the king. William Warren died ſeized of this eſtate 14 Eliz. It is a manor and grange, called Stow Grange, of which Mr. Kedgwin Hoſkins, of Clowerwall, is the preſent proprietor.

William de Staure held one meſſuage and twelve acres of land, with the caſtle of St. Briavel's, 2 E. 2. Sir John de Wyſham, and Joan his wife, levied a fine of lands in St. Briavel's and Newland, to the uſe of themſelves in taille, the remainder to John de Bures, ſon of Andrew de Bures, 20 E. 3. William Warren held lands in St. Briavel's 38 E. 3. John Stephens was ſeized of ten acres, and of 12*s.* rent in St. Briavel's, and of a bailiwick in the foreſt of Dean, 9 R. 2. William Warren was ſeized of lands in St. Briavel's, and of a bailiwick in the foreſt of Dean 7 H. 5. William Baker and his wife levied a fine of lands in St. Briavel's to the uſe of Thomas Baker 12 H. 7.

There were other lands in St. Briavel's and Redmore's Grove, which belonged to the priory of Lanthony, and were granted to Arthur Porter 32 H. 8.

Bickſwear is an antient ſeat in this pariſh, upon the banks of the river Wye. The biſhop of Landaff was ſeized of Bickſwear 13 E. 2. The abbey of Tintern[b] in Monmouthſhire was ſeized of Bickſwear 19 E. 2. This is the eſtate of major James Rooke, ſon of the late James Rooke, eſq. who had it in right of Joan his wife, the only daughter of Tracy Catchmay, eſq. He was ſon to major general Rooke, of a Kentiſh family, and married, to his firſt wife, the counteſs dowager of Derwentwater, and mother of the unfortunate earl of Derwentwater. The Catchmays, reſiding for many years in this place, have been of great reputation in this county.

Ayleſmore houſe and eſtate is the joint property of Mr. Proſſer, in right of his wife Frances, and of Miſs Elianora Bond, the two daughters and coheireſſes of Mr. Richard Bond.

The reverend Mr. James Davies has a good houſe and eſtate here and in other places.

Mr. William Gough has a good houſe and eſtate at Willſbury in this pariſh, and in Hewelsfield and Woollaſton. He is of an antient family, of Britiſh extraction, long reſident in this part of the country. Their anceſtor, ſir Matthew Gough, or Goche, ſerved, with great reputation, in the wars of France, and was ſlain upon London-bridge by the Kentiſh rebels, 28 H. 6. William Gough, his deſcendant, died ſeized of a capital meſſuage in Woollaſton 5 E. 6. His ſon William married —— daughter of Mr. Madocke of Wibden, by whom he had George Goughe. He married Mary one of the three daughters and coheireſſes of William Warren of St. Briavel's, and with her had a manor and capital meſſuage in Hewelsfield. He had iſſue by Mary his wife, two ſons, Will-

At the beginning of this century there were 80 houſes and about 400 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 20 were freeholders; yearly births 14, burials 12. Atkyns. In a ſeries of eight years, from 1760 to 1767 incluſive, there are entered in the pariſh regiſter 90 baptiſms and 85 burials. The houſes and cottages are 122, and the preſent number of inhabitants 766; by which it appears that one in 72 dies every year; a proof of the uncommon healthineſs of the place, and longevity of the inhabitants. In the year 1767, five perſons died, whoſe ages put together amounted to 450 years. Thomas Evans and Sarah his wife were two of thoſe perſons, who were born in the pariſh, and having lived in it, in the married ſtate, upwards of 77 years, died within nine days of each other. They have often declared that neither of them was ever blooded, nor had taken phyſic.

BRIMPSFIELD.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Rapſgate, about ſix miles ſouth from Cheltenham, five north-eaſt from Biſley, and ſeven ſouth-eaſt from Glouceſter.

It is ſituate on the brow of that ridge of hills which runs through the county, whence there is a moſt beautiful and extenſive proſpect over the vale and the foreſt, with the lofty mountains in Monmouthſhire on one hand, and the blue hills of Malvern in Worceſterſhire on the other, to terminate the view.

Brimpsfield is a corruption of Brimesfeld as it is written in the antient records. It is compounded of bryme, famous, and pelo, the open country.

Here was formerly a caſtle, with four towers, of conſiderable ſtrength. There is no certain account in hiſtory when or by whom it was built; but as the building of caſtles was the prevailing taſte about the reign of king Stephen, its original may be dated as high as that time at leaſt. It was demoliſhed in the barons wars, and there is nothing to be ſeen of it, except ſome traces of the foundation.

Here was alſo an antient monaſtery, of the value of 78*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.* but being a cell to the abbey of St. Stephen de Fonteney in Normandy, as an alien priory, it was diſſolved by act of parliament 2 H. 5. and the lands belonging to it were granted to the college of Windſor, by king Edward the Fourth. Appendix, N°. 29. The priory is ſuppoſed to have been an elegant building, as there were windows of poliſhed marble dug up where it ſtood, about the beginning of this century.

In the reign of king Edward the Third, the duke of Clarence was lord of the manor. He purchaſed a charter for a weekly market on Tueſday, and a yearly fair on the eve of the feaſt of Corpus Chriſti, both of which have been long ſince diſcontinued. The market and fairs were held upon a part of the town called Haywick; and the men of that place being killed, it was afterwards, upon that occaſion, called Manleſs-town, which is the name of a hamlet in the pariſh at this time.

The head of the Stroud river riſes here, and the turnpike-road from Glouceſter to Cirenceſter, which is the Irminſtreet of the Romans, extends along the ſide of the pariſh, and divides it from Cowley.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Under the title of lands belonging to Oſbern Gifard, in Domeſday-book, it is expreſſed after this manner:

'The ſame Oſbern holds Brimesfelde in Reſpi-'get hundred. There are nine hides taxed. Duns 'held it of earl Harold. There are three plow-'tillages in demean, and ſixteen villeins, and ſix 'bordars, and a prieſt, with twelve plow-tillages. 'There are eight ſervi, and four ancillæ, and two 'mills of 64*d.* [rent.] In Glouceſter are five 'burgages of 2*s.* It is worth and was worth '12*l.* Domeſday-book, p. 77.

This Oſbern Gifard, or Giffard, was deſcended from count Giffard, a great nobleman of Normandy. William earl of Arques, uncle to the Conqueror, attempted to gain the dukedom of Normandy to himſelf, during the duke's minority; but count Giffard, who was general for the young duke, fought him, and obtained a complete victory. Oſbern attended the Conqueror in the invaſion of England, and for his ſervices was rewarded with this and three other manors in Glouceſterſhire.

Elias Giffard, ſon of Oſbern, gave lands and woods in Bockholt, in this pariſh, to the abbey of Glouceſter, about the year 1100. Elias his ſon was a monk in Glouceſter abbey, and gave to that church the manor of Croneham, the church of St. Mary at Bitton, the church of St. George at Orcheſton, and the chapel of St. Andrew at Winterborn. Elias, grandſon to the laſt Elias, died 2 R. 1. and was ſucceeded by Thomas Giffard, and after him another Elias Giffard, who took part with the rebellious barons againſt king John, who ſeized his lands in the 18th year of his reign, and granted them to Bartholomew Peeche. But they were reſtored to Giffard again, in the beginning of the reign of king Henry the Third, and he died in the 33d year of that reign.

John his ſon and heir ſucceeded him. He was made governor of St. Briavel's caſtle, and warden of the foreſt of Dean, 47 H. 3. He married Maud Longeſpee, widow of William Longeſpee, ſon of William earl of Saliſbury, and daughter and heir to Walter de Clifford, and carried her to his caſtle of Brimpsfield. She makes complaint to the king, and afterwards deſiſts from her complaint, but paid a fine of 300 marks for marrying without licence. He purchaſed a charter of free-warren in the manors of Badgworth, Stonehouſe, Rockhampton, Stoke-Giffard, and Tetbury, and in divers manors in other counties, 9 E. 1. He founded Glouceſter-hall in Oxford 11 E. 1. for twelve monks choſen out of the abbey of Glouceſter; but afterwards, other monaſteries of the order of St. Benedict contributing to the enlargement of the buildings, with the conſent of the founder and of the abbat of Glouceſter, partook of the benefit of that foundation. He died at Bitton 27 E. 1. and was buried at Malmeſbury, having been ſummoned as a baron to parliament from the 23d year of that reign to his death.

He was ſucceeded by his ſon John Giffard, called John the Rich, who took part with the barons againſt the Spencers, and therefore king Edward the Second, in his march from Cirenceſter to Worceſter, ſent ſoldiers to demoliſh his caſtle at Brimpsfield. He was afterwards taken priſoner at the battle of Burroughbridge, and ſent to Glouceſter to be executed as a traytor.

Upon his attainder, the caſtle and manor of Brimpsfield were granted to Hugh le Diſpenſer the elder, with remainder to Hugh the younger, 15 E. 2. but the ſcene of affairs changing, all the lands, lately belonging to John Giffard, were granted to John Maltravers 1 E. 3. as a reward for murdering the late king. He procured a confirmation of the manor from John de Callew, the heir of the Giffards, who levied a fine, and acknowledged the right of John Maltravers 4 E. 3. He was ſoon after convicted of high miſdemeanors and his eſtate ſeized.

The cuſtody of the caſtle and manor of Brimpsfield was granted for life to Maurice Berkeley, ſecond ſon of Maurice lord Berkeley, 14 E. 3. upon whoſe death, 22 E. 3. the king granted the manor and caſtle to his third ſon Lionel de Antwerp, duke of Clarence, to whom ſir John Maltravers levied a fine thereof 26 E. 3.

Edward

Edmund de Mortimer, earl of March and Ulſter, arried Philippa, daughter and heir of Lionel ke of Clarence, whereby he was intituled to the nor of Brimpsfield, which, from this time, acowledged the ſame proprietors as that of Biſley, which the reader is referred) 'till they both me to the crown, by the death of Cicely dutcheſs York, 10 H. 7. Brimpsfield was then ſettled king Henry the Eighth, on queen Catherine.

In the firſt year of king Edward the Sixth, this nor and park, and lands called Haſel-hanger, robably from the Britiſh ben-gaer, i.e. an old wall fortification,] were granted to ſir John Bridges, erwards lord Chandos, who died ſeized thereof Mariæ. Livery of the manor and park of impsfield was granted the ſame year to his ſon lmond lord Chandos, who died ſeized thereof Eliz. and was ſucceeded in honour and this ate by Giles lord Chandos his ſon and heir. He d ſeized thereof 36 Eliz. and left two daughters heireſſes; Elizabeth, married to ſir John Kenida; d Catherine, married to Francis lord Ruſſel of hornhagh.

From theſe the manor was transferred to Miles ndys, of Latimers in Buckinghamſhire, fifth ſon William Sandys, and younger brother of Edwin ndys archbiſhop of York. He was ſeized of is manor in the year 1608, and was high ſheriff Glouceſterſhire in the year 1625. He died zed of the manor of Brimpsfield 17 Car. Sir dwin Sandys, his ſecond ſon, (his elder brother, George, dying without iſſue) ſucceeded to is eſtate. William was the eldeſt ſon of ſir dwin, and for his prodigality was called Golden ndys. He died without iſſue, but ſold this nor to his uncle, ſir William Sandys of iſerden. Miles Sandys, ſon of William of iſerden, ſucceeded to this eſtate, and was high eriff of the county 30 C. 2. From him it went William Sandys, of Miſerden, eſq; ſon of Miles, o ſold it, and it is now the property of lord gecumbe, who holds a court-leet here. The manſion houſe is gone to ruin, and the park ned into a farm. BROADWELL.

THIS pariſh lies in the upper diviſion of the hundred of Slaughter, about two miles diſtant northward from Stow-on-the-Wold, eight ſouth from Campden, and twenty-ſix north-eaſtward from Glouceſter.

The name is derived from the large ſpring which riſes in this place near the manor-houſe, and runs into the Evenlode, and ſo into the Thames.

The lands are chiefly arable, with a little paſture.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book it is recorded after this manner: 'The ſame church [St. Mary of Eveſham] holds 'Bradewelle in Salemones hundred. There are 'ten hides. church of St. Mary of Wincelcumbe, in the reign of king William the Conqueror. But that was a miſtake, which, I apprehend, he was led into by an imperfect copy of that record; for I have myſelf ſeen a copy thereof, in which the head or title XII. Terra S. Marie de Eveſham, and the accounts of Malgereſberie, Tedeſtrop, and Bortune were omitted; whereby the manors of Bradewelle, Svelle, Willerſei, Weſtune, Stoch, and Hedecote, which all belonged to the laſt mentioned abbey, ſeemed to be the property of that of Wincelcumbe, whoſe eſtates are placed immediately before thoſe of the church of Eveſham in order. And I am the rather induced to account for the miſtake in this manner, becauſe the learned hiſtorian has fallen into the ſame error with reſpect to the five other manors above mentioned alſo. This matter will be clearly underſtood by inſpecting the printed copy of Domeſday at p. 71 and 72.

The abbey of Eveſham purchaſed a charter of free-warren in Bradwell, and divers other manors, 35 H. 3.

The maſter of the knights-templers was ſeized of court-leet, waifs, and felons goods in Bradwell, by the grant of king Henry the Third, which privileges were allowed, in a writ of Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. Thomas de Beauchamp earl of Warwick, and others, held Bradwell 24 E. 3. William de Clinton earl of Huntingdon died ſeized of the manor of Bradwell 28 E. 3. But notwithſtanding I find theſe records applied to this pariſh by ſir Robert Atkyns, there is reaſon to believe that they ſhould be referred to ſome other of the name of Bradwell; for this manor continued in the poſſeſſion of the abbey of Eveſham 'till the diſſolution of that houſe.

It is probable that Richard Andrews had a grant of this manor, and the advowſon of the church, from the crown, ſoon after the diſſolution; for he and Urſula his wife levied a fine of Bradwell, and of the advowſon of the church, to the uſe of Thomas Baſkerville and Anne his wife 6 E. 6.

— Ligon died ſeized of this manor 9 Eliz. and livery of it was granted the ſame year to Richard Ligon his ſon and heir.

Elianor Talbot, widow, was poſſeſſed of it in the year 1608, ſoon after which it was purchaſed by Mr. Hodges. Danvers Hodges, eſq; was lord of it at the beginning of this century; and Henry Danvers Doughty Hodges, eſq; is the preſent proprietor of it, and has a handſome ſeat here, built on the ſcite of the old houſe, by Dr. Chamberlayne, late dean of Briſtol, who married a daughter of the late Mr. Hodges. His arms are, Argent, three creſcents ſable. In a canton a coronet

The meadow called Burybradnam in Broadwell, belonged to the abbey of Eveſham, and was granted to ſir Philip Hobbey 37 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory in the deanery of Stow. Adleſtrop is annexed to it, and both together are worth about 350*l.* a year. The advowſon, and great part of the tithes antiently belonged to the abbey of Eveſham. The abbat and convent preſented to this church in 1402. They granted all their tithes, except of their demeans, whilſt in their own hands, to the incumbent, in the year 1450, reſerving in all 6*l.* yearly; which rent is now paid out of the rectory to the patron. The heir of the late James Leigh, eſq; is patron; the reverend Mr. Leigh the preſent incumbent.

The church hath an aile on the ſouth ſide, and a tower at the weſt end. There is a chapel in the aile, belonging to Mr. Hodges, where ſeveral of that name lie buried, and there is an antient monument erected to their memory. There is another handſome monument in the aile, in memory of Herbert Weſton, eſq; who died in 1635.

At the beginning of this century there were 30 houſes and about 126 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 15 were freeholders; yearly births 5, burials 4. Atkyns. But the inhabitants are nearly doubled ſince that time, being in number 245.

BROCKWORTH.

THIS pariſh is ſituate in the vale part of the county, in the upper diviſion of the hundred of Dudſton and King's-barton; ſix miles diſtant ſouth from Cheltenham, five north from Painſwick, and four eaſt from Glouceſter. It lies on the antient Roman way called the Irmingſtreet, ſome traces of which may ſtill be diſcovered hereabout, where the ſand and ſtone of the old road, being cut through by the long uſe of carriages, appear, in the banks on the ſides of it, diſtinct from the natural ſoil.

Cooper's-hill, in this pariſh, is taken notice of by ſir Robert Atkyns, as being the place of reſidence of John Theyer, a learned antiquary, and a firm loyaliſt to king Charles the Firſt. He had the advantage of the library of the priory of Lanthony near Glouceſter, which his grandfather, who had married the ſiſter of Richard Hart, the laſt prior, had procured into the family. They died in the year 1673, and left eight hundred manuſcripts, which were purchaſed by king Charles the Second for the library at St. James's

In the antient record the name of this place is written Brocowardinge, which ſignifies Broco's place, from the Anglo-Saxon ꝑopꝺ, or ꝑeopꝺ, already explained under Aldeſworth.

The pariſh is ſmall, conſiſting of rich arable and paſture ground. A brook runs through it in its courſe to the Severn, by Sandhurſt.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book it is thus written:

'Hugo Laſne holds Brocowardinge in Dudeſtan hundred of the king. There are five hides. Turchil held it of king Edward. In demean are two plow-tillages, and eight villeins, and ſix bordars, and a prieſt, and two free men, and a ſteward, who have between them all fifteen plow-tillages. There are four ſervi, and a mill of 2*s.* [rent;] a wood one mile long, and half a mile broad. It was worth 6*l.* now [only] 100*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 77.

The greateſt part of this pariſh was in the poſſeſſion of the Chandos's before the reign of king John; which king, in his charter of confirmation to the priory of Lanthony, recites the particulars given to the canons of that houſe, among which are the following: The church of Brockewordin given by Robert de Chandos, with half a hide of land and a houſe on the weſt ſide of the church-yard; and the land called Norbroc in Brockwordyn, and two new-plowed grounds which Richard de Brockwordyn gave unto them; and half a yard-land which was Aldred's; and whatever was given by Roger de Chandos the younger in Brockwordyn, and the lands in Brockwordyn which the canons had in exchange for Kyneceſtre. Appendix, N°. 19.

The priory of Lanthony had free warren in Brockworth 15 & 21 E. 1. and enjoyed this manor 'till that houſe was diſſolved. After the diſſolution, the manor and appurtenances, together with the tithes of the demeans, were granted to John Gyes, eſq; in exchange for Aſple lies in Bedfordſhire, and for Widdington in Eſſex 32 H. 8. and have continued in that family ever ſince, ſo that ſir William Gyſe, baronet, is the preſent lord of this manor, and has a large eſtate in the pariſh; for an account of whoſe family and arms, ſee Rendcombe.

The abbey of Glouceſter was ſeized of another manor in this pariſh. John Deffeld, the abbat, purchaſed of ſir Lawrence de Chandos fifty-five acres of arable land, and ſeveral houſes in Brockworth, and forty acres of incloſure, and all his wood in Bockholt, containing 300 acres, 44 H. 3. which particulars were afterwards conveyed to Reginald de Hamme, who was the next ſucceeding abbat. See p. 134.

Walter of Glouceſter and Hawiſe his wife held the manor of Brockworth of the abbey of Glouceſter at half a knight's-fee, and the manor of Elbrugge, 5 E. 2. Eſc. ſub anno.

Henry Brockworth was ſeized of Brockworth, as ſuppoſed as tenant to the abbey of Glouceſter, 22 E. 3. The abbey of Glouceſter was ſeized of it 49 E. 3. At the diſſolution of that abbey, the biſhoprick of Glouceſter was erected, and endowed with the manor of Droiſcourt in this pariſh, which belonged to St. Peter's abbey.

Henry le Drogue was ſeized of one yard-land in Brockworth, and was attainted of felony 28 E. 1.

HAMLETS. 1. Cooper's-hill, of which already.

2. Elbrug. Walter of Glouceſter held the manor of Elbrugg 5 E. 2. Sir Robert de la Mere and Maud his wife were ſeized of this manor 5 R. 2. Leonard Pool, eſq; of Saperton, died ſeized of the manor of Elbridge 30 H. 8. and livery thereof was granted the ſame year to his ſon Giles.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage in the deanery of Winchcombe, worth about 20*l.* a year. The rectory belonged to the priory of Lanthony, and was granted to Robert earl of Leiceſter, in exchange for other lands, 16 Eliz. Sir William Gyſe is patron and impropriator.

The church is dedicated to St. George. It has a low tower between the body of the church and the chancel.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

There is a handſome marble monument in the chancel for ſir Chriſtopher Gyſe, baronet, erected by his ſon ſir John Gyſe. He died in the year 1670, having been a great promoter of the recovery of the hundred of Dudſton and King's-barton from the city of Glouceſter to the county at large. Dudſton and King's-barton were formerly two diſtinct hundreds in the county of Glouceſter, but had been made part of the In-county, and appurtenant to the city of Glouceſter.

The name ſeems to be compoſed of Bryme, A. S. famous, and beorz, a town, or beorz, a caſtle, hill, or fortification.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Domeſday-book gives the following account of this manor:

'The ſame Radulfus [de Todeni] holds Brunme-'berge in Botelau hundred. There are five hides. 'Earl Herald held it. In demean is one plow-'tillage, and eleven villeins, and eight bordars, 'with fourteen plow-tillages. There is one ſervus. 'A wood two miles long and one broad. It was 'worth 8*l.* now 100*s.*' Domeſday-book, p. 76.

The manor of Bromſborough was granted to Roger de Toni 6 Joh. John de Penrys was ſeized of Bromſborow 15 E. 1. William de Whitefeld had free warren in Bromeſborow 14 E. 2. Thomas de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, was ſeized of the manor of Bromberghe 2 H. 4.

This manor afterwards belonged to the Bromwicks, deſcended from Wido de Bromwick, who reſided at a place of that name in Warwickſhire, 15 H. 2. and Henry de Caſtle-Bromwick was grandſon to Wido. A younger branch of this family ſettled here in the reign of king Richard the Second, and ſir John Bromwich and Catherine his wife levied a fine of the manor and advowſon of Bromſborough, to the uſe of themſelves in ſpecial taille, 10 R. 2. and that family continued here 'till the ſeventeenth century.

This manor afterwards came to the Yates. Walter Yate, eſq; was lord of it at the beginning of this century. He died without iſſue male, whereby John Yate, of Arlingham, eſq; his nephew, became poſſeſſed of this eſtate, and died unmarried.

Robert Dobyns, eſq; on the death of the above John, aſſumed the name and arms of Yate, and took all the eſtates of Walter Yate, in purſuance of his will. He was high-ſheriff of this county in 1765, but died before the expiration of that year; leaving two ſons and four daughters, by his wife Elizabeth, the daughter of Richard Gorges, of Eye, in the county of Hereford, eſq. Robert-Gorges-Dobyns Yate, eſq; eldeſt ſon of Robert Dobyns, is the preſent lord of this manor, and proprietor of the eſtates of the ſaid Walter Yate. He hath a very handſome, new-built ſeat, called Bromſborough Place, and a good eſtate in this pariſh. His arms are, Quarterly, 1. Azure, a feſs Or, in chief two mullets of the ſecond, for Yate. 2. Azure, a chevron between three annulets Or, for Dobyns. 3. Gules, a chevron between ten croſſes pattée, ſix above and four below, argent, for Berkeley. 4. Gules, a ſtag's head caboſhed Or, for . Motto. QUO VIRTUS VOCAT.

John Hawkeſlow and his wife levied a fine of lands in Bromſborough, to the uſe of John Machin and his wife, 13 H. 7. Mrs. Nanfan, widow of John Nanfan, eſq; has a good houſe called Brownſend, and a good eſtate in this pariſh. The Grove-houſe and eſtate is the property of Mr. William Brooke.

HAMLET. Woodend is a ſmall hamlet in this pariſh, conſiſting of two houſes.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory in the foreſt deanery, worth 140*l.* a year. Robert-Gorges-Dobyns Yate, eſq; is patron; the reverend Mr. Hayward the preſent incumbent.

The church hath a ſmall tower at the weſt end; it is dedicated to the Virgin Mary.

Monument and Inſcription.

There is an inſcription in the chancel for Richard Yate, eſq; a branch of the Arlingham family, who married Catherine, daughter of Thomas Wall, of Lintridge, eſq. He died in 1690. Beneath is this apoſtrophe:

BROCKRUP

BROCKRUP, or BROCKTHORP.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Dudſton and King's-barton, ſix miles diſtant north om Stroud, three weſt from Painſwick, and four uth-eaſt from Glouceſter. It is a ſmall pariſh, nſiſting almoſt intirely of paſture land.

Ðopp, ðnep, or ðnop, in the Anglo-Saxon, gnifies a ſtreet, or village. This place, as I con-ſture, was the property of ſome perſon, in the axon times, whoſe name it bears; and it might e either Bros, Broc, or Bruc, as it is differently ritten in the records; but I know no authority r writing it, as I have ſeen it, Brookrup.

I find nothing of ſingular note here; but orbet relates a circumſtance that happened to he parliament's troops at this place, which I ſhall ſt mention.

'Two thouſand men of the king's forces, after the ſiege of Glouceſter, marching from Tewkeſ-bury to Painſwick, the governor Maſſie ſallied out of Glouceſter with two hundred muſketiers, and a hundred horſe, and marched to the top of Brockthorp-hill, there to expect the enemy, whom he found divided into three bodies, and himſelf born down by the multitude; for whilſt two parties faced him, the third ſtole down a hollow lane, and had almoſt ſurrounded him unawares, by the negligence of the ſcouts; ſo that our whole body was brought into great danger, driven by a ſudden and confuſed retreat, and the governor himſelf left deeply engaged: Yet moſt of our men got off, being preſerved by the gal-lantry of a few reſolved men, that ſtood in the breach; and of them captain George Maſſie ſtriving to retard the purſuit, grappled with three together, hand to hand, received a very ſore wound in the head, and was happily reſcued by a ſerjeant of the company. Of ours, two lieu-tenants and ſixteen private ſoldiers were taken priſoners; the reſt in diſorder ran down a ſteep, through a rough and narrow lane, and recovered a houſe at the foot of the hill, where a party was left to make good the retreat, and the enemy durſt not purſue; by which means all the bottom was preſerved from ſpoil.' Military Government of Glouceſter.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

This eſtate ſtands under the title Terra Regis, Domeſday-book, where it is ſaid,

'In Broſtrop Aluric held three virgates of land. He had here two plow-tillages and one villein, three bordars and four ſervi. Theſe five eſtates [Herſefel, Athelai, Sanher, Herſecome, and Broſtrop] earl Herald took away after the death of king Edward; and Roger de Lurei put them to farm for 46*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*' Dom. Book, p. 67.

Adeline, the widow of Roger de Ivori, gave this manor to the abbey of Glouceſter 1103, and king Stephen confirmed it by his grant, wherein ſhe is called Adeline de Ibreo, occaſioned by tranſlating the name Ivori into Latin. She was daughter of Hugh de Grantmaiſnil.

Elias Giffard and Ala his wife, and their ſon Elias, granted to the monks of Glouceſter, by deed, which they laid upon the altar, all their land in Bruckrup, eſtimated at half a hide, and half a yard-land, free from all cuſtoms, except dane-gelt due to the king, 21 H. 1.

Roger the Firſt, and Hugh his heir, gave to the church of St. Peter at Glouceſter eight acres of land near to Brockrup-court, whilſt Hameline was abbat; which grant was confirmed by Gilbert de Myners, about the end of the reign of king Stephen.

The abbey of Glouceſter was ſeized of the manor of Brockrup 17 E. 3. which was held of Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford and Eſſex, and of Joan his wife, 46 E. 3. and continued in poſſeſſion of it 'till that houſe was diſſolved. After the diſſolution of the abbey, the manor of Brockrup was granted to the biſhoprick of Glouceſter 33 H. 8. and was confirmed to it 6 E. 6. to which it now belongs.

Roger le Rus was ſeized of three yard-lands in Bruckrup, which belonged to the Bertune of Glou-ceſter, 22 E. 1. There were lands and a portion of tithes in this pariſh, which belonged to the priory of Lanthony. The lands were granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple, in truſt for others, 35 H. 8. The tithes were granted to ſir William Ryder 17 Jac.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage in the deanery of Glouceſter, worth about 55*l.* a year. The dean and chapter of Glouceſter are patrons; the reverend Mr. John Newton incumbent. This living has been augmented with queen Anne's bounty, and a legacy bequeathed by one Mr. Hodges.

The impropriation belongs to the dean and chapter of Glouceſter, worth about 50*l.* a year. It pays 1*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* a year to the vicar, and ſixteen throw of wheat, ſixteen throw of beans, and thir-teen buſhels and a half of peaſe. In the taxation of eccleſiaſtical preferments, 19 E. 1. 'tis ſaid, Eccleſ. de Brockthorp 2 marc.

The church is dedicated to St. Swithin. It is ſmall, with a little, low, embattled tower at the weſt end.

In the year 1562, there were 16 houſholders in this pariſh.—At the beginning of this century there there were 40 houſes and 200 inhabitants, whereof 5 were freeholders; yearly births 5, burials 4. Atkyns. But there are now only 107 inhabitants, ſo that population declines.

BUCKLAND.

THIS pariſh lies in the lower diviſion of the hundred of Kiftſgate, five miles diſtant weſt from Campden, ſix ſouth from Eveſham, and twenty-three eaſtward from Glouceſter.

The church and houſes are ſituate on an eaſy acclivity, at the foot of the great ridge of hills which parts the vale from the cotſwold country, with an aſpect towards the weſt. The pariſh conſiſts of good arable, paſture, and wood-lands.

The village obtained its name from the tenure of the land by a deed in writing, which was antiently called Bocland: So other land, which was not held by writing, was called Folcland, as having no other evidence than the teſtimony of the folk or people. See p. 65.

Kynred, king of the Mercians, gave the manor of Bocland to the monaſtery of Glouceſter, when Edburg was abbat. Domeſday-book gives the following particulars:

'The ſame church [St. Peter of Glowec.] holds 'Bocheland in Wideles hundred. There are ten 'hides. In demean are three plow-tillages, and 'twenty-two villeins, and ſix bordars, with twelve 'plow-tillages. There are eight ſervi, and ten 'acres of meadow. It was worth 3*l.* but is now 'worth 9*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 71.

The abbey of Glouceſter held this manor 17 E. 3. and continued poſſeſſed of it 'till the diſſolution. It was then granted to ſir Richard Greſham, lord mayor of London, in exchange for lands in Yorkſhire, 38 H. 8. Sir John Thynne married, to his firſt wife, Chriſtian, daughter of ſir Richard Greſham,[4] and ſiſter and heir to ſir Thomas Greſham, who founded and endowed Greſham-college, and built the Royal Exchange in London; with whom he had the manor of Buckland, which has ever ſince continued in that family. Livery of this manor was granted to John Thynne, ſon of ſir John, 22 Eliz. James Thynne, eſq; was lord of it, and left it to his nephew Thomas Thynne, eſq; ſon of Henry. Lord viſcount Weymouth is the preſent lord of this manor, and has a ſeat near the church, and a large eſtate in this pariſh. His lordſhip's arms, &c. are given under Bagendon.

HAMLET. Laverton, a tithing in this pariſh, lies about a mile from the church. It has always acknowledged the ſame proprietor as Buckland. There was a chapel in this hamlet, which is now converted into a poor-houſe.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth 150*l.* a year. The abbat and convent of Glouceſter were patrons, and preſented to it in the year 1515. Lord Weymouth is patron, the reverend Mr. John Martin incumbent.

The tithes of Buckland and Laverton belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe, and were granted to ſir Thomas Seymour 1 E. 6. The rector hath one part of the corn-tithes, and lord Weymouth the other part. The demeans pay no tithes. Mr. James Thynne, in the year 1704, gave a piece of land in the field, called Hallier's quarter, containing forty-one lands, to the rector and his ſucceſſors, and diſcharged the ſame from tithe, in compenſation for the loſs which the rectory might ſuſtain, by reaſon of his having incloſed ſome tillage-lands, which paid tithe to the rector, and converted them to paſture.

The church, which hath an aile on the north ſide, is covered with lead. It has a handſome embattled tower at the weſt end, with ſix bells, a clock, and a ſet of chimes in it. In the eaſt window of the chancel are three compartments of painted glaſs. The ſubject ſeems to be a repreſentation of a manor-court. The abbat of Glouceſter, who was lord of the manor, is diſtinguiſhed by his mitre, and attended by ſeveral religious perſons in monkiſh habits; and the ſteward is known by his purſe hanging at his girdle. In the ſouth window are the arms of the abbey, Azure, a ſword in pale, pointing downwards, pomeled and hilted Or, between two keys in ſaltire of the ſecond.

The parſonage houſe is a good one, built about the beginning of the ſixteenth century. The hall is large and lofty. There are two pannels of painted glaſs in one window, well preſerved. In a ſhield is a tun or caſk, with a graft or branch of an apple-tree iſſuing out of it, deſigned as a rebus for the name, as it is written below in antient characters, Willm Grafton, rector, who probably built the houſe. There are alſo the ſame arms with thoſe in the window of the church, and ſeveral labels inſcribed In noie Ihu, i. e. In nomine Jeſu.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

There is a handſome marble monument againſt the ſouth wall of the chancel, with this inſcription:

Here lyeth the body of IAMES THYNNE, Eſq; Son of Sir HENRY FREDERICK THYNNE, Bar. and MARY Daughter of the Lord Keeper COVENTRYE. A Man of Exemplary Vertue and Charity, beloved and valued by his Equals, bleſt and pray'd for by the Poor. After ſome Legacies to his Relations, his whole large Perſonal Eſtate he bequeathed to pious uſes, and his Lands to his Nephew THOMAS THYNNE, who erected this Monument in gratitude to his Memory. He dyed March 15th 1708-9, Aged 66.

Over the table are theſe arms, Quarterly, 1ſt and 4th, Barry of ten pieces Or and ſable. 2d and 3d, Argent, a lion rampant gules.

[4] Sir Robert Atkyns's accounts of this intermarriage, under Buckland and Kempsford, are inconſiſtent. I have followed Collins's Peerage, vol. 6. p. 261.

On a raiſed tomb, in the church-yard, is this inſcription:

Coll. BERNARD GRANVILLE Son to Bernard Granville, Eſq; and Grandſon to Sir Bevill Granville who was killed in Lanſdown Fight, lyes here interred. He departed the fifty third Year of his Age, on the eighth of December, 1723.——There is a ſcutcheon on the tomb, Party per pale, 1. Three clarions. 2. Obliterated. —— The tomb was incloſed with rails, but now tomb and all are fallen to decay.

But it appears by the pariſh regiſter, that in a ſeries of ten years, from 1700 to 1709 incluſive, there were 71 baptiſms and 49 burials; and in a like ſeries, from 1760 to 1769, there were 100 baptiſms and 57 burials; and there are now about 316 inhabitants. So that population is increaſing in this pariſh, where the proportion of the inhabitants to the average of annual burials, is as 55 to 1.

BULLY.

THIS pariſh lies in the foreſt diviſion of the county, within the hundred of the dutchy of Lancaſter, ſeven miles diſtant eaſtward from Bitchel-Dean, ſeven ſouthward from Newent, and three weſtward from Glouceſter. It is a very ſmall pariſh, conſiſting of good paſture and arable land.

It does not appear who was the immediate ſucceſſor to the above Walter; but Juliana, Annabel, Joan, and Lucy de Muſgroſe levied a fine of lands in Bully and Ludeſcot, to the uſe of Walter de Muſgroſe, 43 H. 3. William de Muſgroſe was ſeized of Bullelegh 49 H. 3. John de Monemuthe was ſeized thereof 9 E. 1. Roger de Mortimer, earl of March, held the manor of Bully 34 E. 3.

John Elliford held Bully by the fourth part of a knight's-fee, of Roger de Mortimer, 22 R. 2. Iſabella, his widow, ſurvived him, and was married to Richard de la Moor, whom ſhe likewiſe ſurvived, and died ſeized of the manor of Bully 9 H. 5. John Elliford was ſeized thereof 3 H. 6. John Milborn, eſq; and Elizabeth his wife, were ſeized of the manor of Bully 15 H. 6.

Mr. Morgan, Mr. Burgeſs, and Mr. Webb were joint lords of this manor when ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of it. Nicholas Hyett, eſq; is the preſent lord of it. See his arms under Hunt's-court in Badgworth.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is conſidered as a chapel to Churcham, in the deanery of the foreſt. The dean and chapter of Glouceſter are impropriators. The ſmall tithes are worth about 5*l.* a year.

The church is a plain building.

CAM.

THIS pariſh lies in the vale, in the hundred of Berkeley, one mile north from Durſley, five eaſt from Berkeley, and fourteen ſouth-weſtward from Glouceſter. Some part of the turnpike-road from Durſley to Berkeley runs through it.

Here are no antiquities whatever. The ſoil is various; in the lower part of the pariſh it is rich, and produces ſome excellent cyder, and as good corn and cheeſe as any in the famous hundred of Berkeley.

The river, which runs through the village, riſes at Owlpen or Ewlpen, and paſſing by Durſley, where it is conſiderably augmented by the water of that place, takes its courſe through this pariſh, and Slimbridge, and empties itſelf into the Severn at Frampton-pill. It feeds no kind of fiſh except eels, on account of the great quantity of dye-ſtuff thrown into it. The courſe of it is crooked, like an arch or bow, wherefore it was called the Cam, which, in the Britiſh language, ſignifies crooked; and the village took its name from the river.

The poor are employ'd in the clothing buſineſs, by maſters at Durſley and Uley; but about thirty years ago, there were three or four conſiderable clothiers reſiding in this pariſh, who are ſince dead, or have declined buſineſs.

Great numbers of petrifications of the bivalve kind are found at Newnham-quarry, in the road from hence to Berkeley.

Stinchcombe antiently belonged to this pariſh.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

At the time of the Conqueſt, this was a member, or Berewick, of the great lordſhip of Berkeley, of which, the whole account from Domeſday-book is inſerted among the particulars of that place and lordſhip. There were then, it is ſaid, 'in Camma 'ſix hides, and eleven other hides.' p. 271.

Other records, of the following dates, ſhew the ſucceſſive lords of this manor.

John Berkeley, and Maurice his ſon, were ſeized of the manor of Cam, with free warren, 36 H. 3. and Maurice Berkeley died ſeized of it 9 E. 1.

Ralph de Cam was ſeized thereof 16 E. 1. But as it was common, in early times, to call a part by the name of the whole, it is moſt likely that this was only a manor within the manor of Cam; for Thomas de Berkeley was ſeized of Cam 15 E. 2. & 18 E. 3. and Thomas lord Berkeley held it 35 E. 3. Maurice, ſon of Thomas lord Berkeley, was ſeized thereof 42 E. 3. Thomas Berkeley held the ſame 6 R. 2. as did Catherine his wife, in the 9th year of that reign. Sir Thomas de Berkeley, and Margaret his wife, were ſeized of the manor of Cam 5 H. 5. Sir John Berkeley held the ſame 6 H. 6. and Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, in right of Elizabeth his wife, daughter and heir of Thomas lord Berkeley, died ſeized of Cam 17 H. 6. Sir Maurice Berkeley of Beverſtone was ſeized of this manor 38 & 39 H. 6. & 14 E. 4.

During the time of the laſt mentioned dates, and for a long time afterwards, there were great commotions and law-ſuits about the lordſhip of Berkeley, as already related, wherefore the records, during part of that diſpute, are imperfect as to this manor, and ſome others belonging to the Berkeley family.

William lord Berkeley, created earl-marſhal and earl of Nottingham, and Anne his wife, levied a fine of this manor to the uſe of king Henry the Seventh and his heirs male, 3 H. 7. whoſe heirs male ending at the death of king Edward the Sixth, livery of Cam was granted to Henry lord Berkeley 1 Mar. and the preſent earl of Berkeley is the lord of this manor.

Edmund Baſſet held one meſſuage, ſixty acres of land, and three acres of meadow in Cam 4 E. 2. John Serjeant was ſeized of lands in Cam 30 E. 3. William Warner levied a fine of lands in Cam, to the uſe of William Harding, 18 H. 7.

Upthorp, Aſhmead's, and Hockerhill are places in Upper-Cam; Til's-down, Clinger, and Bower's-lye are in Lower-Cam.

Lorrenge-farm was given, by Thomas lord Berkeley, in the reign of king Henry the Third, to the priory of Leonard-Stanley, of which the abbat of Glouceſter had the patronage; and the monks of that abbey procured it to be conſidered as belonging to the pariſh of Stanley; and it has been ever ſince, and ſtill is, aſſeſſed to the relief of the poor of that pariſh, whereas the land-tax of the farm goes in aid of the pariſh of Cam.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Durſley. Roger lord Berkeley gave this church, with its appurtenances, to the priory of Stanley St. Leonard, in the year 1146, and gave the patronage of that priory to the abbey of St. Peter at Glouceſter.

After the diſſolution of the abbey of Glouceſter, the rectory and advowſon of the vicarage, and the chapel, were granted to the biſhop of Glouceſter and his ſucceſſors, 33 H. 8. and confirmed 6 E. 6. So that the biſhop of Glouceſter is patron and impropriator. The biſhop pays to the vicar, out of the impropriation, 60*l.* a year in money, which was ſo ſettled in the year 1660. The glebe and houſe are worth about 10*l.* a year. The impropriation is in leaſe to Mr. Matthew Eſtcourt.

The church, dedicated to St. George, conſiſts of the nave, and an aile on each ſide. It has a large, high, embattled tower, with five bells, at the weſt end. The ſtatue of St. George, carved in wood, ſtood in the porch of the church, and was taken from thence by a clothier, and carried, in his waggon, to Colebrook, in the road to London, which gave name to the George-inn in that place. Atkyns.

The church is called Beatæ Mariæ de Cam, in ſome old deeds in the reigns of Henry the Fourth, and Henry the Fifth.

Mr. Richard Hicks of Cam, by his will, in 1710, gave 120*l.* for the uſe of the poor, with which, and the intereſt thereof, making together 200*l.* two cloſes, in the pariſh of Berkeley, have been purchaſed, worth 10*l.* a year.

Mr. Edward Trotman, and his ſiſters Elianor and Margaret, by their deed in 1727, gave 10*l.* a year for ever; 6*l.* whereof for ſix poor widows, and the remaining 4*l.* to be diſtributed in bread to the poor.

Mrs. Frances Hopton of Cam, in the year 1737, left an eſtate of 50*l.* a year, to found a free-ſchool, for the educating and clothing of ten boys and ten girls of this pariſh, 'till they are fourteen years old. There is a houſe for the maſter and miſtreſs.

At the beginning of this century, there were 150 houſes and about 800 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 30 were freeholders; yearly births 18, burials 16. Atkyns. The average of baptiſms entered in the pariſh regiſter for ſeven years, is now 23, of burials 21; and by a ſurvey of the inhabitants in the year 1767, they were found to be 1070. There are ſome baptiſed at the meeting-houſe, but few buried there; ſo that the proportion of the inhabitants to the annual burials, is nearly as 50 to 1; which ſhews it to be a very healthy place, conſidering the ſituation of it in the vale.

CAMPDEN

LIES in the lower part of the hundred of Kiftſgate, about twenty miles diſtant eaſt from Tewkeſbury, ten north from Stow, and twenty-eight north-eaſtward from Glouceſter; ſeated in a pleaſant, fertile bottom, ſurrounded with hills and hanging woods. A ſmall brook runs from hence into the Stour, and ſo into the Avon, a mile below Stratford.

It is ſometimes called Chipping-Campden, to diſtinguiſh it from Broad Campden, a hamlet in the ſame pariſh. The prænomen denotes it to be a market-town, from the Saxon Cyppan, to traffick. For the other part of the name, Camp, in the ſame language, ſignifies a fight, or battle; and den, a woody place in a valley. Agreeably to this etymology, there is a tradition, that a great battle was fought in the hamlet of Barrington, between the Mercians and Weſt-Saxons; and there is a bridge in that place ſtill called Battle-bridge. The camp of the Mercians is ſaid to have been at Wilderſey, adjoining to this pariſh, and that of the Saxons upon Meen-hill, about three miles off. See Mickleton.

The town of Campden, as John Caſtor aſſerts, is alſo famous in antiquity for being the place of congreſs of all the kings of the Saxon heptarchy, who met here in the year 689, to conſult of making war and peace with the Britons. It might, at that time, be a place of conſiderable note. At preſent, it conſiſts of one long ſtreet, with a market-houſe in the middle, built by ſir Baptiſt Hicks, viſcount Campden, whoſe arms are on the north ſide of it. The market is held on Wedneſday.

The town is an antient borough and corporation, but ſends no members to parliament. The burgeſſes obtained their preſent charter 3 Jac. by which they are made a body corporate and politic, and have a common ſeal. The corporation conſiſts of fourteen capital burgeſſes, (out of whom two bailiffs are choſen annually, on the Wedneſday before Michaelmas,) and twelve inferior burgeſſes. They elect a ſteward, who is to be a perſon learned in the law, and is amovable at pleaſure.

There is a court of record, every fourth Friday in the year, before the bailiffs and ſteward of the borough, or his deputy, where they hold pleas of treſpaſs, of debt, contract, fraud, on the caſe, and all perſonal actions ariſing within the borough, its liberties and precincts, not exceeding the value of 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* And they have two ſerjeants, with ſilver maces, to execute proceſſes.

The corporation has power of making laws reſpecting the borough, and of inflicting penalties by fine and amerciament. The capital burgeſſes fill up vacancies in the common council out of the burgeſſes.

There are four annual fairs, i.e. on St. Andrew's day, Aſh-wedneſday, St. George's day, and St. James's day. The profits of the two former belong to the corporation; of the two latter to the lord of the manor.—See the charter of incorporation, Appendix, No. 27.

Mr. Robert Dover, who lived in the reign of king James the Firſt, became a very popular man in this country, by his hoſpitality and generoſity. He inſtituted an annual meeting for the practice of all ſorts of manly exerciſes, and diſtributed prizes to ſuch as excelled in them. Theſe exerciſes and their patron are the ſubject of a ſmall collection of verſes, intituled Annalia Dubrenſia, written by the beſt poets of that age. And there is ſtill a meeting of young people upon Dover's-hill, about a mile from Campden, every Thurſday in Whitſun-week. See p. 24.

Sir Baptiſt Hicks, the firſt viſcount Campden, built a noble houſe near the church, the outſide of which coſt 29,000*l.* and in the lanthorn, on the top of the houſe, he ordered lights to be ſet up in dark nights for the benefit of travellers. This houſe was, without any great reaſon, burnt down by the king's party in the great civil war, leſt it ſhould be made a garriſon by the parliament.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book it is expreſſed after this manner: 'The ſame earl [Hugh] holds Campedene in 'Witelai hundred. Earl Harold held it. There 'are fifteen hides taxed. In demean are ſix plow-'tillages,

'tillages, and fifty villeins, and eight bordars, with 'twenty-one plow-tillages. There are twelve 'ſervi, and two mills of 6*s.* 2*d.* and two ancillæ. 'It was worth 30*l.* now only 20*l.*' D. B. p. 73.

William Molyneux, eſq; was ſeized of the manor of Chipping Campden 6 E. 4. Sir John Burgh held a manor of the name of Campden 11 E. 4. and John Molyneux, eſq; held Chipping Campden 13 E. 4.

The manor of Campden, and the advowſon of the chapel of St. Catherine, deſcended to Cicely, the wife of —— Fitzherbert: Her ſecond huſband was John Joſlyn, who, with his wife, levied a fine of them to the uſe of Thomas Molineux and others 8 H. 7. Euſtace Fitzherbert was Cicely's ſon and heir, who died ſeized thereof 9 H. 8.

Sir John Ruſſel died ſeized of the manor of Chipping Campden 4 Mar. and was ſucceeded by ſir Thomas Ruſſel, his ſon and heir. This manor afterwards came to the crown, and was granted, by queen Elizabeth, to ſir Thomas Smith, whoſe anceſtor was an alderman of Worceſter. Anthony Smith, eſq; was lord of this manor in the year 1608.

It was purchaſed, ſoon after, by ſir Baptiſt Hicks, who was created viſcount Campden 4 C. 1.

Edward lord Noel having married Juliana, eldeſt daughter and coheir of Baptiſt viſcount Campden, obtained a grant of that honour to himſelf and his heirs male, on failure of male iſſue of the ſaid viſcount Campden, at whoſe death he ſucceeded to the title, and to the manor of Campden. Mary, the other daughter, was married, firſt, to ſir Charles Moriſon, of Caiſhobery in Hertfordſhire, and afterwards to ſir John Couper, of Winburn in Dorſetſhire. This Edward viſcount Campden was active in the royal cauſe, at the breaking out of the civil war, and dying at Oxford, 1643, was carried to Campden, and lies buried there, under a ſumptuous monument erected over him by his lady. He left iſſue, by the above lady, two ſons, Baptiſt and Henry; and two daughters, Elizabeth, married to ſir Eraſmus de la Fountain; and Penelope, to John viſcount Chaworth.

Baptiſt viſcount Campden ſucceeded his father in title and eſtate. He raiſed and maintained, at his own coſt, a troop of horſe, and a company of foot, for the ſervice of king Charles the Firſt, and paid, to the ſequeſtrators, 9,000*l.* compoſition for his eſtate, beſides 150*l.* a year, ſettled on the miniſters of the times. He married firſt, Anne Fielding, ſecond daughter to William earl of Denbigh, by whom he had three children, who died in their infancy; ſecondly, Anne daughter of ſir Robert Lovet, widow of Edward earl of Bath, by whom he had one ſon ſtill-born. His third wife was Heſter, one of the four daughters and coheireſſes of Thomas lord Wotton, by whom he he had two ſons, Edward and Henry; and four daughters, Mary, afterwards counteſs of Northampton; Juliana, wife of William lord Allington; Heſter, who died an infant; and Elizabeth, married to Charles earl of Berkeley. His fourth wife was Elizabeth Bertie, eldeſt daughter of Montague earl of Lindſey, by whom he had ſix ſons, Lindſey, Baptiſt, John, James, and two ſtill-born; and three daughters, Catherine, married to John earl of Rutland; Bridget, and Martha-Penelope. His lordſhip dying in 1682, was buried at Exton in Rutlandſhire.

Edward Noel, who was advanced to the degree of a baron, by the title of lord Noel of Titchfield, in his father's life-time, 33 C. 2. ſucceeded his father at his death, and was created earl of Gainſborough the ſame year. He married lady Elizabeth, eldeſt daughter and coheir of Thomas-Wriotheſley, earl of Northampton, by whom he had iſſue Wriotheſley-Baptiſt, his ſucceſſor, and four daughters; lady Frances, married to Simon lord Digby; lady Jane, married to William lord Digby, brother and heir to the ſaid Simon lord Digby; lady Elizabeth, married to Richard Norton, eſq; and lady Juliana, who died unmarried.

Wriotheſley-Baptiſt, ſecond earl of Gainſborough, married Catherine, eldeſt daughter of Fulke Grevile, fifth lord Brooke, and departing this life in 1690, left iſſue only two daughters; lady Elizabeth, married to Henry Bentinck, firſt duke of Portland; and lady Rachael, wedded to Henry Somerſet, ſecond duke of Beaufort.—On his lordſhip's failing of iſſue male, the honours, and this eſtate, deſcended to Baptiſt Noel, ſon of Baptiſt, ſecond ſon of Baptiſt viſcount Campden, by his fourth wife, Elizabeth, daughter of the earl of Lindſey.

Baptiſt, the eldeſt ſon, ſucceeded as fourth earl of Gainſborough. He married Miſs Elizabeth Chapman, by whom he had iſſue three ſons, Baptiſt, his ſucceſſor; Henry, now earl of Gainſborough; and Charles, who died young; and nine daughters, lady Elizabeth; lady Jane, married to Gerrard-Anne Edwards, of Welham in Leiceſterſhire, eſq; lady Juliana, wedded to George Edwards, lord Carbery; lady Penelope, who died young; lady Anne; lady Lucy, married to Horatio Mann, eſq; lady Mary; lady Suſannah; and lady Sophia. His lordſhip died March 21, 1750-51, and was ſucceeded by his eldeſt ſon,

Baptiſt, fifth earl of Gainſborough, who being on his travels, died a batchelor at Geneva, in 1759; upon which, his only ſurviving brother,

Henry, born in 1743, became the ſixth earl of Gainſborough, and is the preſent lord of the manor of Campden.

His lordſhip's titles are Earl of Gainſborough, Viſcount Campden of Campden, Baron Noel of Ridlington, Baron Hicks of Ilmington, Baron Noel of Titchfield, and Baronet. Mr. William Harriſon, ſteward to this family, was ſuppoſed to be murdered in 1676, and three perſons were executed for the murder; but he returned to Campden about two years afterwards, and ſir Thomas Overbury [e] publiſhed an account of that myſterious affair.

HAMLETS. 1. Barrington, in which the church ſtands. Henry Stapleton, gentleman, was ſeized of a virgate of land, a barn, and a cloſe [e] The following is the ſubſtance of ſir Thomas Overbury's account.

Mr. William Harriſon went from Campden to Charringworth, about three miles off, to receive his lady's rents, and not returning at his uſual time, his wife ſent their ſervant, John Perry, to ſee for him; and neither of them returning that night, Mr. Harriſon's ſon went in ſearch of them, and found Perry, who ſaid his maſter was not at Charringworth. Soon after they were informed that a hat, band, and comb had been found by a poor woman leaſing in the field, which proved to be Mr. Harriſon's; and as the band was bloody, and the hat cut, he was ſuppoſed to be murdered. Search was made for the body, but in vain. Suſpicion ariſing againſt Perry, he was examined by a magiſtrate, and tho' nothing appeared againſt him, was kept in cuſtody ſeveral days. It was ſaid, however, that he told ſome perſons that a tinker had killed his maſter; and others, that a gentleman's ſervant had done it. And being taken before the magiſtrate again, he affirmed that his mother and brother had robbed his maſter and killed him, and that it was a matter previouſly agreed upon between him and them, relating a great variety of probable circumſtances concerning the murder, ſuch as where they had thrown the body, &c.

Joan and Richard Perry, the mother and brother, were apprehended and examined, who both denied the charge; but John ſtill perſiſted that he had ſpoke the truth; however, the body could not be found any where.

It is remarkable, that returning from the juſtice's, Richard Perry, who walked a good diſtance behind John, pulling a handkerchief out of his pocket, dropped a piece of inkle, with a reeve-knot at one end. This being ſhewed to John, he declared it was the ſtring his brother ſtrangled his maſter with.

At the next lent aſſizes, they were tryed upon an indictment for the ſuppoſed murder, and pleaded not guilty; but they were all convicted upon John's confeſſion before the magiſtrate, and a few days after, were brought to the place of execution on Broadway-hill, in ſight of Campden. The mother and Richard were firſt executed, profeſſing their innocence, and beſeeching John to declare what he knew. But he, with a dogged, ſullen carriage, told the people he was not obliged to confeſs to them; yet immediately before his death, ſaid, he knew nothing of his maſter's death, nor what became of him; but they were all executed, and John was hanged in chains.

Execution thus done upon thoſe unhappy wretches, it muſt ſtrike the reader with horror and amazement to be informed that the ſame Mr. Harriſon returned to Campden, about two years afterwards, alive and well, and gave an account of his having been taken away, by three perſons on horſeback, as he was returning from Charringworth: They travelled by night 'till they came to Deal, where he was put on board a ſhip, and after being at ſea about ſix weeks, he, and others in the ſame condition, were landed in the Turkiſh dominions, and diſpoſed of to different perſons. It was his lot to be choſen by an old phyſician, who died in ſomething more than a year afterwards. From thence he eſcaped by a ſhip that was bound to Portugal, and ſo returned to England, where he was received by his wife and family as one riſen from the dead.

formerly belonging to the chantry of St. Catherine, ſituate in Byrrington in the pariſh of Campden, which Thomas Smythe purchaſed of him, and died ſeized thereof 41 Eliz. as appears by the eſcheator's inquiſition in that year.

2. Weſtington and Comb. Henry de Faunton was ſeized of the manor of Weſtington 7 E. 2. Robert Cotel was ſeized of the manor of Combe, and Alice, his wife, ſurviving him, had the third part of this manor aſſigned to her in dower, 9 E. 3. Adam de Hermington held the manor of Comb near Campden, 16 E. 3. Combe-grange, alias Combe, in the pariſh of Campden, formerly belonging to the abbey of Bordeſley, was granted, by the crown, to Thomas Smyth and Katherine his wife, to be held by the ſervice of one fortieth part of a knight's fee, 7 E. 6.

3. Broad Campden. Here was formerly a chapel, which was afterwards turned into a barn. Sir Chriſtopher Savage died ſeized of the manors of Broad Campden, Burington, and Weſtington 4 H. 8. and livery of theſe manors was granted to Chriſtopher Savage, his ſon, 12 H. 8. Thomas Boner[f] purchaſed a moiety of the manor of Campden, and of divers other lands in Campden, Buryngton, and Weſtington, of Chriſtopher Savage 37 H. 8. and ſold the ſame to Thomas Smyth. A meſſuage in Broad Campden, formerly belonging to the abbey of Tewkeſbury, was granted to James Gunter and William Lewis 37 H. 8. James Gunter, and Anne his wife, levied a fine of the manor of Broad Campden, to the uſe of ſir Roger Cholmondeley, lord chief-baron of the court of exchequer, 1 E. 6. and Roger Cholmondeley levied a fine of the ſame, to William Waſhborn, 5 Mariæ. Three yard-lands,[f] and two cloſes, and divers other lands in Broad Campden, late belonging to the chantry of St. Trinity in the church of Campden, were granted, by king Edward the Sixth, to Henry Stapleton, 3 E. 6. which he ſold to Thomas Smyth the ſame year.

Of the other eſtates in this pariſh the records give the following account. Henry de Erdington held lands in Barew and Campden by the eighth part of a knight's fee, 5 E. 1. and Ralph de Cromwell held lands in Barew and Campden, in right of his wife, by the ſervice of a fourth part of a knight's fee, 5 E. 1.

Sir Edward Berſtead levied a fine of the third part of lands in Campden, Weſtington, Muckleton, Pebworth, and Olington, to the uſe of Lewis Grevil 4 H. 4. William Milner, and Margaret his wife, levied a fine of lands in Campden, to the uſe of John Marſhal 5 E. 4. Sir William Compton died ſeized of thirty meſſuages and ſeventy acres in Campden 20 H. 8.

A mill, and lands in Campden, which belonged to the nunnery of Cockhill[g] in Worceſterſhire, were granted to Nicholas Forteſcue and Catherine Forteſcue, and to the heirs male of Nicholas, 34 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Campden, worth about 300*l.* a year, in the patronage of the earl of Gainſborough. Mr. Weſton is the preſent incumbent.

The abbat of Cheſter was ſeized of the advowſon of the church of Campden 15 E. 1.

The rectory of Campden belonged formerly to the nunnery of St. Warburg in Cheſter, which ſaint was daughter of Wolpher, king of Mercia. It was granted to the chapter of Cheſter 33 H. 8. And the church and rectory were granted to Lawrence Baſkervil and William Blake 3 Jac.

The impropriation formerly belonged to the abbey of Welbeck, and is now veſted in the earl of Gainſborough.

Sir Baptiſt Hicks purchaſed the impropriation of Winfrith in Dorſetſhire, worth, at that time, about 100*l.* a year, which was afterwards annexed to the vicarage of Campden, by Edward lord Noel.

The church is large and beautiful. The nave is ſixty feet high, with an aile on each ſide, and a very handſome tower, thirty-five yards high, beſides the battlements and twelve pinnacles. The church and ſide ailes are fifty-ſeven feet broad, and the length of the whole building is one hundred and thirty feet. There are alſo two handſome chapels and a ſpacious chancel, in the leaſt window of which are the arms of ſir Baptiſt Hicks, curiouſly painted, ſix feet in height. There is a peal of eight bells, and a ſet of chimes in the tower. The church is dedicated to St. James.

The church is ſuppoſed to have been built about the beginning of the reign of king Richard the Second. There is a grey marble flat ſtone in the church for Mr. William Grevel, who died in 1401, 2 H. 4. on which he and his wife are repreſented on a braſs plate, ſtanding in two niches, embelliſhed with pinnacles, which correſpond exactly with the fine Gothic carved work over the great door, and belfry window, at the weſt ſide of the tower. From this circumſtance ſome perſons have ſuppoſed that he built the tower; and the legend in the window, over the door of the north aile, to pray for the ſouls, &c. and the many mullets, part of his arms, diſperſed over the windows, ſhew him to have contributed, at leaſt, towards the building or repairing of that aile. The floor of the nave was formerly adorned with very curious plated marble flat ſtones; but they are now covered with large pews to fit in.

There was formerly a great deal of curious painted glaſs, of which only a few fragments remain.

There were four chantries in this church, i. e. 1. Stratford's, or St. Catherine's firſt chantry,

St. Mary's, alias Bernard's chantry, of which Robert Joy was the laſt incumbent, and received a penſion of 5*l.*

Divers lands in Campden, formerly belonging to the holy Trinity chantry, and St. Mary's, were granted to ſir William Ryder and others 7 Jac.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

On a marble graveſtone, nine feet long and five broad, are the effigies, in braſs, of Mr. Grevel and his wife, five feet four inches in length, and the following inſcription, on a fillet of braſs, round the margin of the ſtone :

Mr. John Fereby, alias Verby, founded a grammar-ſchool in this town, in the year 1487, and endowed it with a moiety of the manor of Lynham in Oxfordſhire, and with a large cloſe called Fines-cloſe; but by the ill management of the feoffees, this eſtate was ſold, and another at Barton-on-the-Heath, in Warwickſhire, was purchaſed with the money, which was ſettled, by a decree in chancery, 1627, in a certain number of feoffees, for the maintenance of a ſchool-maſter and uſher, and now lets at 80*l.* a year, of which the maſter has 40*l.* the uſher 20*l.* The effigy of the founder is ſet up in the ſchool.

James Thynne, eſq; of Buckland, gave 1000*l.* for the founding of a charity-ſchool for thirty girls, to be cloathed every year whilſt they continue in the ſchool; and appointed 10*l.* a year to the miſtreſs. This charity is ſupported by an eſtate at Staunton, near Campden.

He likewiſe gave, by his laſt will, 500*l.* for a ſtock to ſet the poor at work.

Mr. William Yate, in 1690, gave one dozen of bread weekly to the poor.

There have been other benefactions of a leſs permanent nature. And John Savage, eſq; in 1734, gave 100*l.* to erect an altar-piece, and 10*l.* to be given to the poor in bread.

h In a manuſcript lent me by a friend, wherein are many particulars relating to the church of Campden, I find the following very pertinent reflections.

'I have often lamented,' ſays the writer, 'the ſacrilegious ſpoil and deſtruction of the venerable monuments of our great and good anceſtors, by men in power and office; men, ſometimes, of liberal education, who know, or at leaſt ought to know, that there is a reſpect due to the dead; that the memory of the righteous ought to be had in everlaſting remembrance; and that even the heathens themſelves have looked upon the violation of the monuments of the dead with the utmoſt deteſtation and abhorrence. And yet, alas! neither greatneſs of birth, true patriotiſm, valour, munificence, nor other qualifications and indowments whatever, have been ſufficient to protect the monuments of our anceſtors from violence. By my intereſt, a fine old monument in Campden church was preſerved, which would have fallen a ſacrifice to the lucre of an iron grate that incompaſſed it, the ſale of which would have put a few pounds in the ſpoiler's pocket. I remember ſeveral old monuments for perſons of merit, which have been demoliſhed, and laid aſide as rubbiſh, to make room for new ones, for perſons who very little deſerve a memorial. Among the monuments of antiquity now remaining, none decline ſo faſt as the old ſtones with braſs plates. The plates fall a prey to petty church-robbers, whoſe behaviour is countenanced by the bad example of great ones, or negligence of their ſuperiors; ſo that in another century, unleſs greater care be taken, but very few of thoſe monuments will be found remaining.'——— Theſe reflections are applicable to other places beſides Campden.

At the beginning of this century there were 391 houſes and about 1618 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 61 were freeholders; yearly births 48, burials 45. Atkyns. In a ſeries of ten years, from 1700 to 1709 incluſive, the average number of annual baptiſms entered in the pariſh regiſter, was of burials . And, from 1760 to 1769, the average of baptiſms was , and of burials , including the diſſenters. And the whole number of inhabitants is about . So that the proportion between the living and the annual burials is nearly as 45 to 1; which ſhews the place to be healthy.

CERNEY, (NORTH.)

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Rapſgate, in the coteſwold country, four miles north from Cirenceſter, ſeven ſouth-weſt from Northleach, and fourteen eaſtward from Glouceſter.

It is ſituate upon the river Churn, whence it took its name, for Cern-ey ſignifies the Churn-water. This pariſh conſiſts moſtly of arable land, with ſome meadow and paſture. Cirenceſter races are run upon Cerney-down, which is eſteemed a very fine two mile courſe, as well for running as for the ſpectators.

There is a camp in Cerney-field, of conſiderable extent; and about ſeventy years ago, there was an urn of blue glaſs dug up in Calmſden-field, in this pariſh, full of burnt bones and aſhes.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

'Saint Oſwald [of Glouuec.] held in Cernei, in Reſpigete hundred, one manor of four hides, in the time of king Edward. The ſame ſaint holds it ſtill, and has two plow-tillages in demean, and ſix villeins, and two bordars, with five plow-tillages. There is one ſervus, and a mill of 7*s.* [rent] and two acres of meadow. It was then worth 100*s.* and is now worth 4*l.*' Domeſday-book, p. 70.

'Giſlebert [the ſon of Turold] holds Cernei in Reſpiget hundred. There are ſeven hides. Elaf and his brother, two thanes, held it for two manors, and could go where they pleaſed. In demean are four plow-tillages, and ſeven villeins, and ſix bordars, with five plow-tillages. There are ſix ſervi, and a mill of 8*s.* [rent] and ſix acres of meadow; a wood two quarters [of a mile] long, and one broad. Four knights belonging to Giſlebert, with their men, have ſeven plow-tillages, and a mill of 8*s.* [rent] The whole, in the time of king Edward, was worth 14*l.* and is now worth 12*l.*' Ibidem, p. 76.

The above Giſlebert took part with Robert Curtoiſe againſt king William the Second, wherefore his eſtates in England were ſeized. He was alſo lord of Rendcombe, which manor was granted to Robert Fitz-Hamon, and went, with Mabel his daughter, to Robert Mellent, and ſo deſcended to the ſeveral earls of Glouceſter down to the Staffords, who were lords of the manors of Rendcombe and Cerney; wherefore I conjecture, that upon Giſlebert's defection, this manor was granted, with Rendcombe, to Robert Fitz-Hamon, and deſcended together, 'till the attainder of Humphry earl of Stafford, after he was killed in the battle of Northampton, 38 H. 6. But the records are imperfect, as to Cerney, for a great part of the above time.

Hugh earl of Stafford held lands in Cerney, with the advowſon of the church, at the time of his death, at Rhodes, in his return from a pilgrimage to Jeruſalem, which happened 9 R. 2. as appears by an inquiſition of the following year. Thomas earl of Stafford died ſeized of them 16 R. 2. Edward earl of Stafford was ſeized of the manor of North Cerney, and of the advowſon of the church, 4 H. 4.

Edward Stafford, duke of Buckingham, was ſeized of the manors of North Cerney and Woodmancot, when he was attainted and executed, 14 H. 8. whereby they came to the crown, and the advowſon of the church, and the manor of Woodmancot were granted to ſir Richard Cornwall, and his heirs male, the ſame year.

The manor of North Cerney was granted to Henry lord Stafford 2 Mar. He died in 1558, and livery of the manors of North Cerney and Woodmancot was granted to Edward lord Stafford, his ſon and heir, 13 Eliz.

John Partridge, eſq; was ſeized of North Cerney in the year 1608. Three perſons, Mr. Combs, and two gentlemen of the name of Oatridge, were afterwards joint owners of it, who ſold it to the earl of Bathurſt, the preſent lord of the manor.

Robert de Mara purchaſed lands in North Cerney, of Jordan his brother, 1 Joh. Henry the ſon of Gerald, purchaſed, by exchange, lands in Cerney, of William de Alneto, 11 Joh. John Dunſen was ſeized of lands in this place 30 H. 3. John Weſtby, and Margaret his wife, levied a fine of lands in North Cerney, Calmſden, and Woodmancot, to the uſe of William Tracy and others, 19 H. 7.

Thomas Tyndale, eſq; has a good houſe and a good eſtate in this pariſh, which he purchaſed of the late Mr. Pickering Rich. His arms are, Argent, a feſs gules, between three garbs ſable.

HAMLETS. 1. Woodmancot, about two miles north-weſtward from the church. William de Marre, of Ryndecumbe, releaſed to the convent of Lacok, for ſeventeen pounds ſterling, all his rights in the manor of Wodemancote, except the view of frankpledge of the earl of Glouceſter, to be made twice a year at Rindecumbe. Conſtantia de Lega gave to God and the bleſſed Mary, all the manor of Wudemanecote, to make an abbey at Lacok, and afterwards, in the reign of king Henry the Third, acknowledged, before the king's juſtices, that two carucates of land, with their appurtenances in Wodemancote, were the right of the convent of Lacok.

The foregoing is taken from Stevens's Supplement to the Monaſticon, (Appendix, N°. 448.) where are many other particulars of lands in Wodemancote, ſaid to be granted to the monaſtery of Lacok; but as the county is not mentioned, and as there are many places of that name in other parts, beſides three in Glouceſterſhire, it cannot be aſcertained to which of thoſe places the lands belonged.

Thomas the ſon of Otto, and Beatrix his wife, were ſeized of the manor of Woodmancot 2 E. 1. Gilbert de Clare, earl of Glouceſter and Hertford, was ſeized of the manors of Woodmancot and Calmſden, with court-leet, 15 E. 1. Warine the ſon of Warine was ſeized of the manor of Woodmancot 16 E. 3. John Blount held Woodmancot and Calmſden, in North Cerney, 22 H. 6. and Wentlyn, his widow, was ſeized thereof 32 H. 6.

2. Calmſden, which was held by the earl of Glouceſter and John Blount, as above mentioned. Alice Burley held a third part of the manor of Calmondeſden in dower, and John Burley, her ſon, and Iſabel, his wife, levied a fine of the other two parts, to the uſe of themſelves, 4 H. 4. Richard, the ſon of Roger de Calmſden, gave divers lands to the knights templers, which afterwards came to the knights hoſpitallers of Jeruſalem. Conſtantia de Lega, widow, gave to the nuns of Lacok 25*s.* yearly rent in Calemundeſden, which the knights hoſpitallers uſed to pay her. Stevens, as above. Mabilia, Robert, and William de Mara gave to the knights hoſpitallers all their demeans in Calmſden. After the diſſolution of religious foundations, ſuch of the above lands as belonged to the knights hoſpitallers of Jeruſalem, were granted to Thomas lord Seimour; after whoſe attainder they reverted to the crown, and were again granted to Catherine Buckler, widow, and to Richard Buckler and Catherine his wife, 7 E. 6.

There was a manor in Calmſden which belonged to the archbiſhop of York 14 E. 3. and was granted to ſir Thomas Chamberlain 6 E. 6. But the tithes of the archbiſhop's demeans belonged to the monaſtery of St. Oſwald in Glouceſter, and were granted to the chapter of Briſtol 34 H. 8. Sir William Gyſe claims the manors of Woodmancot and Calmſden.

There was formerly a chapel in each of theſe hamlets, but they have been long ſince demoliſhed.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Cirenceſter, worth 300*l.* a year. Gilbert de Clare, earl of Glouceſter and Hertford, was ſeized of the advowſon of Cerney 8 E. 2. The advowſon was in diſpute between the late ſir John Gyſe, and the executors of the late Charles Coxe, eſq; which ended in an agreement to convey both their rights to Univerſity-college, Oxford. The reverend Thomas C. Coxe is the preſent incumbent, and one of the repreſentatives of the clergy in the houſe of convocation.

Ninety-ſix acres of arable, and between twenty and thirty of paſture, belong to the glebe.

The church is handſomely pewed, and hath two croſs ailes and a low tower. There was a ſtatue of a prieſt in his robes, in a niche in the ſouth wall of the chancel, ſuppoſed to be for the founder of the church, but it is now taken away.

There is a piece of ground given to adorn the church, which lets for 22*s.* a year.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

On the table of a handſome monument, in the ſouth aile, is this inſcription:

Here lyeth y^e^ Body of Tho: Rich, Eſq; one of y^e^ M^rs^ of y^e^ High Court of Chauncery, who married Anne one of y^e^ daught. & Coheires of Tho: Bourchiere of Barneſley Eſq^ir^: by whom he had Ten Sonnes, Tho: Will: Edw: Sam: Jo: Robt: Ewſtace: Hen: Antho: & Cha: & Five daught^rs^: Bridget, who marryed Jo: How, Baronet, Suſan who married Edw: Bathurſt Baro: Mary who married Giles Dowle, Gent. & Anne & Anne who died younge. On another monument, in the ſame aile, is a memorial for Thomas Rich, gent. who died in 1704-5, and Suſannah his wife, daughter of Edward Nott, of Bradon, with their arms, i. e. 1ſt, Rich, as before, impaling, Azure, on a bend between three leopards heads caboſhed Or, as many martlets gules, for Nott.

Three

There were 42 houſes and about 190 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 16 were freeholders; yearly births 6, burials 5. Atkyns. Examining the pariſh regiſter, I find, that in a ſeries of ten years, from 1700 to 1709 incluſive, there were 58 baptiſms and 43 burials; and in the ſame number of years, from 1760 to 1769, both incluſive, there were 99 baptiſms and 82 burials. And the number of inhabitants is 384, ſomething more than 46 to 1 of the average of the annual burials.

CERNEY, (SOUTH.)

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Crowthorn and Minety, four miles ſouth from Cirenceſter, four north-weſtward from Cricklade in Wiltſhire, and twenty-one ſouth-eaſtward from Glouceſter. The river Churn runs through it, and empties itſelf into the Thames at Cricklade. The pariſh conſiſts chiefly of meadow and paſture, with ſome rich arable. The meadows are greatly improved by turning the river water over them in the winter ſeaſon, which invigorates the ſoil, and inſures a plentiful crop every year, without manure; which I mention, becauſe the method is not generally uſed, nor even heard of in many parts of the kingdom.

The name is explained under the preceding pariſh, and more largely under Cirenceſter.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book are the following particulars: 'Walter [the ſon of Roger] holds Cernei in Gerſdones hundred. There are fourteen hides, and one yard-land. Archbiſhop Stigand held it. In demean are two plow-tillages, and twenty-five villeins, and a prieſt, and nine bordars, with ten plow-tillages. There are four ſervi, and a hundred acres of meadow, and there were three mills of 30*s*. [rent.] It was worth 16*l*. and is now worth 12*l*.'

'This manor was claimed by the church of St. Mary of Abendone, but all the county teſtified that Stigand the archbiſhop held it ten years when king Edward was living. Earl William gave this manor to Roger the ſheriff, father of Walter.' Domeſday-book, p. 77.

'Radulf [de Todeni] holds Omenie and Cerney in Gerſdones hundred, and Roger holds them of him. There are four hides. Four thanes held them for four manors, and they could go where they would. In demean are ten plow-tillages, and one villein, and nineteen bordars. There are twenty-one ſervi, and a mill of 5*s*. and thirty acres of meadow. It was worth 10*l*. and is now worth 6*l*.' Domeſday-book, p. 76.

There are, at preſent, three manors in this pariſh, whereof the largeſt belonged to the barons of St. Amand. Guy de St. Amand was poſſeſſed of eſtates in South Cerney, Wick, and Cirenceſter, which came to William St. Amand, and were purchaſed of him by Almarick de St. Amand, governor of St. Briavel's caſtle, and warden of the foreſt of Dean. Ralph de St. Amand, ſon of Almarick, married Aſceline, one of the heireſſes of Robert d'Aubeny, baron of Caynho in Bedfordſhire, and dying 30 H. 3. was ſucceeded by his ſon Almarick de St. Amand, who died ſeized of South Cerney 14 E. 1. Guy, his ſon and heir, left no iſſue, but Lucia, his wife, ſurviving him, was endowed with a third part of the manor of South Cerney.

Almarick de St. Amand, brother of Guy, was the next heir, and was ſummoned as a baron to parliament 28 E. 1. but he dying without iſſue, was ſucceeded by John de St. Amand, his brother, who was educated in the civil law. He was alſo ſummoned as a baron to parliament 2 E. 2. and died ſeized of South Cerney and Cerney Wick 20 E. 2. Almarick de St. Amand was ſon and heir to John. He and his wife Joan levied a fine of the manor of South Cerney to the uſe of themſelves and the heirs of their bodies, the remainder to the right heirs of Almarick, 4 E. 3. He was conſtituted juſtice of Ireland 31 E. 3. and was made knight of the Bath in 1400. He died 4 H. 4. leaving two daughters, Elianor, by Ida his firſt wife, and Ida, by Elianor his ſecond wife.

Elianor, his eldeſt daughter, was married to Gerhard Braybrook. They left three daughters, whereof Elizabeth, the eldeſt, was married to William Beauchamp, ſon of Walter Beauchamp of Powyk, and grandſon to John lord Beauchamp. He was created lord St. Amand, and ſummoned to parliament 27 H. 6. and died 35 H. 6. But it does not appear that he was poſſeſs'd of this manor; for Richard de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, died ſeized of South Cerney 17 H. 6.

The above Richard de Beauchamp had three daughters, of whom Elizabeth, the youngeſt, was married to George Nevile, lord Latimer. Richard lord Latimer, grandſon and heir of George, died ſeized of the manor of South Cerney and Cerney Wike 22 H. 8. and livery thereof was granted the ſame year to John lord Latimer, his ſon, who died 34 H. 8. He left a ſon John, who had livery granted to him the next year. He married lady Lucy, daughter to Henry earl of Worceſter, and died 20 Eliz. leaving four daughters coheireſſes, who had livery granted to them the ſame year. Lucy, the third daughter, was married to ſir William Cornwallis, who, in her right, was ſeized of this manor in the year 1608. Thus it appears that the chief manor of South Cerney and Cerney Wike continued, by deſcent, in the ſame family above four hundred years.

Afterwards it came to ſir Nevil Pool, who ſold it to ſir Edward Atkyns, from whom it deſcended to ſir Robert Atkyns; and he ſettled it on his ſon ſir Robert Atkyns, who ſold away the greateſt part to divers freeholders, and the remaining part was veſted in Mr. John Jones.

Richard

Richard Jones, eſq; was his ſon, whoſe truſtees ſold it in chancery to Henry Cook, Edward Dewe, and John Jones, in ſurvivorſhip. Dewe dying, Cook and Jones conveyed their rights to their reſpective ſons, and William Cook, ſon of Henry, purchaſed of Richard Jones, ſon of John, his ſhare of the manor. He died, and left it by will to his mother, Amy Cook, who is the preſent proprietor, and holds court-leet, but there are no copyholders belonging to the manor.

The priory of Lanthony near Glouceſter was ſeized of another manor in this pariſh, and had court-leet and waifs 15 E. 1. Upon the diſſolution of religions foundations, this manor was granted to William earl of Southampton and his heirs male 31 H. 8. The ſame manor, and the tithes of the demeans, were granted to William Fitz-Williams and Arthur Hilton 7 E. 6. who conveyed it to George Carlton the following year; and he ſold it, in 1556, to Francis Wye. Another Francis Wye gave it to his niece Iſabel, wife of William Gower, eſq; in 1653; whoſe ſon John Gower ſold it to John Jones, eſq; in 1677: His grandſon John Jones, eſq; is the preſent lord of this manor, who has a good houſe and large eſtate in this pariſh, and in other parts of the county. His arms are, Ermine, a chevron humetty ſable. The above manor is free from tithes.

The third manor was granted by the crown to the dean and chapter of Briſtol, and is now in leaſe to Thomas Buſh, eſq; who has a good houſe and good eſtate here, and in other parts. He holds a court-baron, but no court-leet. His arms are, Argent, a horſe rampant ſable, in chief three croſſes pattee gules.

Of the other eſtates the records ſhew, that Philip de Ferlege gave all his lands in Cerne to the priory of Bradenſtoke. Dugd. Bar. Lands in Cerney Wike belonged to the priory of Ferley in Wiltſhire, and were granted to Alexander Staples and John Lovel 16 Eliz.

Halſtone-bridge is half in Cerney and half in Chelworth in the pariſh of Cricklade, and each pariſh ſupports its reſpective part. Halſtone-farm is wholly in Chelworth.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Cirenceſter, worth 130*l.* a year. Walter, the ſheriff of Glouceſter, ſon of earl Roger, gave the church of Cerney, with the tithes thereof, to the monks of St. Peter's at Glouceſter, in the reign of king Henry the Firſt. The biſhop of Worceſter appropriated this church to the abbey of Glouceſter, and ſettled the allowance to the vicar, in the year 1327. After the diſſolution of religious foundations, the rectory and advowſon of the vicarage were granted to the biſhop of Glouceſter, by the charter of foundation of that ſee. The biſhop of Glouceſter is patron and impropriator; and the reverend Mr. Anſelm Jones the preſent incumbent. The impropriators, ever ſince the reign of king Charles the Second, have augmented the living with 11*l.* a year.

The chapel of Halſtone, formerly called Cerney Milonis, was annexed to this church. Atkyns.

The church conſiſts of the nave and one aile, with a handſome ſpire ſteeple, and five bells, at the weſt end. It is dedicated to All Saints. No monument of note.

Here was a cuſtom, which prevailed 'till lately, of ſtrewing coarſe hay and ruſhes over the floor of the church, which is called Juncare; and the lands which were ſubject to provide thoſe materials, now pay a certain ſum of money annually, in lieu thereof.

There is no account when the donation was made; but it muſt have been ſeveral ages ſince, if tradition may be credited, that a very antient flat ſtone in the church-yard, with half-length figures of a man and woman, is for the donor and his wife.

At the beginning of this century there were 120 houſes and about 500 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 60 were freeholders; yearly births 15, burials 14. Atkyns. But by the entries in the pariſh regiſter, it appears, that in ten years, from 1731 to 1740, both incluſive, there were 188 baptiſms and 105 burials; and in the ſame number of years, beginning at 1760, there were 215 baptiſms and 161 burials. The preſent number of houſes is 247, and of inhabitants 806; ſo that population is conſiderably increaſed, and about 1 in 50 dies every year.

CHARFIELD.

THIS is a ſmall pariſh in the upper diviſion of the hundred of Grumbaldſaſh, ſix miles diſtant north from Chipping-Sodbury, three miles weſt from Wotton-under-edge, and twenty-three ſouth-weſt from Glouceſter.

It is very difficult to fix the etymology of the name, if ſir Robert Atkyns was not right in his conjecture, that it was ſo called from being the field where Cerdic or Cirdic obtained a victory over the Britons.

Tafarn-bath,

Tafarn-bath, corruptly from bâch, conſiſting of a little ale-houſe and another cottage, at the croſsing of the two roads on the borders of this pariſh, claims our notice for its antiquity. The name is Britiſh, and ſignifies a little ale-houſe, which ſhews that there was a houſe of entertainment there, as long ſince as it was uſual to give Britiſh names to places in this country.

The greateſt part of the pariſh is paſture, with ſome arable. It is ſeparated from Kingſwood by a ſmall brook, which runs down to Berkeley.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'Gozelinus Brito holds Cirvelde, in Bacheſtanes 'hundred, of the king. Elfelt held it of king 'Edward. There are three hides. In demean are 'two plow-tillages, and four villeins, and ſeven 'bordars, with four plow-tillages. There are 'four ſervi, and a mill of 10*s*. [rent] and eight 'acres of meadow; a wood half a mile in length 'and breadth. It was worth 4*l*. and is now 'worth 40*s*.' Domeſday-book, p. 79.

The Mayſeys, or Maſſeys, were lords of Charfield in the reign of king Henry the Third. John de Mayſey granted this manor to Robert le Veel, who was ſeized thereof, and of court-leet and free warren, 15 E. 1. This record implies ſome reconveyance, and ſhews that Charfield did more antiently belong to the Veels. Sir Peter, ſon of ſir Peter le Veel, married Cicely, daughter and heir of John Mayſey, (or Maſſey, as he is called elſewhere) with whom he had the manor of Charfield 4 E. 3. and held the ſame 17 E. 3.

Sir John Berkeley, ſon of ſir Thomas Berkeley, by Catherine, daughter of ſir John Clivedon of Charfield, knight, and widow of ſir Peter le Veel of Tortworth, was ſeized of the manor of Charfield 6 H. 6. But John Veel was ſeized of it 36 H. 6.

Sir Maurice Berkeley of Beverſtone held Charfield 38 & 39 H. 6. and 14 E. 4.

Robert Stanſhaw, eſq; was ſeized of this manor 12 E. 4. and John Stanſhaw, and Humphry his brother, levied a fine of lands in this pariſh 12 H. 7.

William Berkeley was ſeized of this manor in the reign of king Richard the Third, and granted it to ſir Thomas Brugge and his heirs male, in taille, 1 R. 3.

This manor, ſoon after, paſſed to the Throckmortons of Tortworth. Thomas Morgen levied a fine of lands in Charfield, Huntingfeild, and Oldbury, to the uſe of Thomas Throckmorton 3 Mar. and upon his death, livery of the manor, and of a moiety of the advowſon, was granted to Thomas Throckmorton, his ſon, 9 Eliz. Sir William Throckmorton was lord of it in 1608. It paſſed afterwards into the name and family of Hicks, and is now the property of lieutenant colonel Brome, of the royal regiment of artillery. Colonel Brome's arms are, Sable, three ſwans Or, a creſcent for difference.

The manor of Charfield was held of the honour of Glouceſter 21 E. 3.—10, 16, & 22 R. 2. and 4 H. 4. by one knight's fee; and it is now reputed to be within the juriſdiction of the court of that honour.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkeſbury, worth 150*l*. a year. Mr. Richard Tyndale[1] is patron and incumbent. The rector hath 20*l*. a year out of Micklewood-chace, and no lands in the pariſh are free from tithe.

The church conſiſts of the nave, and an aile on the north ſide, with a low tower at the weſt end.

There were 30 houſes and about 145 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 10 were freeholders, when ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his Hiſtory; yearly births 5, burials 4. Atkyns. In the courſe of ten years from 1759, there are regiſtered 48 baptiſms and 42 burials, and the inhabitants are upwards of 200; ſo that the number of living is to the annual burials, nearly as 50 to 1.

CHARLTON ABBAT's

IS a very little pariſh in the lower part of Kiftſgate hundred, five miles diſtant north-eaſt from Cheltenham, two ſouthward from Winchcombe, and thirteen north-eaſt from Glouceſter.

Charlton, from the Saxon ceopl, ſignifies the country-man's town; and being part of the poſſeſſions of the abbey of Winchcombe, occaſioned the additional name, to diſtinguiſh it from another Charlton in this neighbourhood.

A rivulet riſes in this pariſh, whoſe head is called Tinning-Well, and running directly north, empties itſelf into the Severn. Another ſpring, riſing near it, runs ſouthward into the Thames.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

'The church of St. Mary of Wincelcumbe 'holds Cerletone in Greteſtanes hundred. There

[1] Mr. Tyndale's family came into Glouceſterſhire about the time of king Edward the Fourth, and, for ſome time, paſſed by the name of Hitchens, to avoid the reſentment of party, having been concerned in the diſputes between the houſes of York and Lancaſter; but when thoſe diſputes were ended, they re-aſſumed their proper name. For their arms, ſee North Cerney.

'are two hides free and quit [from tax.] In 'demean is one plow-tillage, and four villeins, 'and two bordars, with four plow-tillages. There 'are six ſervi, and a mill of 20*d*. [rent] and two 'acres of meadow. It is worth and was worth '20*s*.'. Domeſday-book, p. 71.

The abbat of Winchcombe purchaſed a charter of free warren in Charleton 35 H. 3. which privilege was allowed him in a writ of Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. And the church of Winchcombe continued in poſſeſſion of this manor 'till the diſſolution of that houſe.

After the diſſolution, it was granted by the crown to Henry Tracy of Toddington, 7 E. 6. ſoon after which, it was purchaſed by John Carter, eſq; whoſe deſcendant Eſtcourt Carter, eſq; ſon of Cornelius, a younger ſon of John Carter, ſon of another John, who was the ſon of the firſt purchaſer, is the preſent lord of the manor, and has a good eſtate here and in Oxfordſhire. His arms are blazoned under Aſton Blank.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Winchcombe. It is an impropriation, ſubject to the payment of 10*l*. a year to the curate. There is no ſettled incumbent; but divine ſervice is performed once a fortnight, by ſome neighbouring clergyman. Mr. Aylworth left 800*l*. to purchaſe land for the augmentation of Charlton Abbats, Cold Salperton, Sevenhampton, and Compton Abdale, out of which the curate of this church receives about five guineas a year. There was an attempt to procure the queen's bounty, but the income being now improved to upwards of 10*l*. a year, the truſtees would not allow it.

The tithes of this pariſh belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe, and were granted to ſir Thomas Seimour 1 E. 6. after whoſe attainder, they were again granted by the crown to John Huſſey and John Haward 20 Eliz. The impropriation is now the property of Edward Carter, eſq. The demeans of the manor are tithe free.

The church is ſmall and very ruinous. The inhabitants bury at Winchcombe, except thoſe who bury in the church.

CHARLTON KING's

LIES in the hundred of Cheltenham, one mile diſtant eaſtward from the town of that name, ſeven ſouth from Winchcombe, and eleven eaſt from Glouceſter.

Charlton is explained under the preceding pariſh, from which this is properly diſtinguiſhed by the additional name of King's, becauſe at the Norman conqueſt it was part of the demeans of the crown.

This pariſh conſiſts of rich paſture and arable, with ſome woodland. It is watered by three brooks which unite here, and drive ſeveral corn-mills; and is very advantagiouſly ſituated under the Lechampton hills, which ſecure it from the eaſterly winds.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

As this was a member of the great manor of Cheltenham, at the time of the conqueſt, it was included in the general account of that manor in Domeſday-book. In the ſubſequent records, we find a manor deſcribed by the name of Aſhley, alias Charlton King's, as tho' thoſe two names were really and ſtrictly proper to the ſame place; whereas the manor of Aſhley doth not comprehend the whole of Charlton, but is a manor holden of, and lying within the manor of Cheltenham; and Charlton, and Bafford in Charlton, are parcels of the ſame manor of Cheltenham, diſtinct from, and far more extenſive than Aſhley.

Charles prince of Wales, afterwards king Charles the Firſt, was lord of the manor of Charlton. James-Lenox Dutton, eſq; is the preſent lord of this manor.

Walter de Eſheley took his name from the manor of Aſheley in this pariſh, and was ſeized of part of Charlton 30 H. 3. Petronella Mareſchal held the manor of King's Charlton 54 H. 3. but this is to be underſtood of Aſhley only, which was given her in free marriage by Walter de Eſheley.

This manor belonged afterwards, for many deſcents, to the family of the Grevils, who enjoyed ſeveral eſtates in the pariſh of Cheltenham, and other parts of Glouceſterſhire. Thomas Rawlins and his wife levied a fine of lands in Charlton, Gineton, Preſbury, and Cheltenham, to William Grevil and William Baynham, 9 H. 7. Francis Grevil levied a fine of Charlton King's, alias Aſhley, 3 E. 6. Giles Grevil and Arthur Parker were owners of this manor in the year 1608.

The manor of Aſhley, alias Charlton King's, came afterwards to Mr. Edward Mitchel. It is now the property of William Prinn, eſq; who has a good houſe and a good eſtate in this pariſh. His arms are, Or, a feſs engrailed between three eſcallops azure,

Mr. Whithorn has alſo a good houſe and good eſtate in this pariſh.

Of the other eſtates the records ſhew, that Richard Forſter levied a fine of a moiety of lands in Charlton and Ham, to John Walſh and others, 12 H. 7.

HAMLET. Ham is a hamlet in this pariſh, about half a mile from the church. Richard Grevil levied a fine of the manor of Ham, and of lands lands in Charlton King's, 3 E. 6. Ralph and Richard Goderick levied a fine of lands in Ham and Norfield, to Robert Bidle 3 E. 6.

An act of parliament was paſſed 1 C. 1. intitled, An Act for the ſettling and confirming copyhold eſtates, and cuſtoms of the tenants in baſe tenure, of the manor of Cheltenham, com. Glouc. and of the manor of Aſhley, otherwiſe Charlton King's, in the ſaid county, being holden of the ſaid manor of Cheltenham, according to an agreement thereof made between the King's Moſt Excellent Majeſty, being then Prince of Wales, Duke of York, and Earl of Cheſter, lord of the ſaid manor of Cheltenham, and Giles Greville, eſq; lord of the ſaid manor of Aſhley, and the ſaid copyholders of the ſaid ſeveral manors: The ſubſtance of which act is given under Cheltenham.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Winchombe. It was antiently a chapel to the church of Cheltenham, of which the rectory, formerly belonging to the abbey of Cirenceſter, was granted by the crown to ſir William Rider 7 Jac. It is an impropriation belonging to the earl of Eſſex. The curate is nominated by Jeſus college Oxford, and approved by the heir of ſir Baptiſt Hicks, exactly in the ſame manner, and under the ſame limitations preſcribed for Cheltenham. He receives 35*l.* a year out of the impropriation. Mr. Bedwell is the preſent incumbent. Here is no houſe for the miniſter.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It is a flat building, with an aile on the ſouth ſide. It has a handſome ſquare embattled tower with pinnacles, and ſix bells in it, ſtanding in the middle, and there are two chapels on the north and ſouth ſides of the tower, making together the form of a croſs.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

There is a neat pyramidal marble monument in the north chapel, with this inſcription.

HEREUNDER lye the Remains of Mrs. ELIZABETH PRINN, late the Wife of William Prinn, Eſq; and eldeſt Daughter of Thomas Ridler, late of Edgworth, in the County of Glocester, Eſq; who departed this Life March 5th, 1771, aged 31 Years. ALSO of Mrs. ELIZABETH HUNT, Daughter of the above named William Prinn, and Elizabeth Prinn, who was Married to Dodington Hunt, of the Inner Temple, London, Eſq; and departed this Life Auguſt 10th, 1772, aged 24 Years and Six Months. —— At bottom are theſe arms, Or, a feſs engrailed between three eſcallops azure, for Prinn.

In the chancel there is the following inſcription upon an oval braſs plate:

SAMUEL COOPER of this Pariſh, Gent. died the 13th of May, 1743; who by Will gave to the Truſtees under mentioned, and to their Succeſſors his Truſtees for ever, the Rents of his Grounds in the ſame Pariſh, called Cutham Butts, and Battle Downs; for buying Books, and teaching ſix poor Children of this Pariſh to read two years, at the End of which Time ſix others, to be choſen by the ſaid Truſtees, with the Privity of the Churchwardens. Gale, Gent. —— At botton, on a ſcutcheon, Vert, a tortoiſe palewiſe proper.

Againſt the north wall of the chancel is a memorial for ſeveral of the family of Brereton, and theſe arms, Quarterly, 1ſt and 4th, Argent, two bars ſable. 2d and 3d, Sable, a bend argent, charged with three lozenges of the field.

There is an inſcription upon a ſtone in the church for Winifrid, wife of James Ingram, and at top are her arms, A croſs lozengy between four roſes. The colours not expreſſed.

There is a tomb in the church-yard, with a memorial for Mrs. Margaret Rich, daughter of Ed. Rich, of Dowdeſwell, eſq; buried Sept. 2, 1692. And the arms of Rich, (as under North Cerney) impaling, A chevron charged with three ſtags heads caboſhed, between as many lozenges. No colours expreſſed.

Benefactions.

There are lands of the value of 12*l.* a year given for the repair of the church, and for the relief of the poor. Mr. Alexander Packer gave 100*l.* to the poor. And ſmall donations from ſeveral perſons amount to 70*l.* which is made a ſtock for the uſe of the poor.

For Mr. Cooper's donation for teaching poor children of this pariſh to read, and for buying fuel for poor families, ſee Inſcriptions.

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, when he compiled his Hiſtory, there were 102 houſes in this pariſh, and about 550 inhabitants, whereof 60 were freeholders; yearly births 16, burials 15. But it appears by the pariſh regiſter, that in ten years from 1700, there were 125 baptiſms and 153 burials, but in four of thoſe years there was a great mortality in the pariſh, which carried off 88 perſons, being about 40 more than died in four common years. In ten years, from 1760, there were 147 baptiſms, and 107 burials; ſo that the annual average of burials is 10.7, and the number of inhabitants is about 458. From the ſtate of the pariſh regiſter, it ſeems that ſir Robert Atkyns's eſtimate of the inhabitants was too high; and from a compariſon of the baptiſms in thoſe diſtant periods, it may be concluded, that population is rather increaſing here.

CHEDWORTH.

THIS pariſh lies in the coteſwold country, in the hundred of Rapſgate, four miles ſouth-weſt from Northleach, ſeven northward from Cirenceſter, and about ſixteen eaſtward from Glouceſter.

Leo ſignifies the brow or deſcent of a place, and porð a village, which is exactly deſcriptive of the preſent ſituation of the houſes in this pariſh, moſt of which ſtand on the declivity of two hills, facing each each other, with the river Coln running between them, in its courſe to Coln Deans, Coln Rogers, Coln Aldwins, and Fairford, a little below which it empties itſelf into the Thames.

This place gives the title of baron to the Right Honourable Henry-Frederick How, third lord Chedworth, whoſe father, John How, was created baron of Chedworth in the county of Glouceſter, by letters patent, dated May 12, 1741.

John Chedworth, biſhop of Lincoln in the year 1471, is ſuppoſed to have been a native of this place.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

What is advanced by ſome writers, that Burgred king of Mercia, about the year 854, gave fifteen hides in Chedanwyrd on the hills to the monaſtery of Glouceſter, whilſt Gaffe was abbeſs thereof, ſeems to be a miſtake: For Eva, the laſt abbeſs of that monaſtery, died in 768; and afterwards, in the wars between king Egbert and the Mercians, the nuns abandoned the monaſtery, which became deſolate, and ſo continued 'till the year 821. Beornulph king of Mercia then repaired it, and beſtowed part of its former poſſeſſions for the maintenance of ſecular prieſts, whom he had placed there. And king Burgred, in the year 862, confirmed to them the lands which had been given them. See p. 131.

This manor ſtands under the title Terra Regis, in Domeſday-book, and, at the time of the Norman conqueſt, was part of the demeans of the crown.

'Wlward held Cedeorde in Reſpiet hundred. 'There were fifteen hides including the wood, the 'plain, and the meadow; and ſeven plow-tillages 'in demean, in the time of king Edward; and 'ſixteen villeins, and three bordars, with ſix plow-'tillages, and three mills of 14*s.* 2*d.* and the toll 'of the ſalt which came to the [king's] hall. The 'ſheriff added eight villeins and three bordars, 'having four plow-tillages.'

'Of theſe two manors [Cedeorde and Alvredin-'tvne] the ſtewards paid what they pleaſed in the 'time of king Edward. They now pay 40*l.* of 'white money, of which twenty is in ora. Earl 'Roger held it.' Domeſday-book, p. 69.

Earl Roger was ſtiled Roger de Bellemont, and was earl of Mellent. He ſettled this manor on Henry de Newburg, a younger ſon, who was afterwards created earl of Warwick by king William the Second, and died ſeized of Chedworth 23 H. 1. He was ſucceeded by his ſon Roger earl of Warwick, who married Gundred, daughter of earl Warren, and died 18 Steph.

William earl of Warwick, ſon and heir of Roger, dying 30 H. 2. without iſſue, was ſucceeded in title and eſtate by Walerond his brother, who married Margaret, daughter of Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford. His ſecond wife was Alice, daughter of John de Hercourt; which Alice, upon the death of her huſband 6 Joh. had Chedworth aſſigned to her in dower.

Henry earl of Warwick, ſon of Walerond, died ſeized of the manor of Chedworth 13 H. 3. Thomas earl of Warwick, his ſon, married Ela, ſecond daughter of William Long Eſpee, earl of Saliſbury, natural ſon to king Henry the Second, by Fair Roſamond, and died without iſſue 26 H. 3. Ela, his widow, was ſeized of the third part of the manor of Chedworth in dower 36 H. 3.

John de Pleſſets, or Placetis, married Margery, ſiſter and heir to Thomas earl of Warwick. He was in great favour with king Henry the Third, who made the match, and obliged the lady to ſettle her whole eſtate on him for life, altho' ſhe ſhould have no children by him. He held two parts of the manor of Chedworth in right of his wife, 27 H. 3. and afterwards had the title of earl of Warwick; but ſhe having no iſſue, the manor deſcended to the Beauchamps. For Walerond, the before mentioned earl of Warwick, beſides his ſon Henry, had a daughter Alice, or Eliſia, married to William Manduit de Hanſlape, the king's chamberlain. They had iſſue William and Iſabel. William Manduit, in right of his mother, upon failure of the former line, was created earl of Warwick; but he died 52 H. 3. without iſſue, whereby his ſiſter Iſabel became his heireſs. She was married to William Beauchamp.

William de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, ſon of the laſt William, by his wife Iſabel Manduit, died ſeized of the whole manor of Chedworth 52 H. 3. of which the third part had been reſigned to him by Ela, the widow of Thomas earl of Warwick.

At this time the manor began to be divided, for Patrick de Chaworth, the fourth of that name, marrying Maud, daughter of the above William Beauchamp, had with her the third part of it, of which he died ſeized 11 E. 1. And Henry earl of Lancaſter marrying Maud de Chaworth, his daughter and heir, was ſeized, in her right, of the third part of the manor of Chedworth 1 E. 3. which deſcending to Henry duke of Lancaſter, was given, with the manor of Kempsford, and other lands, to Newark hoſpital at Leiceſter, which he had founded.

But William de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, ſon of the before mentioned William, died ſeized of the reſidue of the manor of Chedworth 26 E. 1. and was ſucceeded by Guy earl of Warwick, his ſon and heir, who was twenty-ſix years old at his father's death. Guy was ſeized of the manor of Chedworth, which he held of the king in capite, by one knight's fee, and had in demean 200 acres of arable land, worth 2*d.* an acre, and not more, becauſe it was hill country land; eight acres of meadow, worth 1*s.* 6*d.* an acre; and 200 acres of wood, the underwood of which was worth 30*s.* and not more, becauſe it was common. This abſtract from the eſcheator's inquiſition ſerves to ſhew the value of land at that time. He died 9 E. 2. and left Thomas earl of Warwick his ſon and heir, then only two years old; who married Catherine, daughter of Roger lord Mortimer, and died of the plague at Calais, ſeized of

Chedworth,

Chedworth, 43 E. 3. He was ſucceeded by Thomas de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, his ſurviving ſon and heir. He had taken up arms againſt king Richard the Second, and was attainted, and his eſtates forfeited, whereupon this manor was granted to John Montacute, earl of Saliſbury; who afterwards endeavouring to reſtore the ſame king, and being taken priſoner at Cirenceſter, and there beheaded by the townſmen, 1 H. 4. this eſtate was reſtored to Thomas de Beauchamp, who died ſeized of Chedworth 2 H. 4.

Richard de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, ſucceeded Thomas his father, and married Iſabel, the only ſurviving heireſs of the Diſpencers, who were heirs to the Clares earls of Glouceſter, and died ſeized of Chedworth 17 H. 6. Henry his ſon was created duke of Warwick, and died ſeized of this manor 23 H. 6. He left Anne, his only daughter and heireſs, an infant, who dying ſoon after, the inheritance came to Anne, ſiſter to Henry duke of Warwick; but the manor was aſſigned to Cicely dutcheſs of Warwick, his widow, in dower, 25 H. 6. This laſt Anne married Richard Nevil, earl of Saliſbury, who, in her right, was alſo earl of Warwick, and was often called the Make-King, from his great power and influence, in the reign of king Henry the Sixth. He was ſlain in Barnet field, fighting againſt king Edward the Fourth. Anne, his widow, had two daughters by him, coheireſſes to her vaſt eſtate; and becauſe ſhe had taken part in the deſigns of her late huſband, her eſtate was taken from her by an act of parliament 14 E. 4. and was ſettled on her two daughters, of whom Iſabel, the elder, was married to George duke of Clarence, brother to the king; and Anne, her ſiſter, was married to Richard, duke of Glouceſter, afterwards king Richard the Third.

George duke of Clarence, in right of Iſabel his wife, died ſeized of the manor of Chedworth 8 E. 4. and left Edward Plantagenet, the laſt heir male of that line, his ſon and heir; who by court contrivances, was attainted and beheaded, 15 H. 7.

King Henry the Seventh pretending the injuſtice of diveſting Anne dutcheſs of Warwick of her large inheritance, procured another act of parliament, in the beginning of his reign, to re-inſtate her, and then artfully prevailed with her to ſettle that great inheritance on him and his heirs, to the diſinheriſon of the iſſue of her own daughters, after this manor had been in the ſame family, by lineal deſcent, nearly five hundred years.

The manor of Chedworth continued in the crown till it was granted to John Dudley, earl of Warwick, afterwards duke of Northumberland, 1 E. 6. He being attainted 1 Mar. the manor reverted to the crown, and was granted to ſir Edward Unton. Sir John Tracy was lord of the manor of Chedworth in the year 1608.

This manor went afterwards to ſir Richard Howe, of Compton; from whom it deſcended to John How, eſq; of Stowell, ſometime one of the knights of the ſhire for the county of Wilts, who in 1741, was created baron of Chedworth; and lord Chedworth, who reſides at Stowell, in this county, is the preſent lord of the manor.

The other part of the manor of Chedworth, which had been given by Henry duke of Lancaſter to the hoſpital at Leiceſter, continued in the poſſeſſion of that hoſpital 'till the general diſſolution of religious foundations. Theſe lands were called Dean-lands, becauſe the dean and chapter of Leiceſter were intruſted with them for the uſe of the hoſpital, and were granted to John earl of Warwick 2 E. 6. upon whoſe attainder they were again granted to Erſkin earl of Marr, 1 Jac.

John Atwood was ſeized of a tenement in Chedworth called Woodland, 3 H. 4. And Thomas Mines levied a fine of lands in Chedworth to Simon Hercourt and others 23 H. 7.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Cirenceſter, worth about 70*l.* a year. It is in the gift of Queen's college, Oxford. The reverend Mr. Rawys is the preſent incumbent. The advowſon was given by William Fitz-Oſborn, earl of Hereford, ſoon after the conqueſt, to the abbey of Lyra in Normandy. Afterwards William de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, granted the advowſon to the abbey of Eveſham 2 E. 1. And the advowſon and impropriation both belonged to the priory of Bethleem at Sheen in Surry, who preſented in the year 1489. The impropriation was given by Hugh Weſtwood, eſq; towards the maintenance of a free grammar-ſchool at Northleach. The impropriation pays 16*s.* 2*d.* a year to the crown.

The vicar hath a third part of all tithes, twelve acres of paſture in eight cloſes, two yard-lands and a half of arable land, 150 ſheep-paſtures, and three half acres of land on a hill, where was a chapel dedicated to St. John. The chapel has been long ſince demoliſhed, and there are aſh-trees growing on the ſpot, which bear the name of St. John's Aſhes, and are to be ſeen at a great diſtance.

The vicarage-houſe is a very good one, built by the preſent incumbent.

The church hath a low tower, with five bells, at the weſt end.

At the beginning of this century, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 150 houſes, and about 500 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof almoſt 40 were freeholders; yearly births 13, burials 11. But it appears by the regiſter, that in ten years, from 1700, there were 153 baptiſms, and 110 burials; and in the ſame number of years, from 1760, the baptiſms were 234, and the burials 168. There are now 181 families, and 787 inhabitants. And the proportion of the living to the average number of perſons buried annually, is nearly as 47 to 1.

The following particulars came to hand not 'till after the former part of this account was printed, which prevented their being inſerted in the uſual place.——About the year 1760, a perſon ſinking a ditch, diſcovered a Roman bath, at Liſtercombbottom in this pariſh. It was ſupported by pillars of brick, round and ſquare alternately, of about nine or ten inches diameter, and the floor was alſo of brick. All the bricks were mark'd ARVIRI in Roman capitals, about two inches long, which I read, A ROMANIS VIRIBVS. There was a ſpring, and a ciſtern to receive the water; and many other things in the bath, which the perſon deſtroy'd, and could give but little account of. He uſed moſt of the bricks in building an oven, but the late doctor Shaw had a perfect one, which is preſerved amongſt his curioſities. This place lies about two miles on the north-weſt ſide of the Roman Foſs, and very probably there was a ſummer ſtation of that people at Chedworth. On the hill, a little above the bath, is a large tumulus, which had a huge, rough ſtone ſet upright on the top of it, ſuppoſed to be raiſed by the Britons or Saxons. Not long ſince, ſome of the farmers removed the ſtone with a double team of oxen, and ſo expoſed great quantities of human bones lying near the top of the barrow.

CHELTENHAM

IS a market-town within the hundred of its own name. It lies ten miles eaſt from Glouceſter, fifteen north from Cirenceſter, nine ſouth from Tewkeſbury, and a hundred weſt from London; from all which places there are turnpike roads leading to this town. The market is on Thurſday.

Chylt, or Cylt, in the Anglo-Saxon language, ſignifies clay. Some, however, have ſuppoſed Chilt to be the proper name of the brook that riſes at Dowdeſwell, and runs by this town, which they think took denomination from it; but I know not upon what grounds that ſuppoſition is founded. In ſhort, little can be ſaid with certainty of the derivation of the name of this place; but according to the firſt acceptation of the word Cylt, it ſignifies a village or town of clay; perhaps ſo called from the buildings being firſt made of earth or clay, before our Saxon anceſtors had learnt the art of brick-making; for it is pretty generally allowed, that after the Romans left Britain, that art and many others were loſt. But the Saxons had opportunities of improvement during the reign of king Alfred, who ſent for builders and artificers of almoſt every kind, from countries where they were more ſkilful.

The town conſiſts of one handſome ſtreet, near a mile long. The buildings are chiefly of brick. It is ſituated on the border of a fine fertile vale, about two miles from Cleeve, Preſbury, and Leckhampton hills, which join the Coteſwolds, and forming a kind of ſemi-circle, defend the town from thoſe cold blaſts which proceed from the eaſtern quarter.

As the pariſh is large, the ſoils are various: On the eaſt is a very looſe, white ſand, weſtward a ſtrong clay, ſouthward a fine rich loam, and in other parts a mixture of loam and ſand. The air is healthy, and the water not ſo hard, nor ſo fully charged with calcareous earth, as Dr. Lucas has repreſented it; for the inhabitants, and all who viſit them, uſe it for every common purpoſe, notwithſtanding they might have the brook water with little trouble.

Here is no manufacture carried on, but the women and children of the poorer ſort ſpin woollen yarn, for the clothiers about Stroud.

On an eaſy aſcent, about half a mile ſouthward of the church, in a loamy ſoil, riſes the Cheltenham Spaw, which firſt drew the public attention about the year 1740. What led to the diſcovery of its virtues, was an obſervation made by ſeveral perſons, that flocks of pidgeons reſorted to the ſpring, to eat a white ſalt, caſually made from the water by the heat of the ſun. And it had alſo been obſerved, that in hard, froſty weather, when other ſprings were frozen, this water continued fluid. Upon trial, it was found to be cathartic. It then roſe in a ſlow, obſcure ſpring, and ran upon the ſurface of a paſture ground. Mr. Maſon became the proprietor of it, by purchaſing the field in the year 1718, and firſt made a well, and erected a ſhed over it. In the year 1738, Mr. Henry Skillicorne purchaſed the premiſſes, built a dome over the well, and erected a large handſome room for the convenience of company. About this time, Dr. Short, who was then ſearching after all the mineral waters in the kingdom, viſited this place, and made experiments on the water, which are publiſhed in his Eſſay towards an experimental Hiſtory of Mineral Waters. Many other eminent phyſicians have alſo, at various times, examined and recommended it, which eſtabliſhed its reputation, and brought it into uſe.

The late ingenious Dr. Lucas found it pretty clear, colorleſs, but not the moſt perfectly bright. It had hardly any remarkable ſmell, and taſted ſaline, bitteriſh, and ſlightly vitriolic. It may be rather ranked among the diſagreeable, then the agreeable to the palate. Eſſay on Waters, Part 2.

Dr. Rutty concludes, not only from his experiments made with this water, but alſo from the experience of thoſe who have uſed it, that it gives a keen appetite, is ſucceſsful in the gravel, effectual in ſcorbutic humours, and will cure old ſcorbutic ulcers, even in the legs, tho' of twenty years ſtanding; is a remedy in eryſipelaſes, ſtrumous inflammations of the eyes, and thoſe tormenting pains of the hips and lumber muſcles which proceed from a lodgment of hot ſcorbutic ſalts; and that it is, at leaſt, of equal efficacy with the Alford waters, in bilious cholics, and other diſorders of the primæ viæ.

Dr. Short gives it the preference to all waters of the ſame kind yet diſcovered in England, and indeed, excepting Stoke water, it carries the greateſt proportion of ſalt in the ſame volume.

I ſhall conclude my account of it, in the words of Dr. Lucas, taken from his Eſſay already quoted. In obſtinate obſtructions and ſcurvies, in cold phlegmatic conſtitutions, thoſe [waters] impregnated with iron muſt be, as experience ſhews them, the moſt effectual. Of theſe it is very remarkable, that purging with them is rarely, if ever, attended with any degree of dejection: for while the ſalts diſſolved in the waters purge, the mineral ſpirit, charged with iron, warms and invigorates the whole frame. In theſe the peaſants commit extraordinary exceſs, without feeling any ſenſible ill effect. I have ſeen old men drink Cheltenham water by the quart, without number or rule. Upon enquiring their intention and method, they have anſwered, they had drank them on ſuch days and holidays for upwards of thirty years. They ſaid they had no diſorders; but they reckoned it wholeſome to clean their bodies, and they had no rule, but to drink 'till the water paſſed clean through them. Yet I have not been able to diſcover any ill effects from this ſtrange practice.

Pleaſant gravel walks lead from the town to the ſpaw, where, between rows of elms, that give a moſt delightful ſhade, is a walk more ſpacious than the reſt, upwards of two hundred yards long, and twenty foot broad. At convenient diſtances from the town, are many agreeable airings upon the hills, which afford extenſive views of the vale below.

Here are aſſemblies and public breakfaſtings, as at other places of like reſort. The ſeaſon is from May to October, but there is moſt company in the months of June, July, Auguſt, and part of September.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book this manor ſtands under the title Terra Regis, where it is thus recorded:

'King Edward held Chintenham. There were 'eight hides and a half. Reinbald holds one 'hide and a half which belongs to the church[k]. 'There were three plow-tillages in demean; and 'twenty villeins, and ten bordars, and ſeven ſervi, 'with eighteen plow-tillages. The prieſts [have] 'two plow-tillages. There are two mills of 11*s.* 'and 8*d.* King William's ſteward added to this 'manor two bordars, and four villeins, and 'three mills, of which two are the king's, the 'third is the ſteward's; and there is one plow-'tillage more. In the time of king Edward it 'paid 9*l.* and 5*s.* and three thouſand loaves for 'the dogs. It now pays 20*l.* and 20 cows, and 20 'hogs, and 16*s.* inſtead of the bread.' D. B. p. 67.

The town of Cheltenham belonged to Henry de Bohun earl of Hereford 1 John. who exchanged it with that king for other lands; and king Henry the Third granted the manor and hundred to William Long Eſpee, earl of Saliſbury, in the third year of his reign; who died poſſeſſed thereof, and was ſucceeded by his ſon William earl of Saliſbury, who had his eſtates ſeized for going out of the kingdom without the king's licenſe.

This manor was granted in dower to queen Elianor, daughter of the earl of Provence, 27 H. 3. and according to the records, the biſhop of Hereford was ſeized of it in the thirty-firſt year of the ſame reign.

The abbey of Fiſchamp in Normandy purchaſed the manors of Cheltham and Sclaugtre, and the hundreds of Cheltham and Salemaneſberie, with free warren, by exchange of lands in Winchelſea and Rye in Suſſex, 36 H. 3. and their right to thoſe and other great privileges which they enjoyed therein, was allowed 15 E. 1. And they obtained the king's licenſe to ſell thoſe manors and hundreds the 18th year of the ſame reign.

John Limel died ſeized of this manor 2 E. 2. which I apprehend he held by leaſe only. It afterwards belonged to the priory of Montburg in Normandy; but the lands of alien monaſteries being veſted in the crown, by act of parliament, 2 H. 5. the manor and hundred of Cheltenham were granted to the nunnery of Syon in Middleſex; and for the further confirmation of the title, Maud, the abbeſs of that houſe, levied a fine thereof 22 H. 6. and they had another confirmation 1 E. 4. In the fourth year of the ſame reign, ſir Maurice Berkeley of Beverſtone held the ſame, as it is ſuppoſed, by leaſe from the abbeſs of Syon; for that nunnery was poſſeſſed of the manor of Cheltenham at the time of its diſſolution, when it came to the crown. Charles prince of Wales, afterwards king Charles the Firſt, was lord of it.

James-Lenox Dutton, eſq; is the preſent proprietor of this manor, which came into the Dutton family by grant from the crown.

There was a court of pleas, called the three weeks court, held by the ſteward of the manor, for the recovery of debts of any amount; but this court hath been long diſuſed. By an act of parliament 1 C. 1. it is enacted, that the deſcent of the cuſtomary lands ſhall be from thenceforth in fee ſimple, according to the rules of common law; ſaving only, that if any copyholder of the ſaid manor, ſhall dye without iſſue male, having daughters, the eldeſt daughter ſhall inherit ſolely, as the eldeſt ſon ought to do by the courſe of the common law; and that if any of the ſaid cuſtomary lands or tenements ought, according to the courſe of the common law, to deſcend to any ſiſters, aunts, or female couſins, in every ſuch caſe, the eldeſt ſiſter, aunt, or female couſin, ſhall inherit the ſame lands and tenements ſolely and alone.

Of the other eſtates, the records ſhew that John Cheltenham died ſeized of lands in Cheltenham near Arle, 33 E. 3.

The abbey of Cirenceſter were owners of a mill and other lands in Cheltenham when that houſe was diſſolved, which particulars were granted to Peter Oſborn 3 Eliz. and were probably thoſe mentioned in Domeſday-book to be held by Reimbald, or the two plow-tillages which occur afterwards in the abſtract quoted from that record.

Here are five fairs held on the following days, i.e. on the ſecond Thurſday in April.—Holy Thurſday.—St. James's day O. S.—Second Thurſday in September.—Third Thurſday in December.

HAMLETS. There are five hamlets in this pariſh, beſides the town, viz. 1. Arle.—2. Alſton.—3. Weſtal.—4. Naunton.—5. Sandford; of which in their order.

1. Arle lies about a mile from the town, down an eaſy deſcent. On the ſouth ſide of the road leading from Cheltenham to this place, on the left hand, is a ſpring of purging water, riſing perpendicularly in the middle of a ditch, filled up with ſludge and weeds, where the common water ouzes, and runs into and mixes with it, wherefore no juſt eſtimate can be made of the quantity of its fixt parts. However, according to Dr. Short, it contains nitre and alcaline earth. The ſalt is full as bitter and purging as that of the laſt. [i.e. the Hyde water. See Preſbury.] This water is neither ſo clear, pleaſant, nor briſk as the other, becauſe of its mixture with the ditch-water. Its ſalt is alſo much different, being not calcarious, but the ſame with Aſtrope, both in colour and cryſtals.

Arle-court antiently belonged to a family that took their name from this place; and from them this eſtate came to the Grevils, by the marriage of Robert Grevil, brother of judge Grevil, with the daughter and coheireſs of John Arles. One of the female heirs of the Grevils carried it by marriage into the family of Liggon; and in like manner it came to ſir Fleetwood Dormer, by the marriage of one of the Liggons. Judge Dormer was the proprietor of this eſtate ſome time ſince the beginning of this century, who was ſucceeded therein by Mrs. Catherine Dormer, lately deceaſed. The honourable Mr. John Yorke, (brother to the late earl of Hardwick) who married the only daughter of Reginald Lyggon, of Maddersfield in Worceſterſhire, eſq; is the preſent proprietor. There is a tithingman to this hamlet.

2. Alſton, of which there is nothing obſervable, except that it hath a tithingman diſtinct from the other hamlets.

3. Weſtal. Thomas Phillips was ſeized of Arle-Weſtal, Cheltenham-Arle, and Hardhurſt 6 E. 4.

4. Naunton, from Nant, which in the Britiſh language ſignifies a valley, and ſometimes a brook. Francis Grevil levied a fine of lands in Naunton and Cheltenham, to the uſe of Thomas Barret and John Willis, 3 E. 6. Sir Henry Capel and Anne his wife levied a fine of lands in Naunton and Alſton, to John Ilk and Richard Horwood, 3 Mar.

5. Sandford, ſo called from the ſandy ſoil, and the ford or paſſage over the brook. Thomas Dingley and Philippa his wife were ſeized of the manor of Sandford, and of lands in Cheltenham. George Barret married their only daughter Elizabeth, who jointly ſued out livery of thoſe lands 9 H. 8. One tithingman ſerves for Weſtal, Naunton, and Sandford.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Winchcombe. It is an impropriation formerly belonging to the nunnery of Syon, but immediately before the diſſolution of monaſteries, it belonged to the abbey of Cirenceſter, and was granted to ſir William Rider 7 Jac. A portion of the tithes belonged to the nunnery of Uſk in Monmouthſhire, which tithes were granted to John Fernham 22 Eliz. The impropriation is now the property of the earl of Eſſex. Jeſus College in Oxford recommends three of its own fellows to the heir of ſir Baptiſt Hicks, anceſtor of the preſent earl of Gainſborough, who chuſes one, to be the parſon, and preſents him to the biſhop. The miniſter is only a ſtipendiary, receiving 35*l.* a year of the impropriator.

The college derive their title from ſir Baptiſt Hicks, and by agreement between them, the incumbent muſt not continue longer than ſix years. The miniſter has ſurplice fees. Here is no parſonage houſe.

The church is built in the form of a croſs. It has a high ſpire in the middle, with a ring of eight muſical bells, and a ſet of chimes. There is a ile on each ſide of the church. The gallery at he weſt end was built by Mrs. Anne Norwood, n the year 1628; the other was erected by the ubſcription of the inhabitants.

Here is a lecture ſermon, by ſubſcription, in he afternoon.

Thomas George, in the year 1620, gave by his will 3*s.* 4*d.* a year to the poor, and the ſame ſum to the miniſter for a ſermon, the payment of which is charged on lands now belonging to Mr. Robert Cox.

John Wallwyn, by his will in 1627, gave 2*l.* 10*s.* a year for ever to the poor of this town, charged on the manor of Swindon.

In 1667, divers charities aſſigned for the benefit of the poor, and for putting out apprentices, were laid out in the purchaſe of lands called the poors grounds, at that time worth 8*l.* 5*s.* a year; but they are now let at the improved rent of 18*l. per annum.*

In the year 1704, the reverend William Stanſby, vicar of Badgworth, left an eſtate at Badgworth, which lets at 14*l.* a year, for apprenticing boys, of which that pariſh is to have 5*l.* Churchdown 3*l.* and Cheltenham the overplus.

The following are donations of a leſs permanent nature. In the year 1603, Lodovick Packer, gent. gave the third bell.—In 1721, lord viſcount Gage gave a fire-engine, and the ſame year ſir John Dutton, baronet, gave another.—1738, Edmund Smith, ſurgeon, gave a large, handſome braſs ſconce for the church.—1741, Norborne Berkeley, eſq; gave a crimſon velvet pulpit-cloth and cuſhion.

According to an account publiſhed in the year 1712, there were 321 houſes in this pariſh, and about 1500 inhabitants, whereof 200 were freeholders; the yearly births 48, burials 44; which appear to be the true numbers for the baptiſms and burials upon the pariſh regiſter, on an average of ten years beginning at 1703. And in a like ſeries of years, from 1760 to 1769 incluſive, the births were 455, and the burials 368, or 45 baptiſms and 37 burials, nearly, upon an average every year; and the inhabitants are about 1433. Hence it appears that population decreaſes, and that one in about 39 dies every year.

CHERINGTON.

THIS pariſh is ſituated in the country adjoining to the Coteſwolds, and lies in the hundred of Longtree, about three miles diſtant north from Tetbury, three ſouth-eaſtward from Minchin-Hampton, and ſixteen ſouthward from Glouceſter.

Sir Robert Atkyns aſſerts that the name is derived from Kinning, that is King's town; but there is not, in my opinion, the leaſt ſhadow of probability on his ſide. In Domeſday-book it is written Cerintone, where the C had undoubtedly a hard ſound. And as Lenne in the Anglo-Saxon language ſignifies bent or crooked, and ing a meadow, or place of water; ſome perſons have thought that the name implies a town upon a crooked ſtream of water; for here is a ſmall brook which runs in a winding courſe from hence to Avening, and Stroud, where it joins another river, a little below the town. It is by means of this water, that the preſent undertakers of the Stroud navigation purpoſe to join their canal with the Thames at Cricklade, if they ſhould ſucceed to their wiſhes, in the firſt ſtep to Stroud.

In the great civil war, ſo fatal to many families of eminence and diſtinction, John lord Stuart, ſecond brother to the duke of Richmond, ſir John Smith, the colonels Sandys, Scot, and Manning, all eminent perſons on the part of the king, were ſlain on the downs in this pariſh, in an engagement which happened between lord Hopton and ſir William Waller, when the parliament's forces, under the latter, obtained the victory on the 29th of March, 1644.

Petrifications of the bivalve kind, as of the oiſter, and muſcle, are often found in the fields and ſtone-quarries, in this pariſh and its neighbourhood.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

This was one of the eighty-eight manors beſtowed upon Miles Criſpin, by the conqueror, for his aſſiſtance in the expedition againſt England.

'Milo [Criſpin] holds Cerintone in Langetreu 'hundred, and Goisfrid holds it of him. Haminc 'held it of king Edward. There are two hides 'taxed. In demean are three plow-tillages, and 'three villeins, and eight bordars with three plow-'tillages and a half. There are twelve ſervi, and 'a mill of 30*d*. [rent] and four acres of meadow. 'It is worth and was worth 4*l*.' D. B. p. 78.

This Miles Criſpin married Maud, daughter and heir to Robert D'Oiley, and died 7 H. 1. without iſſue. The manor was afterwards held by the priory of Lanthony, of Edward earl of Cornwall, as of the honour of Wallingford 15 & 28 E. 1.

But Peter de la More, or de la Mere, was ſeized of this manor 20 E. 1. and Robert de la More was alſo ſeized of it 2 E. 2. About this time ſir Robert Atkyns ſuppoſed that the Balacotes and the Mortimers held this manor; but their eſtate lay in Charlton in Tetbury, which he had miſtaken for Cherington.

Beatrix le Boteler was ſeized of the manor of Cherington 32 E. 3. Elianor le Boteler held the ſame 46 E. 3.

It came again into the poſſeſſion of the De la Mores, for ſir Robert de la More and Maud his wife were ſeized of this manor 5 R. 2. and Maud ſurviving him, was ſeized thereof 6 H. 4.

Sir Walter Beauchamp was ſeized of the manor and church of Cherington 9 H. 6. and ſir William Beauchamp of St. Amand, a baron, died ſeized of the ſame 35 H. 6.

This manor paſſed afterwards to the Baintons. Sir Edward Bainton was ſeized thereof in right of Iſabel his wife. She ſurviving him, was married to John Stump, and died ſeized of the manor 10 Eliz. and livery was granted the ſame year to Henry Baynton her ſon and heir. It paſſed from this family into that of the name of Stephens.

Thomas Stephens, eſq; was lord of this manor in the year 1608. Edward Stephens, eſq; was lord of it when ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his Hiſtory. It went afterwards to ſir John Turner, baronet; who ſold it to —— Smith, eſq; of London, who is the preſent lord of the manor of Cherington, and has a very good eſtate in the pariſh.

This manor is holden of the honour of Ewelm. The ſeat of Ewelm, lying a ſmall diſtance from Benſon in Oxfordſhire, was built by William de la Pole, duke of Suffolk, whoſe grandſon, John earl of Lincoln, being engaged in a conſpiracy againſt king Henry the Seventh, his eſtate was confiſcated; and king Henry the Eighth, with the addition of ſome neighbouring manors, made an honour of it; and among theſe manors was Wallingford, which had a long time belonged to the dukes of Cornwall, of whom, it has been obſerved, the manor of Cherington was holden.

Lands in Cherington belonged to the rich nunnery of Benedictines at Godſtow, in Oxfordſhire, and were granted to John Smyth and Richard Duffield 6 Eliz.

HAMLET. 1. Weſtrip is a ſmall hamlet in this pariſh.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory in the deanery of Stonehouſe, worth about 130*l*. a year. Mr. Smith is patron, the reverend Samuel Lyſons, M. A. the preſent incumbent.

There were 61 acres in the weſt field, and 5[illegible] acres in the eaſt field, belonging to the glebe before the incloſing, at which time the rector had 330 acres of land allotted to him in lieu of tithes.

The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. It has a croſs aile on the ſouth ſide, belonging to the lord of the manor, and a low embattled tower at the weſt end.

According to ſir Robert Atkyns, there were 30 houſes and about 120 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 6 were freeholders; yearly births 5, burials 4. But it appears by the pariſh regiſter, that in ten years, from the year 1700, there were 37 baptiſms, and 33 burials; and that in the ſame number of years, beginning with 1760, there were regiſtered 51 baptiſms, of whom 30 were males, and 54 burials. At this time the exact number of houſholders is 78, and of inhabitants 358. But during the latter period, there were two years of great mortality in the pariſh, which carried off 17 more than the greateſt number of burials in any other two years during that period; and making a deduction on that account, the average number of annual burials will be 3.7; which is in proportion to the whole number of inhabitants nearly as 1 to 43.

CHURCH-DOWN

IS a pariſh in the hundred of King's-barton, ſituated in the vale part of the county, ſix miles diſtant weſt from Cheltenham, nine ſouth from Tewkeſbury, and four eaſt from Glouceſter.

The church ſtands at the top of a ſteep ſugar-loaf hill, whence there is a very extenſive proſpect over the vale, particularly up as high as Worceſter. There is a ſilly tradition in this part of the country, that the church was begun to be built on a more convenient and acceſſible ſpot of ground, but that the materials uſed in the day, were conſtantly taken away at night, and carried to the top of the hill; which was conſidered as a ſupernatural intimation that the church ſhould be built there. The pariſh takes its name from the ſituation of the church upon the hill or down. It is vulgarly called Choſen, and few of the common people know the proper name of it.

The ſoil is rich, and the pariſh conſiſts chiefly of paſture, but with a good portion of arable. A ſmall brook runs from hence, and empties itſelf into the Severn at Sainthurſt.

John Harmar, the famous Greek profeſſor in Oxford, was born in this pariſh. He died in 1670.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

In Domeſday-book, this manor ſtands under the title Terra Thome Archiep'i, the eſtate of Archbiſhop Thomas; and it is thus recorded:

'Stigand the archbiſhop [of Canterbury] held 'Circeſdune. There were fifteen hides and a half, 'and two plow-tillages in demean, and eighteen 'villeins, and five bordars, and ſeven radecheniſters 'with thirty plow-tillages. There was a wood 'half a mile long, and three quarters broad. It 'was then worth 13*l.* [i. e. when Stigand held the 'manor;] and is now worth 12*l.* Afterwards follow the particulars of Hochilicote and Nortune, and then it is ſaid 'Archbiſhop Thomas now holds 'theſe three manors.' Domeſday-book, p. 69.

Thomas was archbiſhop of York; he was found by inquiſition to be ſeized of this manor 7 Joh. And a Quo warranto was brought againſt him, as againſt almoſt every other proprietor of lands, 15 E. 1. to ſet forth the privileges of this manor.

The temporalties of the archbiſhop of York were extended 14 E. 3. amongſt which was the manor of Church-Down; but it was afterwards reſtored, and continued in the archbiſhoprick till it was granted to ſir Thomas Chamberlain 6 E. 6. and hath ever ſince continued in that family. Sir John Chamberlain was lord of this manor in 1608; Edmund Chamberlain, eſq; died ſeized of it in the year 1774, and the reverend Mr. John Chamberlain, is the preſent lord of the manor. For his arms, &c. ſee Maugerſbury.

The principal eſtate in Church-Down, late belonging to Henry Window, eſq; is now the property of Mr. Richard Rogers, of Glouceſter.

John de Oldney, and Agnes his wife, levied a fine of lands in Church-Down, Nokey, and Hucklecot, to the uſe of themſelves in taille, 3 E. 3.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. Church-Down, of which already.

2. Hucklecot,

2. Huckelcot, antiently written Hochilicote, and Uchelgoed. The name is compounded of two Britiſh words Uchel, lofty, and coed a wood. Here was a large wood at the time of the conqueſt; and not only in this place, but in ſeveral of the neighbouring villages there was a great deal of woodland, as the very names of Bernewood, or Barnwood, Wotton [i. e. wood-town] and Sainthurſt, import.—This is a diſtinct tithing from Church-Down, and maintains its own poor.

It was alſo a diſtinct manor at the time of the general ſurvey, tho' under the ſame proprietor with Church-Down.

'The ſame Stigand held Hochilicote. There 'were four hides, and in demean two plow-'tillages, and eleven villeins, and five bordars with 'eleven plow-tillages. There is a mill of 32*d.* '[rent,] and a wood one mile long, and half a 'mile broad. It was then, and is now, worth 4*l.*' Domeſday-book p. 69.

When this record was made, the manor was held by Thomas archbiſhop of York, and continued in the ſee of York, 'till it was granted to ſir Thomas Chamberlain 6 E. 6. It has deſcended in the ſame manner, and ever had, and ſtill continues to have, the ſame proprietor with Church-Down.

The abbey of Eveſham had an eſtate in Hudlecot and Bartram, which has been called a manor, and was granted to Philip Hobby, eſq; 34 H. 8. and paſſed afterwards to —— Hanks, from whom it deſcended to Robert Hanks, who had livery thereof 1 Eliz.

The priory of St. Oſwald in Glouceſter had other lands in Hucklecot, called the New Houſe, which were granted to John Fernham and John Doddington 17 Eliz.

Sir William Strachan, baronet, has a good houſe here, which he holds by leaſe of Samuel Hayward, eſq. Sir William married one of the daughters and coheireſſes of —— Popham, of the Lodge, near Tewkeſbury, eſq.

The reverend Mr. Rogers, of Glouceſter, to whoſe family I am greatly indebted for ſome papers relating to that city, has a good houſe and eſtate here. His arms are Argent, a chevron ſable, between three bucks courant Or.

3. Pirton or Parton, and Elmbridge. This is a hamlet, but not a diſtinct tithing. There is another hamlet of the name of Pirton, in the pariſh of Lidney, which has occaſioned ſome confuſion and miſtake in the accounts which ſir Robert Atkyns gives of them. He has applied the ſame records to both places. Thus he ſays, John de Badeham and Elizabeth, his wife, levied a fine of the manor of Periton to John de Knovil, to the uſe of themſelves, and the heirs of their bodies, the remainder to the heirs of Elizabeth 25 E. 1. In the ſame year, another fine was levied by John Ap Adam and Elizabeth, his wife, to the uſe of themſelves, in tale ſpecial. And further on, Maurice, ſon of Thomas de Berkeley, held Piriton 42 E. 3. Upon which I obſerve, that John de Badeham and John Ap Adam, is the ſame identical perſon; for Badeham is a corruption of Ap Adam, and therefore the ſuppoſed two fines are one and the ſame, levied by the ſame perſon. And I am of opinion that Pirton, the property of Ap Adam, and afterwards of Maurice Berkeley, lay not in this pariſh, but in Lidney, where the Gournays, Ap Adams, and Berkeleys, (all deſcendants from Fitz-Harding, the great anceſtor of the Berkeley family) had other very conſiderable poſſeſſions, about the times of the dates above-mentioned.

But to return to Pirton in Church-Down. This manor belonged to the priory of St. Oſwald in Glouceſter, and was probably given to it in very early times. Upon the diſſolution of that houſe, it was granted to ſir John Jennings 37 H. 8. who had obtained the grant of the ſite of the priory before he was knighted. From him it deſcended to —— Jennings, ſon of ſir John, who dying without iſſue 5 Mar. it deſcended to John Wighte, or Wright, in right of Agnes his wife, who was daughter and heireſs to Joan the wife of Robert Kemp, which Joan was daughter of the laſt mentioned —— Jennings, ſon of ſir John Jennings. John Wighte and Agnes, his wife, had livery of this manor the ſame year. And Richard Wighte their ſon, died ſeized of the manor of Perton, alias Parton, as I find it written in the Eſcheator's inquiſition, 43 Eliz. and deviſed it in truſt, to be ſold, to raiſe portions for his children. Lord Craven is the preſent lord of this manor. This is not a diſtinct tithing. William Singleton, eſq; has a good eſtate at Parton.

4. Brickhampton. This is a reputed manor. The prior of Glouceſter was ſeized of Trithampton 19 E. 1. which I mention, not as being certain that this manor is the Trithampton of the record, but becauſe I find it thus expreſs'd by ſir Robert Atkyns. John Sage granted 100 ſolidatas of land in Brickhampton, to the abbey of Hayles, 6 E. 2.

This manor belonged to ſir Robert Atkyns of Saperton, at the beginning of this century; and is now the joint property of the reverend Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Hoard.

5. Noke. John de Oldney and Agnes, his wife, levied a fine of lands in Nokey 3 E. 3. John de Wiſham was ſeized of Noketon 6 E. 3. This is now the eſtate of Samuel Hayward, eſq;

Of the Church, &c.

This church is an impropriation in the deanery of Glouceſter. It was a chapel to St. Catherine's alias St. Oſwald's, in Glouceſter 19 E. 1 & 2 H. 7. The rectories, with the advowſon of the vicarages of Church-Den and Hucklecot, belonged to the priory of St. Oſwald's at Glouceſter, and were granted to the dean and chapter of Briſtol 34 H. 8. who are the patrons and impropriators. The leſſee of the impropriation pays the curate 20*l.* a year year. The reverend Mr. Evans is the preſent incumbent. The living has been augmented with queen Anne's bounty, added to a donation of 200*l.* given by Mrs. Urſula Taylor, which makes it now worth about 50*l.* a year.

The church conſiſts of the nave and an aile on the ſouth ſide, with a tower and five bells at the weſt end.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

Here are no very remarkable monuments. Againſt the ſouth wall of the chancel is this inſcription.

Here lyes Sir Robert Auſten, Bar^t. of Hall Place, near Dartford in Kent, of an antient Family. He was honeſt and generous. He died September the 20th, 1743, in the 43^d year of his age. His arms are on a ſcutcheon, Or, a chevron gules, between three lions paws erazed and erected ſable. The arms of Ulſter.

On a tomb in the church-yard, is the following inſcription, with four lines out of Horace. Ode 3. lib. II.

Hoc Sepulchro in diem reſurrectionis reconditur corpus Dni Iohīs Brown ſen. hujus Paroch. qui ex hac vita migravit 21°. Feb. Anno Dni 1689, Ætatis ſuæ 72°.

There is a memorial upon two flat ſtones under the ſouth wall of the church, for Henry Windowe, Eſq; who died in 1745-6, aged 63; and for Sarah his wife, who died in 1759, aged 60.——Mr. Windowe's arms are engraven on the ſtone, i. e. Azure, a feſs raguly between three lions paws erazed and erected Or.

Benefactions.

Mr. Cox of Sandhurſt gave 50*l.* a year to the poor of ſeveral pariſhes, of which thoſe of this pariſh, not receiving alms, have 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*——Blount, gentlewoman, gave five acres of paſture ground, incloſed in Hatherly meadow, for ſuch poor labourers and widows of this pariſh as receive no alms. Richard Holford, gent. gave four almſhouſes, with three acres and a half of arable land, and one acre of paſture, for the uſe of four poor widows of this pariſh. William Ranſby, gent. gave 3*l.* a year for apprenticing out poor boys. And Jeremiah Mitchell, gent. gave 40*s.* a year to provide bread and wine for nine monthly ſacraments.

Henry Windowe, eſq; late of this pariſh, gave an eſtate in Badgworth, now let for 80*l.* a year, for the endowment of two charity-ſchools; the one for inſtructing all poor boys and girls of this pariſh, and of Badgworth, upwards of ſix years of age, in reading and writing, under a maſter; the other for inſtructing younger boys to read, and girls to read, knit, &c. under a miſtreſs. And he gave two houſes in this pariſh, for the maſter and miſtreſs to live in.

But it appears by the pariſh regiſter, that the average of annual burials, in ten years from 1700, was 7, of baptiſms 13.1. And in the like number of years, from 1760, the average of baptiſms was 16.8, of burials 13.2. The preſent number of houſholders is exactly 131, of inhabitants 630. Theſe numbers ſhew that the place is remarkably healthy for a vale-ſituation, as only one in 47.8, upon an average, dies every year; and that population increaſes very conſiderably.

CHURCHAM

LIES in the foreſt diviſion, in the hundred of Weſtbury, eight miles eaſt from Mitchel-Dean, ſeven north-eaſt from Newnham, and five north-weſtward from Glouceſter. There are three hamlets belonging to it, which lie in a different hundred.

Hamme was the antient name of it, as we find it written in Domeſday-book. But there was another Hamme mentioned in the ſame record, which lay contiguous to the firſt. The vicinity of two places of the ſame name occaſioned confuſion, wherefore it was requiſite to diſtinguiſh them. The pariſh church lay in the Hamme of which I am now treating, and was therefore called Churcham. The other Hamme lay higher up, on the banks of the Severn, wherefore it obtained the name of Highnam. This diſtinction had taken place 9 E. 1. for in that year, the ſheriff returned Chircham to be a vill in the hundred of Weſtbury, but Highnam was one of the vills in the hundred of Dudſton.

Of the Manors and other Eſtates.

Wolphin, or Ulfine le Rue, or Lehue, was conſul or governor of Glouceſter in the fifth year of the reign of king Canute. He was alſo lord of the two manors of Hamme. At the inſtigation of Wolſtan biſhop of Worceſter, king Canute turned out the ſecular prieſts from the abbey of of Glouceſter, and placed monks of the order of St. Benedict in their ſtead; but this le Rue was ſo averſe to the monks, that he ſlew ſeven of them, not far from the town, in the year 1033, or, according to another account, in 1048. The pope afterwards obliged him to attone for his offence, by giving thoſe manors for the maintenance of ſeven monks in St. Peter's abbey. I ſhall now treat of them distinctly. Domesday-book gives the following account of Churcham:

'The same church [of St. Peter of Glowec'.] 'holds Hamme and Mortune, in Westberies hun-'dred. There are five hides in wood and in plain. 'In demean are two plow-tillages, and seven 'villeins, and two bordars, with six plow-tillages. '[There is] a wood one mile long and one broad. 'The church had venison in three parks there, 'in the time of king Edward, and so she hath in 'the time of king William. It was worth 20 sol. 'and is now worth 40 sol.' Domesday-book, p. 71.

The sheriff returned, that the abbey of Gloucester was seized of this manor 9 E. 1. and free warren therein was allowed to the abbat in a writ of Quo Warranto 15 E. 1. The same abbey had a grant of eighty acres and sixty perches of land in Churcham 6 E. 3. to make a park there.

This manor continued in the abbey 'till the dissolution of religious foundations. The manor of Churcham, with the rectory, and advowson of the vicarage, as also a wood in Churcham, called Byrdewood, containing by estimation one hundred acres, were granted to the dean and chapter of Gloucester 33 H. 8. Charles Barrow, esq; one of the representatives of the city of Gloucester, and James Money, esq; are lessees of the manor, under the dean and chapter. For Mr. Barrow's arms, see Minsterworth.

Of the other estates the records shew, that Edward Barrow died seized of lands in Churcham 12 Eliz. and James, his son and heir, had livery of them the same year.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

There are three hamlets in this parish, Highnam, Linton, and Over, which lie in the hundred of Dudston and King's-Barton, and together make one tithing, and maintain their poor jointly, but distinctly from Churcham. They were antiently within the hundred of Tolangbrige, which is now comprised in Dudston and King's-Barton.

1. Highnam is two miles distant from Gloucester. Of this manor it is thus recorded:

'The church [of St. Peter of Glowec'.] holds 'Hamme in Tolangebriges hundred. There are 'seven hides. In demean are three plow-tillages, 'and twenty-two villeins, and four bordars, with 'seven plow-tillages. There are eight servi, and 'thirty acres of meadow, and wood sufficient for 'the manor. It was worth 40 sol. but is now 'worth 4 l.' Domesday-book, p. 71.

In the lease of this manor, granted by the abbat of Gloucester 7 H. 8. part of the mansion-house is reserved for the abbat and his men, if the plague or pestilence should be in Gloucester or Over.

This estate continued in the possession of the abbey of Gloucester 'till that house was dissolved, wherefore all the demean lands are tithe free. The manors of Highnam and Over, and divers messuages and lands, with the tithes thereof, lying in Churcham, all formerly belonging to the abbey of Gloucester, were granted to John Arnold of Monmouthshire, esq; 33 H. 8. at whose death livery of the manor of Highnam was granted to his son, sir Nicholas Arnold, 37 H. 8. He married Margaret, daughter of sir William Dennys of Dyrham, and was succeeded by Rowland Arnold, his son, who married Mary, daughter of John Brydges, lord Chandois, and left an only daughter and heiress, wedded to Thomas Lucy, son of sir Thomas Lucy, of Charlcot in Warwickshire.

Thomas Lucy likewise left an only daughter, married to sir William Cook, descended from the family of the Cooks of Giddy-hall in Essex. By this marriage, sir William Cook had the manor of Highnam, of which he died seized in 1616. Sir Robert Cook was son and heir of sir William. He married Dorothy daughter of sir Miles Fleetwood, of Aldwincle in Northamptonshire. William Cook, son of sir Robert, succeeded him, and married Anne, daughter of Dennis Rowls, of Devonshire. He was high sheriff of Gloucestershire in 1663, and served in several parliaments for the city of Gloucester. Dennis Cook, esq; eldest son of William, married Mary, sister of the lord Scudamore of Herefordshire; but dying before his father without issue, his brother Edward Cook, esq; succeeded to the estate. He married Mary, daughter of Roger Newborough, of Somersetshire. William Cook, esq; was his son and heir, but dying unmarried, his brother Dennis succeeded to this estate; and he dying without male issue, the estate devolved to his two sisters, agreeably to their father's will. The elder was married to Reynon Jones, of Nass, in this county, esq; and the younger to Henry Guise, of the city of Gloucester, esq; whose son John Guise, esq; is the present possessor. He has a beautiful seat at Highnam with large gardens, fish-ponds, and a very extensive park. It commands a prospect of the city of Gloucester, and of the vale. The public is indebted to his generosity for the plan annexed. Mr. Guise's arms are, Gules, seven lozenges vaire, 3, 3, 1, on a canton Or, a mullet of six points pierced sable. A crescent for distinction.

The lord of the manor of Highnam claims a very singular right, of turning two horses into the mowing grass of a large meadow near the city of Gloucester, called Wollam, from St. George's day 'till the whole is cut down.

2. Linton, but antiently Lilton, and Lyl... The tithes of this place, and the parsonage of Aldesworth, formerly belonging to the abbey of Gloucester, were granted to the bishoprick of Gloucester 33 H. 8.

3. Over. This hamlet lies on the banks of the Severn, opposite to the city of Gloucester, with which it has a communication by bridges over the several branches of that river. Over-bridge is the lowest on the Severn, and is maintained at the public expence of the county.

In sir Robert Atkyns's account of Over in Almondsbury, is the following particular, which ſeems to belong to this place. In the year 804 Ethelrick, ſon of king Ethelmund, at the requeſt of a ſynod held at Glouceſter, wherein he was preſent, granted thirty meſſuages in Overe to the church of St. Peter in Glouceſter, and confirmed the grant of his father, in the time when the canons ſecular reſided there. But there ſeems to be a miſtake in the date of this account, for it does not appear that the ſecular canons were then ſettled at Glouceſter. Lands lying in Over, which formerly belonged to the abbey of Glouceſter, were granted to Edward duke of Somerſet 1 E. 6.

Mr. Guiſe holds court leet and court baron for Highnam, Linton, and Over.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the Foreſt deanery, worth about 80*l.* a year. The dean and chapter of Glouceſter are patrons and impropriators; the reverend Mr. Edward Sparkes the preſent incumbent. The chapel of Bully is annexed to it.

The church conſiſts of the nave only, with a ſpire ſteeple at the weſt end. It is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is a chapel at Highnam, built by the family of the Cooks, ſome of whom are buried there, without any memorial. Their arms are, Or, a chevron checky gules and azure, between three cinquefoils of the laſt.

Monuments and Inſcriptions.

There is an inſcription in the church, in memory of John Arnold, eſq; and Elizabeth his wife. He died in 1546. Another inſcription for Edward Oldiſworth, eſq; and of Tacy his wife, daughter of Arthur Porter, eſq. and granddaughter of John Arnold, eſq. Mr. Oldiſworth died in 1570. In the chancel is an inſcription for John Brown, eſq; alderman of Glouceſter, and leſſee of this manor, who died in 1639. And another inſcription for Mr. John Harris, ſon of John Harris, an alderman of Glouceſter, and leſſee of this manor. He died in 1680.

There were 77 houſes and about 340 inhabitants in this pariſh, whereof 18 were freeholders, yearly births 15, burials 13, according to ſir Robert Atkyns, when he compiled his account of it. But having examined the pariſh regiſter, it appears, that in ten years, from 1700 to 1709, both incluſive, there were 118 baptiſms and 76 burials; ſo that the average about that time was very ſhort of ſir Robert's numbers. In the ſame number of years, from 1760 to 1769, both incluſive, there were regiſtered 143 baptiſms, and 78 burials, which ſomewhat exceed thoſe in the former period; and the inhabitants are at preſent about 309. From the great diſproportion between the baptiſms and burials, I judge, that many of the natives who are baptiſed here, ſettle elſewhere. This indeed might be expected from the ſituation of the pariſh ſo near to the city of Glouceſter. Beſides it lies near the river Severn, the great navigation upon which takes all perſons concerned in it from home, and is a great means of changing their ſettlements.

CIRENCESTER.

1. Of the Situation, Name, Extent, Antiquities, &c.

CIRENCESTER is a market and borough town, ſituate in Lat. 51° 13′ 30″ Long. 90 miles weſt from London. It is thirty-ſix miles diſtant eaſtward from Briſtol, and thirty-three from Bath; thirty-four weſtward from Oxford, ſeventeen ſouth-eaſt from Glouceſter, and ſeven north-weſt from Cricklade in Wiltſhire.

The pariſh, conſiſting of a due proportion of meadow and paſture, arable and woodland, is about four miles and a half long, and two and a half broad.

The town is ſituated on the borders of the Coteſwold country, in the ſouth-eaſt part of the county, where three great Roman roads meet, the Foſs, the Irminſtreet, and the Ikenild-way. It ſtands on the river Ceri, or Cori, or Corin[l], which we now call the Churn, and takes its name from that river[m]; for the Britons called it Caer-Ceri[n], and Caer-Cori[o]; in whoſe language caer, which in its genuine ſenſe ſhould be tranſlated a wall, or fortreſs, came at length, when uſed in the compo-ſition of the names of places, to ſignify a walled or fortified town.

The Roman name of this place was framed from the Britiſh; Ptolomy calls it Corinium, Antoninus Duro-Cornovium, probably from dwr, the Britiſh word for water. The latter name ſeems to be moſt expreſſive, yet both ſignify the town upon the water or river Corin.

The Anglo-Saxons, either from the Britiſh, or from the Roman name, called the town Lonneceaſtre, Lunneceaſtre[p], Lyrenceaſtre; upon which I ſhall once more obſerve, that ceaſtre is nothing more than a tranſlation of the Britiſh word caer into the Saxon language. The name of the town, as it is now written, ſtands at the head of this account, but the preſent common appellation is Ciſeter.

On a near approach to the town, there is a gentle deſcent every way, except from the ſouth. The air is ſo remarkably pure and ſalubrious, that a phyſician, who ſettled here about forty years ſince, after ſtaying a time ſufficient, as he thought, to make trial of his ſucceſs, pronounced it impoſſible for one of his profeſſion to ſubſiſt on the practice the town and its neighbourhood afforded. The water is ſufficiently pure and pleaſant, riſing in a fine gravel, about fourteen or fifteen feet below the ſurface, and almoſt every houſe has a pump.

The town conſiſts of eleven ſtreets, beſides lanes and alleys. Dyer-ſtreet, but more antiently Chipping-ſtreet, ſo called becauſe the market is held in it, is that by which you enter the town from London and Oxford. From the round ſtone at the bottom of it to the other extremity, at the croſſing of the four principal ſtreets, it meaſures 549 yards.—Cricklade-ſtreet is ſo called becauſe it leads to the antient town whoſe name it bears. From a ſtone which marks the limits of the borough on that ſide, at the bottom of the ſtreet, to the other extremity, it meaſures 360 yards.—Caſtle-ſtreet, which name was given it from its leading to the antient caſtle, is that by which you enter the town from Briſtol and Bath, and is 274 yards long.—Goſditch-ſtreet, leading from the middle of the town northward to the firſt bridge towards Glouceſter, is in length 180 yards.—Dollar-ſtreet, or in old writings, Le Foſſe, commencing at the firſt bridge, and extending to the ſecond, on the ſame road, is 190 yards long.—St. Lawrence-ſtreet, or Glouceſter-ſtreet, was ſo called becauſe the church of St. Lawrence ſtood in it, and becauſe it leads to Glouceſter. This ſtreet is 427 yards long.—Cecily-ſtreet, or Cecily-hill, took its name from the church of St. Cecilia ſtanding in it. From Groomſtole-bridge, where this ſtreet begins, to the end of it, leading to Minchin-hampton, it is 190 yards.—Black-jack-ſtreet, which leads from Groomſtole-bridge, and ſeems like a continuation of the laſt mentioned ſtreet, is in length 300 yards.——Silver-ſtreet, making the communication between Black-jack-ſtreet and Caſtle-ſtreet, is in length only 75 yards.—Thomas-ſtreet had its appellation from an hoſpital ſtanding in it, dedicated to the ſaint of that name, and, extending from Groomſtole-bridge to the bottom of Dollar-ſtreet, is 227 yards long.—Coxwell-ſtreet was ſo called from the name of a perſon of conſiderable property who lived in it; but the more antient name is Abbat-ſtreet, which was given it becauſe it led to the abbey. This ſtreet is 221 yards long.—Shoe-lane, (ſo called from the ſhoe-makers ſettling there) the Butter-row, and the Butcher-row, lie parallel to each other on the weſt ſide of the corn-market, whence the two latter lead to the high-croſs, and are 33 yards long.—Beſides theſe, there are Sheep-ſtreet-lane, on the ſouth-weſt ſide of the town; Spital-gate-lane, corruptly called Spiringate-lane, on the north ſide of it; Leauſe-lane on the ſouth-eaſt, and the Law-ditch-lane on the weſt ſide of it.

Coming into the town from Glouceſter, a great part of the ſtreet is a hollow way, in ſome places five feet deep, where a portion of the Churn water runs, and empties itſelf into one of the arms of that river at the ſecond bridge. There is a tradition that the river antiently ran through the middle of the town, which is ſtrengthened by a paſſage in Leland, who ſays, Be lykehod yn times paſt Guttes were made that Partes of Churne Streame might cum thorow the Cyte, and ſo to returne to their great Bottom. Itin. v. 5, p. 61. And not many years ſince, as the workmen were digging a vault under the ſtreet, near where the four principal ſtreets meet, at about the depth of ſix feet under the ſurface, they found ſtones ſet up edge-ways, like thoſe commonly placed in a water-courſe, for people to ſtep on. This circumſtance, I think, puts the matter out of doubt, that antiently the water ran through the town by the high croſs, and ſo down Cricklade-ſtreet, and at length joined the main river at Watermore.

There is a great deal of travelling through this place from the northern to the weſtern parts of England, and from Bath and Briſtol to London, through Oxford and Abingdon. Two ſtage-coaches paſs thro' it to London, and a third in its courſe between Bath and Oxford; which, with a great number of heavy carriages that keep their regular ſtages, open a communication between this place and Monmouthſhire, South Wales, Hereford, Glouceſter, Worceſter, Warwick, Coventry, Leiceſter, Nottingham, the Weſt, and many other places; a circumſtance ſo favourable to trade, that, next to Glouceſter, this is eſteemed the principal market-town in the county.

It has two weekly markets, on Monday and Friday. The firſt, for grain and all ſorts of commodities, is very much frequented; the other is chiefly for wool, butchers-meat, and poultry. The wool-market was once very conſiderable, 'till the dealers in that article began to travel the country, and buy their wool at the farm-houſes, which at length had this effect, that inſtead of thirty or forty waggonwaggon-loads, which uſed to be brought hither every market-day, there has been, for ſome time, ſcarcely any ſent to market; and the Boothall, where the wool was uſually depoſited, is now taken down.

Frequent oppoſitions in the borough, in chooſing their repreſentatives in parliament, have made the poor inhabitants more licentious, and leſs induſtrious, than they formerly were. Theſe circumſtances are unfavourable to manufactures, and generally prevent them from riſing to any degree of eminence. The cloathing buſineſs flouriſhed here, according to Leland, in the reign of king Henry the Eighth; but at preſent little is done in that manufacture.

The heavy edge-tools of this place are in great reputation, eſpecially thoſe knives which curriers uſe in ſhaving leather, and which find a market all over Europe and America. Wool-combing is on the decline. Carpet-making hath been lately introduced; and there are a few cheneys, harrateens, and light ſtuffs manufactured. But ſtocking frame-knitting, which was ſet on foot about forty years ſince, lies at the laſt gaſp, under many diſadvantages, and is only kept from expiring by the cordial influence of a very large eſtate, which was charitably intended to promote ſome conſiderable manufacture here. The principal buſineſs is woolſtapling and yarn-making, for which the town is well ſituated, near the cloathing country.

This is called an antient city, and, according to the opinion of ſome perſons, of ſo high antiquity as to have been built by the Britons, before the Roman invaſion. But that the Britons had then any cities or towns, in the ſenſe we now underſtand thoſe terms, is a notion very contrary to the teſtimony of antient authors, of the greateſt credit as to that matter. Cæſar indeed, in his book De Bello Gallico, ſpeaks of their towns, but he tells us what they were; Oppidum autem Britanni vocant, quum ſilvas impeditas vallo atque foſſa munierunt: The Britons call that a town, when they have ſurrounded and fenced about their thickeſt woods with a bank and a ditch. And Xiphilin ſpeaking of the Mæatæ, or inhabitants of the now moſt northern counties of England, aſſerts, that they had neither walls nor cities; what paſſed under the name of cities in Britain, being, according to Strabo, no other than groves. Theſe authorities will ſtand their ground againſt the fond conceits and looſe conjectures of later writers; and upon this ground I ſhall venture to ſay that Cirenceſter was built by the Romans. The preciſe time of its foundation I do not pretend to aſcertain, but I apprehend it might be very ſoon after they had eſtabliſhed themſelves in Britain. Three great roads meeting at this place, rendered it the moſt deſirable ſituation for a town that can be conceived, and no doubt that circumſtance induced them to make choice of it.

Being the metropolis of the large province of the Dobuni, it was called Corinium Dobunorum, and became a very eminent ſtation for the Roman armies. Antoninus places it at the diſtance of fourteen miles from Glevum, or Glouceſter, in the thirteenth Iter from Iſca, now Caerleon in Monmouthſhire, to Calleva, which Dr. Gale will have to be Henly, the Calleva Attrebatum, or chief city of the Attrebatii, whilſt others give that honour to Wallingford in Berkſhire.

According to Brompton, and ſeveral other antient writers, this city lay in the province of Wiccia. The antient city wall was more than two miles in circumference. It was intire in the reign of king Henry the Fourth, but muſt have been razed ſoon after. Leland traced it quite round in king Henry the Eighth's time, but even then there were but few veſtiges of it remaining;

. . . . . Sic omnia fatis
In pejus ruere, ac retro ſublapſa referri. Virg.

He tells us, that 'A man may yet, walking on 'the bank of Churne, evidently perceyve the cum-'pace of foundation of towers ſumtyme ſtanding 'in the waul. And nere to the place wher the 'right goodly clothing mylle was ſet up a late by 'the abbate, was broken down the ruine of an old 'tower, toward making of the mylle waulles, in 'the which place was fownd a quadrate ſtone 'fawllen down afore, but broken in aliquot fruſtra, 'wherein was a Romain inſcription, of the which, 'one ſcantly letterd that ſaw yt, told me, that he 'might perceyve PONT. MAX. Among divers nu-'miſmata fownd frequently there, Diocleſian's be 'moſt faireſt; but I cannot adfirme the inſcription 'to have bene dedicate onto hym. In the middes 'of the old town, in a medow, was found a flore 'de teſſellis verſicoloribus, and by the town noſtris 'temporibus was fownd a broken ſhank bone of a 'horſe, the mouth cloſed with a pegge; the which 'taken owt, a ſhepard found yt fillid nummis argen-'teis. In the ſowth-ſouth-weſt ſide of the waul be 'lykelyhod hath bene a caſtel, or ſum other great 'building, the hilles and diches yet remayne. The 'place is now a waren for conys, and therin hath 'be fownd mennes bones inſolitæ magnitudinis, 'alſo to ſepulchres ex ſecto lapide. In one was a 'round veſſel of leade covered, and in it aſhes and 'peaces of bones.' Leland's Itin. v. 5, p. 65.

Dr. Stukeley viſited this place in the year 1723, and fancied that he could even then trace the old city wall quite round the town. But antiquities give way to modern improvements, and all that remains of it, at preſent, lies on the eaſt and ſouth-eaſt ſides, about half a mile in length, covered with earth and rubbiſh fourteen or fifteen feet high. A ſmall part being uncovered in 1774, it was found to be eight feet thick, built with hewn ſtone, ſtrongly cemented with lime and gravel.

A little within the old city wall, is a pretty large tract of ground called the Leauſes, now converted to garden-ground and corn-fields, where, for many ages paſt, have been found antient carvings, inſcriptions, and teſſellated pavements, with great abundance of Roman coins, rings, and intaglio's, which have been long ſince loſt or diſperſed. From theſe circumſtances, together with the name, Dr. Stukeley, with good reaſon, ſuppoſed the Leauſes to have been the Roman Prætorium, for Ilys, in the Britiſh language, ſignifies a court.

Several authors have barely mentioned theſe antiquities, but they have not tranſmitted down to us a catalogue of the coins, nor given us ſo many particulars as the ſubject deſerved: I ſhall, however, collect from them what has been written, and then ſubjoin my own particular obſervations.

Leland has left us no more than what is quoted in the preceding page.

Sir Robert Atkyns follows next in order. 'Here,' ſays that gentleman, in his account of Cirenceſter, 'are often dug up, in old foundations, 'a great many and great variety of ancient Roman 'coins. There was accidentally diſcovered, in a 'meadow near the town, an ancient building 'under ground. It was 50 foot long and 40 'broad, and about 4 foot high; ſupported by 100 'brick pillars; inlaid very curiouſly with teſſe-'raick work, with ſtones of divers colours, little 'bigger than dice: It is ſuppoſed to have been a 'bathing-place of the Romans.' This is all ſir Robert ſays, from whoſe account the reader will not very readily underſtand what part was ſo curiouſly inlaid; whether the pillars, the whole building, or (as it is moſt likely) the pavement only.

Then comes Doctor Stukeley, who has not complimented the good people of Cirenceſter on account of their taſte for works of antiquity. 'Large quantities of carved ſtones,' ſays he 'are 'carried off yearly in carts [meaning from the Leauſes] 'to mend the highways, beſides what 'are uſeful in building. A fine moſaic pavement 'was dug up here in September 1723, with many 'coins. I bought a little head, which had been 'broken off from a baſſo-relievo, and ſeems by 'the tiara, of a very odd ſhape, like fortification-'work, to have been the genius of a city, or ſome 'of the Deæ Matres which are in the old inſcrip-'tions, ſuch like in Gruter, p. 92. The gardener 'told me he had lately found a little braſs image, 'I ſuppoſe one of the Lares; but upon a dili-'gent ſcrutiny, his children had played it away. 'Mr. Richard Biſhop, owner of the garden, on 'a hillock near his houſe, dug up a vault ſixteen 'feet long, and twelve broad, ſupported with 'ſquare pillars of Roman brick, three feet and a 'half high, and on it a ſtrong floor of terras. 'There are now ſeveral more vaults near it, on 'which grow cherry-trees, like the hanging 'gardens of Babylon. I ſuppoſe theſe the foun-'dations of a temple, for in the ſame place they 'found ſeveral ſtones of the ſhafts of pillars, ſix 'feet long, and baſes of ſtone near as big in 'compaſs as his ſummer houſe adjoining, as he 'expreſſed himſelf; theſe, with corniees very 'handſomely moulded, and carved with mo-'dillions and the like ornaments, were converted 'into ſwines-troughs. Some of the ſtones of the 'baſes were faſtened together with cramps of 'iron, ſo that they were forced to employ horſes 'to draw them aſunder, and they now lie before 'the door of his houſe as a pavement. Capitals 'of theſe pillars were likewiſe found, and a 'crooked cramp of iron, ten or twelve feet long, 'which probably was for the architraves of a 'circular portico. A moſaic pavement near it, 'and intire, is now the floor of his privy vault.

'Sometimes,' continues the doctor, 'they dig 'up little ſtones as big as a ſhilling, with ſtamps 'on them. I conjecture they are counterfeit dies 'to caſt money in. We ſaw a monumental in-'ſcription' [ſee the margin] 'upon a ſtone of 'Mr. Iſaac Tibbot's, 'in Caſtle-ſtreet, in 'very large letters, 'four inches long'. 'It was found at a 'place half a mile 'weſt of the town, 'upon the north ſide 'of the Foſs-road, 'called the Querns, 'from the quarries 'of ſtone there-'abouts. Five ſuch 'ſtones lay flat-wiſe upon two walls, in a row, 'end to end, and underneath were the corpſes of 'that family, as we may ſuppoſe. He keeps 'Julia Caſta's ſkull in his ſummer-houſe, but 'people have ſtole all her teeth out for amulets 'againſt the ague. Another of the ſtones ſerves 'for a table in his garden; 'tis handſomely 'ſquared, five feet long, and three and a half 'broad, without any inſcription. Another is laid 'for a bridge over a channel near the croſs in 'Caſtle-ſtreet. There were but two of them 'which had inſcriptions; the other inſcription 'periſhed, being unluckily expoſed to the wet in 'a froſty ſeaſon, probably of the huſband. Several 'urns have been found thereabouts, being a 'common burying-place. I ſuppoſe them buried 'here after Chriſtianity.' Stukeley's Itinerarium Curioſa.

When we compare theſe accounts together, it ſeems probable that the antient building mentioned by ſir Robert Atkyns (and which ſeems to be the ſame that, according to a manuſcript which I have ſeen, was opened in 1683) was in part dug up and deſtroyed by the gardener, in Dr. Stukeley's time. What remained of it being afterwards covered over with earth, was again opened in 1780. The opening was made about ſixteen yards from a wich-elm, growing in the S. W. wall of the garden. About three feet and a half below the ſurface, the workmen came to a very ſmooth floor of terras, which they found to extend about twelve twelve feet further north-eaſtward, where it was broken down and deſtroyed. And ſinking deeper there, they came to another floor of terras, four feet five inches below the ſurface of the firſt, and running all the way under it; for they preſently diſcovered that there was a large cavity between them, and that the upper floor was ſupported by rows of brick pillars, which ſtood upon that beneath. Clearing the earth away from off the ſecond, or laſt mentioned floor, they came to a wall of hewn ſtone, riſing within about two feet of the ſurface of the ground, at the diſtance of fifteen feet from the broken edge of the upper terras, which latter, it was evident, had originally extended to this wall. Here ſeems to have been the boundary of the works on the north-eaſt ſide. Soon afterwards they came to another upright wall on the ſouth-eaſt ſide, which joined to, and made a right angle with the former. Theſe appear to be the north-eaſt and ſouth-eaſt walls of a vault, whoſe dimenſions are not certainly known, as the other two walls are deſtroyed. In each wall were obſerved five maſſy ſtones, forming the crown of an arch, the cavity of which lay almoſt intirely below the top of the ſecond terras. In order to examine theſe arches, a ſmall part of the under floor was beat up along the ſides of the walls, and at the depth of thirty-four inches, there was a third ſtrong floor of terras, running under the ſecond, the ſpace between being filled with rough ſtones, thrown together in a promiſcuous manner. This laſt ſerved as a floor to the arches, which had nothing in them but rubbiſh, and at bottom a bed of wood-aſhes about two inches thick.

A large hole was made through the ſouth-eaſt wall, about eight feet from the angle where the two walls join. This wall was found to be forty inches thick, yet it was only a partition; for on the ſouth-eaſt ſide of it was another vault, with floors and brick pillars, on the ſame level, and exactly correſponding with thoſe in the firſt-mentioned vault, but in a more imperfect ſtate.

The ground was then carefully opened from the ſurface, on the ſouth-eaſt ſide of the partition wall, about twelve feet from the angle where the two walls join, and at the depth of three or four feet, there were found vaſt quantities of flat bricks, of different ſizes, like thoſe uſed in the conſtruction of the firſt-mentioned vault, intermixt with broken funnels and other rubbiſh, but the vaulting had been totally deſtroy'd. However, the greater part of the partition wall remained, and twenty feet diſtant from the north-eaſt end of it, was an opening three feet wide, with ſquare quoins, but its height is not known, as the top was broken down. This aperture ſerved for a communication between the two vaults, and having an arch on each ſide, exactly at correſponding diſtances, (about four feet) ſeems to indicate a regular building, and makes it probable that this wall was divided into two equal parts by it, and conſequently that the whole extended forty-three feet. The arches are all upon the ſame level, and of like dimenſions, thirty-five inches wide, and thirty-ſeven from the crown to the floor, and therefore too low for door-ways.

The great ſtrength and ſtability of the vaulting are remarkable: The two lower floors of terras, with the bed of ſtones between them, were deſigned by the architect as a firm baſis to ſupport the brick pillars, and the maſſy floor that lay upon them. The upper floor of each vault is fourteen inches thick; the pillars thirty-nine inches high, and eight inches and a quarter ſquare, made of courſes of entire bricks of the ſame ſuperficial dimenſions, and about an inch and three quarters thick, except that each pillar has a large brick of eleven inches ſquare for its baſe, and another of the ſame ſize by way of capital. They ſtand in rows fifteen inches aſunder, and are covered with wide bricks at top twenty three inches ſquare, upon which the terras is laid. What now remains of the upper floor in the firſt mentioned vault, is ſupported by twenty-two pillars only, arranged in ſeven rows one way, and ſix the other; and where the pillars are deficient, the gardener has taken care to ſupport the floor with timber.

The under part of this floor, (which, as already obſerved, conſiſts of broad bricks) and all the pillars, are very much burnt, ſo that but few of the latter are perfect, occaſioned in ſome meaſure, perhaps, by the force of long continued fires; but I apprehend they have ſuffered much injury alſo by other accidents, ſuch as knocking off pieces from the ſides and angles with iron inſtruments uſed in ſtirring the fire, and placing the fewel, which muſt ſometimes have happened unavoidably. There were found diſperſed all over the ſecond floor, which I ſhall now call the hearth, a very conſiderable quantity of wood aſhes, intermixed with coals, and conſolidated into a hard maſs, by length of time and natural humidity; whence it appears ſufficiently evident, that fires have been kept burning uniformly all over the hearth, to heat the floor above, but not for the purpoſe of a bathing-place, as ſir Robert Atkyns conjectured, whoſe opinion I had adopted before I ſaw the ruins. And ſtill leſs probable is Dr. Stukeley's opinion, that 'theſe are the foundations of a temple;' but they appear very evidently, to me at leaſt, to be the remains of two Hypocauſts.

It may be obſerved, from the dimenſions of the pillars, and the diſtance by meaſurement which they ſtand from each other, that in a ſpace of 50 feet long and 40 broad, as the building formerly diſcovered is ſaid to have been when intire, there muſt have been near four times the number of them mentioned by ſir Robert Atkyns; yet as he does not pretend to have ſeen them, and as no great accuracy can be expected from hearſay accounts, I have not the leaſt doubt but theſe are the the remains of the ſame building taken notice of by the two laſt mentioned authors.

Hypocauſts, (from the Greek, ὑποκαίω, to burn under) were a kind of large, ſubterraneous ovens, which the Romans made uſe of for warming their houſes. Palladio, the great Italian architect, gives a ſhort account of them. The antients, ſays he, made a fire in a ſmall ſubterraneous vault, from which many funnels of various ſizes were carried to the ſeveral rooms in the houſe, and the heat aſcended in them in the ſame manner as it is found to paſs through the narrow neck of an alembic, one end of which, tho' very diſtant from the fire, is not leſs warm than the part neareſt to it. Thus, the heat ſo equably diffuſes itſelf into all parts, that it fills the whole houſe. This is not the caſe with chimney-hearths, near which if you ſtand, you are ſcalded; if at a diſtance, you are chilled; but where theſe pipes are carried, a mild air diffuſes itſelf around. Theſe funnels which conveyed the heat had not open mouths, ſo they did not emit flame nor ſmoak, but only a hot vapour, and perpetual warmth. A ſmall fire in the vault, provided it were continual, was ſufficient. At the mouth of the vault they dreſſed their victuals. Pots and veſſels were placed on every ſide in the walls, full of hot water, to keep their victuals warm; a very great advantage without expence, liable to no danger, no filth, nor ſmoak, and free from a thouſand inconveniencies which accompany other kinds of fires[1].

Hence it appears, that the hypocauſts of antient Rome, as deſcribed by Palladio, were ſomething different from thoſe which have been found here. For as this country is much colder than Italy, ſo the Romans in Britain found it convenient, in this cold country, to make their hypocauſts immediately under their parlours and lower rooms; and both their vaults and fires were larger than thoſe in uſe at Rome. But, probably, in all other reſpects they were alike. Many fragments of earthen funnels have been found among the ruins of our Hypocauſts, and one piece has the cavity intire, of an oblong form, ſix inches by four; and in ſeveral parts of the partition wall, particularly in the large ſtones of the arches, are a great many holes, in which were fixt, and are ſtill to be ſeen, the ends of iron hooks or ſtaples, [as may be ſuppoſed,] to ſupport the earthen funnels, and lead them to the upper rooms, in the manner deſcribed by this author. The mouths of both Hypocauſts, where they were ſupply'd with fewel, which were probably on the north-weſt and ſouth-eaſt ſides, are both deſtroy'd.

The editor, from repeated inſpection of theſe ruins, being enabled to give a more perfect account of them than he had ever ſeen, could not reſiſt the pleaſure which he promiſed himſelf of obliging the public with it; and therefore, ſince the original publication of his work in 1779, he has printed this additional ſheet, to be fixed in his books in the room of the leaf paged 345, 346, which contained the old account, and is now to be cancelled. [March 6, 1782.]

Fragments of Roman pottery, and ſmall cubical ſtones of different colours, which are undoubtedly the ruins of ſome teſſellated pavement, are continually found in theſe gardens; but the upper floors of the Hypocauſts do not appear to have been teſſellated. A portion of a large pillar, and the capital of a pillaſter of the Corinthian order, which were formerly dug up there, among other ornamental parts of buildings, and perhaps the very pieces mentioned by Dr. Stukeley, are now in good preſervation, in Mr. Buſh's garden in Cirenceſter: The ſhaft of the pillar, when intire, muſt have been ten or twelve feet long, independent of the capital and other members.

There was a fine figure of Apollo, in braſs, about the height of eighteen inches, found in the ſame gardens about forty years ſince, and is now in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, by the favour of Mr. Maſter, who preſented it to the univerſity. And a ſmall altar, about ſeven inches high, was thrown up among the rubbiſh a few years ſince, but there is no inſcription on it. This is now in Mr. Buſh's poſſeſſion, and was probably the portable altar of ſome poor man, uſed only in the offering of incenſe, or ſalt flour, ſuch as Camden mentions in his account of Lancaſhire, adding, that the Romans raiſed altars not only to their Gods, but out of a ſervile flattery, to their Emperors likewiſe, under the impious title of Numini Majeſtatique eorum. At theſe they fell on their knees and worſhiped, theſe they embraced and prayed to, before theſe they took their oaths,

[1] Veteres in ſubterraneo fornice non magno, cujus extrema pars extra domum muro terminabatur, unum ignem incendebant. Ab hoc canales plurimi, variæ magnitudinis, intimis fabricæ parietibus incluſi, ut hodie aquarum et ſentinarum fiſtulæ, ad ſummam contignationem permeabant. His ſingulis nares erant ad os fornicis domus parietibus adjunctum, per quas calor inter parietes aſcendens, ad oecos, triclinia, tablina manabat, et ad omnia loca quibus calorem procurare vellent. Quemadmodum vim ignis per canaliculos quoſdam alembicum penetrare videmus: ubi ignis quidem longiſſime diſtat ab ore vitri, quod tamen non minus calet, quam illa vaſis pars, quam ignis proxime calefacit. Calor ille adeo æquabiliter in omnes partes ſe diffudit, ut totum habitaculum impleret. Non ita camini, quibus ſi propius ſtes, æſtuas; ſi longius, friges. Illic vero aer mitiſſimus ſe circumfudit; ut cameram, cui caminus in adverſo muri latere collocatus eſt, accenſus ignis paulatim et leniter tepefacit. Canales illi qui calorem diſpenſabant, patulas fauces non habuerunt; quare nec flammam nec fumum, ſed calidum tantum vaporem, et perpetuum teporem emiſerunt. Ignis in fornice parvulus, modo continuus, locis adeo occluſis, vaporandis ſuffecit. Ad os fornicis edulia parabant. Quaquaverſum in muro vaſa et ollæ collocatæ ſunt, aquis ferventibus repletæ, quæ dapes calidas ſervarent.

Commodum ſine ſumptu maximum! nullo periculo, nullis ſordibus, non fumo turbatum; mille incommodis ſolutum, quæ reliqua focorum genera comitantur. Non illic fumariolis, ignitabulis, vel thermocliniis, tot malorum cauſis, opus fuit: non variis inſtrumentis ad frigus domandum, et fovenda calore corpora. Sed in ſingulis cameris per omne ſpatium æqualis tepor et mollissimus aer ſe diffudit. Canales plus minus calebant, ut ratio temporum poſtulabat. Peritiſſimi enim in calore moderando veteres fuerunt; uſi lenis auræ refrigeratione, qualem organorum folles ſpirant, quæ non minus ſuavis et placida eſt, quam illa acuta eſt, vehemens, et fæda, quam fabrorum folles ejectant.

Si divites et principes viri, qui ædes ſibi ædificant, exemplo adeo commodo uterentur, rem facerent digniſſimam, quam omnes amplecterentur, et quæ minore cum ſumptu innumeris ærumnis nos expediret. Palladio de Focis Veterum, in fine libri cui titulus Antiquitates Urbis Romæ. Ital. & Lat. Oxonii, 1709, 8vo.

Not underſtanding Italian, the editor, from neceſſity, quotes the Latin tranſlation of Palladio.

nd to be ſhort, in theſe and their ſacrifices the hole of their religion conſiſted; ſo that thoſe mong them who had no altar, were ſuppoſed to ave no religion, and to acknowledge no deity.

There is alſo a monumental ſtone, now placed in building in the garden belonging to Siddington ouſe, which was dug up, about fourteen or fifteen ears ſince, at Watermore common, juſt without he city wall. It has a pediment at top, with a reſcent in low relief, and the following in-ription:

D M
P VICANAE
P VITALIS

ying by the ſtone was an urn, with aſhes and ones half burnt. This ſtone may be referred to e ſame age with that taken notice of by Dr. tukeley.

There was alſo a glaſs urn, of a green colour, g up, about fifteen years ago, in Kingſmead, hich lies about half a mile from the town, on e ſide of the Irminſtreet. This urn, which ntained many aſhes and pieces of burnt bones, as placed in a ſtone, chiſſelled out in a hollow rm proper to receive it, and a flat ſtone covered e top. All theſe were depoſited in the midſt of piece of ground about twenty feet ſquare, in-oſed with a ſtone wall which lay below the rface of the ground. The relicks were further cured by a pavement ſpringing from the wall on ery ſide, and riſing in the middle over the urn, the form of a very obtuſe cone. This was un-ubtedly Roman, but unaccompanied with coins, leſs the workmen concealed them on the firſt ſcovery.

About the ſame time, a large ſtone coffin was g up on the ſide of the road leading to Tetbury, t a quarter of a mile from the town. A human eleton was found within it, with the ſcull tween the legs, and a ſword lying on the right e of it.

On the eaſt ſide of the town, lies Tor-barrow-hill, hich is undoubtedly a tumulus, as the name ſigni-s. This muſt certainly be the hill ſaid to ſtand Colton's-field, near Cirenceſter, and of which ere is a ſtrange account[u] in a paper printed by William Budden, 1685, and preſerved in the Bodleian Library, among Dr. Rawlinſon's papers.

Weſtward of the town alſo, a little within lord Bathurſt's park, is a large round mount of earth, thrown up to the height of about twenty feet, according to tradition, by Godrum the Dane, who is called Gurmundus in the Britiſh annals; whence, by vulgar corruption, the place hath obtained the name of Griſmund's-tower, and Chriſtmas-tower. There was probably a wooden watch-tower erected on it, according to the cuſtom of the Danes, the better to explore the country, and to guard againſt a ſudden ſurpriſe from the enemy. Upon opening the mount, about fifteen years ago, ſeveral large earthen veſſels, full of aſhes and burnt bones, were found in it, and the earth and ſtones very much burnt for a great ſpace in one part of it. But that a leaden veſſel, with ſome aſhes and bones of an uncommon ſize have been found on the mount, I have read no where but in Buſching's Geography. Indeed Leland ſpeaks of ſuch a veſſel, with aſhes and pieces of bones, having been found where the caſtle ſtood, which Buſching miſtook for this tower. Who were the proprietors of theſe bones, and what bodies theſe aſhes are a part of, are queſtions above the reach of antiquariſm; but it is probable that they belonged to ſome perſons of eminence among the Danes, who fell in battle againſt the Saxons and Britons in theſe parts.

What gave riſe to the practice of burning the dead is uncertain: ſome have conjectured that it was to avoid a viſible degeneration into worms, and to leave a laſting portion of their compoſition after death; whilſt others have thought it an expedient to eſcape the malice of enemies. But whatever was the occaſion, the practice is of great antiquity. Homer has given many beautiful deſcriptions of the funeral obſequies of Patroclus, Achilles, Hector, and other chiefs among the Greeks and Trojans. At firſt they burnt the bodies of thoſe only who were moſt eminent among them, but denied that honour to ſuch as had laid violent hands on themſelves, or had betrayed their country, becauſe they conceived them enemies to the gods. The funeral pile was compoſed of roſemary, larynx, yew, cypreſs, and fir, t Conjux (for Conjugis) is the true reading on the ſtone. But muſt have been a miſtake in the ſtone-cutter, who might be ignorant man, as many of them were, making frequent blun-by omitting letters, and ſometimes adding others; more ticularly when they were not immediately overſeen by the ſon whoſe office it was to direct them. There are many ances of omiſſions and redundancies in antient coins and criptions; thus we often find COS for CONS, or CONSVL; A IOVIS for DEA IOVIS, IDEA PALATINA for DEA LATINA, &c. &c. More of this may be ſeen in Mr. Hearne's ſſertation on the Stunsfield Teſſellated Pavement, at the beginning the 8th Vol. of Leland's Itinerary.

u The ſtory is to the following effect: Two men digging a wel-pit at the foot of this hill, having ſunk four yards deep, covered an entrance into the hill, where they found ſeveral oms with their furniture, which being touched, crumbled to . In one of them were ſeveral images and urns, ſome with es, others full of coins, with Latin inſcriptions on them. ering another, they were ſurprized at ſeeing the figure of a man in armour, having a truncheon in its hand, and a light, in a glaſs like a lamp, burning before it. At their firſt approach, the image made an effort to ſtrike, ſo at the ſecond ſtep, but with greater force; but at the third it ſtruck a violent blow, which broke the glaſs to pieces, and extinguiſhed the light. Having a lanthorn, they had juſt time to obſerve, that on the left hand [I ſuppoſe of the figure] lay two heads embalmed, with long beards, and the ſkin looking like parchment, when hearing a hollow noiſe like a groan, they haſtily quitted thoſe dark appartments, and immediately the earth fell in, and buried all the curioſities.——— Camden was informed by credible perſons, that at the ſuppreſſion of monaſteries, there was found a lamp burning in the vault of that little chapel wherein Conſtantius Chlorus was thought to be buried. Lazius, ſays that antiquarian, tells us, that the antients had an art of diſſolving gold into a fat liquor, and of preparing it ſo that it would continue burning in the ſepulchres for many ages. Camden, v. 2, col. 880, in his account of York city.
